A sees Z commit what appears to A to be a murder. A, in the exercise, to the best of his judgment exerted in good faith, of the power which the law gives to all persons of apprehending murderers in the fact seizes Z in order to bring Z before the proper authorities. A has committed no offence, though it may turn out that Z was acting in self-defence.

Acting mistakenly without jurisdiction. —The 21st Geo. III., c. 70, s. 24, protecting Provincial Magistrates in India from actions for any wrong or injury done by them in the exercise of their judicial offices does not confer unlimited protection, but places them on the same footing as those of English Courts of a similar jurisdiction, and only gives them an exemption from liability when acting bonâ fide in cases in which they have mistakenly acted without jurisdiction. Trespass will not lie against a Judge for acting judicially, but without jurisdiction, unless he knew, or had the means of knowing, of the defect of jurisdiction, and it lies upon the plaintiff, in every such case, to prove that fact.—CALDER v. HALKET 2 Moore's I. A. 293 [Lord Brougham, Mr. Baron Parke, Mr. Justice Bosanquet, and the Right Hon. Dr. Lushington. Dec. 5, 1839, and July 4 and 8, 1840.]

Wounding of thief by chaukidar.—The wounding of a thief by a chaukidar in order to his arrest was held under the circumstances to be justifiable.—QUEEN v. PROTAB CHAUKIDAR, 2 W. R. 9; 4 R. J. P. 165. [Campbell and Glover, JJ. Jan 16, 1865]

A police-officer who did not act in good faith not protected.—The general exception provided by s. 79 of the Penal Code, and the power conferred by cl. 5, s. 100 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, was held not to protect a police-officer who did not act in good faith, i.e., with due care and attention. Cl. 5, s 100 of the Criminal Procedure Code, refers to property which is proved to have been stolen, and not to anything which a police-officer may choose to imagine has been stolen. Where a police-officer refused to let a person go home until he had given bail, he was held to have been guilty of wrongful restraint under s. 339 of the Penal Code.—SHEO SARUN SAHAI v. MAHOMED FAZIL KHAN, 10 W. R 20 [Loch and Glover, JJ. July 17, 1868.]

A sub-inspector not exercising any care or attention at all.—The following facts were held to show that a police-officer did not act in good faith, that is, with due care and attention: "He sees a horse tied up, without any attempt at concealment, in Bookoo's premises; and because the animal happens to resemble one which his father had lost a short time previously, he jumps at once to the conclusion that Bookoo has either stolen the horse himself, or has purchased it from the thief; and he compels Bookoo to account for his possession accordingly. He finds that Bookoo bought the animal from one Sheo Sarun Sahai; so he sends for that individual, charges him with the theft, and compels him to give bail for his appearance whilst an investigation is pending. The sub-inspector never sent for the supposed owner of the horse, nor took the trouble of getting any credible information as to whether it was his father's horse or not. Had he done so, he would have found that that horse had already been found in another place; but, without waiting for such information, and without making any further inquiry, he at once held Sheo Sarun to bail as a person suspected of having come by the animal dishonestly Cl. 4, s. 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, refers to property which is proved to have been stolen, and not to anything which a police-officer may choose to imagine has been stolen." Upon the above facts the High Court held that the sub-inspector had not only not acted with due care and attention, but had not exercised any care or attention at all.—SHEO SARUN SAHAI v. MAHOMED FAZIL KHAN, 10 W. R. 20. [Loch and Glover, JJ. July 17, 1868.]

A Magistrate sued for damages for ordering removal of a house: Good faith: Suit dismissed—The first defendant, acting as Magistrate, ordered the removal of the plaintiff's house under s. 308 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861) upon the ground that it was a nuisance and obstruction to the public thoroughfare Held that the house was neither an obstruction nor a nuisance, and that the first defendant had no jurisdiction to direct its removal; but the first defendant having acted in his judicial capacity, and in good faith believed himself at the time to have jurisdiction, a suit for damages could not be maintained against him. — SESHAIYANGAR v. R. RAGUNATHA ROW, 5 Mad H. C. Rep. 345. [Scotland, C.J., and Holloway, J. June 20, 1870.]

A Magistrate sued for damages for directing demolition of a house: Good faith: Suit dismissed.—Suit to recover damages from defendant, Deputy Magistrate of the zillah of Trichinopoly, for a trespass alleged to have been committed in execution of an order made by him under s 311 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV of 1861), directing the demolition of the plaintiff's house as being a nuisance to a public thoroughfare. Defendant denied his liability, alleging in justification of his order that he believed the house to be obstructive to public comfort, and proceeded in accordance with ss. 308, 310, and 311 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that, having acted in good faith in discharge of his duties as a Magistrate, he was protected by Act XVIII. of 1850. The issues settled were (1) whether the house was an obstruction and nuisance within s. 308 of the Criminal Procedure Code; (2) whether the defendant acted in good faith in the discharge of his public duty in ordering the removal of the house; (3) whether the plaintiff was entitled to the amount of damages claimed. The Civil Judge held, upon the first issue, that the defendant had no jurisdiction to order the removal of the house; upon the second issue, that defendant had not acted with due care and attention, but from feelings of personal animosity towards plaintiff, and was, therefore, not protected by Act XVIII. of 1850. Upon the third issue, he assessed the damages at Rs. 500. The defendant appealed, relying mainly upon the objection that no action lay against him, inasmuch as, first, it had not been shown that he acted without jurisdiction in making the order complained of; and, secondly, that, even if he had acted without jurisdiction, he acted believing at the time in good faith that he had jurisdiction, and was, therefore, entitled to the protection given by Act XVIII. of 1850. Held, upon the first point, that an entire absence of jurisdiction upon the first point had been shown. Upon the second point, that the facts of the case furnished no reasonable or probable ground for belief in the existence of jurisdiction by a Magistrate of ordinary qualifications; that the defendant must, therefore, be held not to have entertained that belief in good faith, unless the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, under which he acted, admit of the view that he might, not unreasonably, think that it was probably intended to apply to such an annoyance as that complained of; that, however, those provisions were open to such a misunderstanding and misapplication by a Magistrate of ordinary qualifications, and consequently that the suit should be dismissed.—RAGUNADA RAU v. NATHAMUNI THATHAMYYANGAR, 6 Mad. H. C. Rep. 423. [Scotland, C J., and Holloway, J April 17, May 8, 22, and Nov. 27, 1871 ]

What a plaint against a Judge for issuing an illegal order should aver.—A plaint against a Judge, averring that the Judge knowingly and maliciously issued an illegal order to the plaintiff's injury, does not disclose a sufficient cause of action against the Judge. It must not only aver that the Judge had no jurisdiction, but also that he had no reasonable and probable cause for supposing that he had jurisdiction.—PRALHAD v. A. C. WATT, 10 Bom. H. C. Rep. 346. [West, J. Aug. 28, 1873 ]

Removal by Magistrate of obstruction is not a judicial act: Suit will lie.—The removal by a Magistrate of an obstruction in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him by Sch. K, cl. 1 of Ben. Act VI of 1868, is not a judicial act; and the Magistrate is, therefore, not protected by Act XVIII. of 1850 from a suit in the Civil Court to try the question of the right of the person against whom the order was made to create the obstruction and for damages.—CHUNDER NARAIN SINGH v. BROJO BULLUB GOOIE, 14 B. L. R. 254; 21 W. R. 391. [Couch, C J, and Jackson and Ainslie, JJ. Mar. 24, 1874.]

Raiyats resisting distraint of crops not protected by s. 79.—Raiyats are not protected by this section for resistance to distraint of crops where the zemindar's people enter upon the crops with the intention of distraining after notice under s. 116, Act X. of 1859.—REG. v. KANHAI SHAHU, 23 W. R. 40. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. Feb. 27, 1875.]

When zamindar can exercise right of private distraint of crops.—A zamindar is justified in exercising his right of private distraint of crops, if he has served the defaulters with written notices under Act X. of 1859, s. 116; and, in such a case, raiyats who knowingly resist the distraint are not protected by the Penal Code, s. 79. But if the zemindar's people enter upon crops with the intention of distraining without notice, the raiyat owners are justified in considering such action as trespass. Quære.—Would the raiyat in the latter case be protected by the provisions of the Penal Code ss. 97 and 99, in preventing the distraint, and confining the men employed to make it.—QUEEN v. KANHAI SHAHU, 23 W. R. 40 [Glover and Mitter, JJ Feb. 27, 1875.]

A commanding officer who having had an insane person arrested held not to be protected.—Act XVIII. of 1850 is for the protection of judicial officers acting judicially and of officers acting under their orders. An officer commanding in cantonments, acting bonâ fide in the discharge of his public duty, and under the belief that a person was dangerous by reason of insanity, caused him to be arrested in order that he might be examined by medical officers, and caused him to be detained in his house for that purpose, he not being a dangerous lunatic. The medical officers, while, reporting him sane, recommended that he should be placed under the observation of the civil surgeon of the station, for which purpose the same officer caused his further detention. The commanding officer, who, under Act XXII. of 1864, s 11, had control and direction of the police in the cantonment, did not proceed, or intend to proceed, under s. 4 of Act XXXVI. of 1858. Held that, although his belief might have justified the commanding officer if he had proceeded under the provisions last mentioned, yet he, not having done so, and not having any legal authority for what he had done, was not protected from liability in respect of the above acts.—SINCLAIR v. BROUGHTON, I. L. R., 9 Cal. 341. [Sir Barnes Peacock, Sir M E. Smith, Sir R. P. Collier, and Sir J. Mellor, JJ. June 23, 1882.]

Calling out "amen" aloud.—A masjid was used by the members of a sect of Mahomedans called the Hanifis, according to whose tenets the word "amen" should be spoken in a low tone of voice. While the Hanifis were at prayers, R, a Mahomedan of another sect, entered the masjid, and, in the course of the prayers, according to the tenets of his sect, called out "amen" in a loud tone of voice. For this act he was convicted of voluntarily disturbing an assembly engaged in religious worship, an offence punishable under s. 296 of the Penal Code. The Full Bench (Mahmood, J., dissenting) ordered the case to be re-tried, and that, in re-trying it, the Magistrate should have regard to the following questions, namely: (1) Was there an assembly, lawfully engaged in the performance of religious worship? (2) Was such assembly, in fact, disturbed by the accused? (3) Was such disturbance caused by acts and conduct on the part of the accused by which he intended to cause such disturbance, or which acts and conduct, and at the time of such acts and conduct, he knew or believed to be likely to cause such disturbance? Held by Mahmood, J., that the discussion occasioned by the act of the accused having, presumably, taken place during the interval when the prayers were not going on, the assembly was not at that time 'engaged in the performance of religious worship," and was not "disturbed" within the meaning of s. 296 of the Penal Code; that, in reference to the terms of s 39 of the Code, the accused did not disturb the assembly "voluntarily;" that he was justified by the Mahomedan ecclesiastical law in entering the mosque, and joining the congregation in saying the word "amen" loudly if he thought fit, and his conduct fell within the purview of s. 79 of the Penal Code, and was, therefore, not an offence under s. 296 Beatly v. Gillbanks (L R, 9 Q. B. D. 308) referred to. Also per Mahmood, J., that, having regard to the guarantee given by the Legislature in s. 24 of Act VI. of 1871 (Bengal Civil Courts Act), that the Mahomedan law shall be administered in all questions regarding "any religious usage or institution," the Court was bound by s 57 of Act I. of 1872 (Evidence Act) to take judicial notice of the Mahomedan Ecclesiastical Law, and the rules of that law need not be proved by specific evidence.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMZAN, I. L. R., 7 All. 461. [Petheram, C.J., and Straight, Oldfield, Brodhurst, and Mahmood, JJ. Mar. 7, 1885.]

A policeman honestly suspecting a person who was carrying stolen cloth put him some questions, and then arrested him, the answers being unsatisfactory: The policeman was prosecuted, and convicted of wrongful confinement: The conviction was quashed, it being held that the police-officer had acted bona fide.—On the 29th December 1887, the accused, a police-constable, was on duty at a temporary post near the Arthur Crawford Market. His turn of duty lasted from 4 to 7 A.M. Between 6-30 and 7 A.M., he saw the complainant carrying under his arm three pieces of cloth. Suspecting that the cloth was stolen property, he went up to the complainant, and questioned him. In answer to one of the questions the complainant stated that the cloth was made in England. The accused, noticing that each piece bore Gujarathi marks, and not knowing that such marks are placed on English-made goods, concluded that this statement was false, and that the cloth had been stolen. He took hold of one of the pieces of cloth in order to examine it more closely. The complainant objected to this, and there was a scuffle between them for the possession of the cloth. The accused then arrested the complainant, and took him to a European Inspector, to whom he stated the facts, alleging that he had arrested the complainant because he had assaulted him. The Inspector, seeing that the complainant was an old man, and on the accused saying he was not hurt, let the complainant go. The complainant then lodged a complaint before the Acting Chief Presidency Magistrate, charging the accused with wrongful restraint and wrongful confinement, offences punishable under ss. 341 and 342, respectively, of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860) The defence was that the complainant had assaulted the accused, and had been, on that account, arrested and kept in confinement until released by the Inspector of Police. The Magistrate found that there was no justification for the suspicion which the accused professed to entertain; that there were no reasonable grounds for questioning the complainant about the cloth in his possession; and that the scuffle was caused solely by the action of the accused in treating the complainant, without any valid reason, as a suspected thief. The Magistrate convicted the accused of wrongful confinement under s. 342 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860), and sentenced him to four months' rigorous imprisonment. Held, by the High Court, that the conviction was wrong. The accused having, under the circumstances of the case, an honest suspicion that the cloth in the possession of the complainant was stolen property, was justified in putting questions to the complainant, the answers to which might clear away his suspicions, and having received answers which were not, in his opinion, satisfactory, he acted under a bonâ-fide belief that he was legally justified in detaining what he suspected to be stolen property. The putting of questions to the complainant, not for the purpose of causing annoyance or from idle curiosity, but in order to clear up his suspicions, was an indication of good faith, as defined in s. 52 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860). He was, therefore, protected by s. 79 of the Code. Even though the act of the accused in detaining the cloth might not have been strictly justifiable by law—that is, even though there might not have been a complete basis of fact to justify a reasonable suspicion that the cloth was stolen property—still the complainant had no right of private defence under s. 99 of the Code, as the accused was a public servant acting in good faith under colour of his office, and his act was not one which caused the apprehension of death or of grievous hurt. The complainant was not justified in refusing to allow the accused to inspect the cloth, in snatching it from his hands, and in scuffling with him. He was, therefore, legally arrested under s. 54, cl. 5, of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), for obstructing a police-officer while acting in the execution of his duty. Held, also, that the High Court will exercise its powers under ss. 435 and 439 in the interests of justice in exceptional cases, as where the enquiry in the lower Court has been faulty.—BHAWOO JIVAJI v. MULJI DAYAL, I. L. R., 12 Bom. 377. [Birdwood and Parsons, JJ. Mar. 22, 1888.]

Mistake of fact: Act done in good faith under belief it is justified by law by stopping and examining a palki.—A Court-peon, accompanied by two of the decree-holder's men (petitioners), went to execute a warrant of arrest against the judgment-debtor M. A palki with closed doors was noticed to be coming out of the male apartment of M's house. The petitioners, believing that M was effecting his escape in that palki, stopped it, and examined it, although the persons accompanying the palki protested, and said there was a lady in it. Admittedly, there was in the palki a parda-nashin lady of rank. Held that, having regard to the terms of s. 79 of the Penal Code, a conviction of the petitioners under s. 341 was

In charges exceptions need not be repeated.—This chapter has been framed in order to obviate the necessity of repeating in every penal clause a considerable number of limitations. Some limitations relate only to a single provision, or to a very small class of provisions. Thus, the exception in favour of true imputations on character (cl. 470) is an exception which belongs wholly to the law of defamation, and does not affect any other part of the Code. The exception in favour of the conjugal rights of the husband (cl 359) is an exception which belongs wholly to the law of rape, and does not affect any other part of the Code. Every such exception evidently ought to be appended to the rule which it is intended to modify But there are other exceptions which are common to all the penal clauses of the Code, or to a great variety of clauses dispersed over many chapters. Such are the exceptions in favour of infants, lunatics, idiots, persons under the influence of delirium; the exceptions in favour of acts done by the direction of the law, of acts done in the exercise of the right of self defence, of acts done by the consent of the party harmed by them It would obviously be inconvenient to repeat these exceptions several times in every page. We have, therefore, placed them in a separate chapter; and we have provided that every definition of an offence, every penal provision, and every illustration of a definition or penal provision, shall be construed subject to the provisions contained in that chapter.—P. C. NOTE B. 15.

Protection of officers. — No prosecution against any Magistrate, military officer, police-officer, soldier, or volunteer, for any act purporting to be done under this chapter (IX., Unlawful Assemblies), shall be instituted in any Criminal Court, except with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council; and (a) no Magistrate or police-officer acting under this chapter in good faith; (b) no officer acting under s. 131 in good faith; (c) no person doing any act in good faith in compliance with a requisition under s 128 or s. 130, and (d) no inferior officer, or soldier, or volunteer, doing any act in obedience to any order which under military law he was bound to obey, shall be deemed to have thereby committed an offence.—CRIM. PRO. CODE (ACT V. OF 1898), s. 132.

Every man must be presumed to know the law.—Mistake or ignorance of law is no ground of defence, the general rule being that every person who has capacity to understand the law is presumed to have a knowledge of it. And so far is this principle carried, that it has been held that a foreigner could not be allowed to show as a justification of his act (though he might in mitigation of punishment) that it was no offence in his own country, and that he was not aware it was considered wrong where he was tried. And, however hardly it may bear in some few cases, it is evident that the rule is a necessary one. If a criminal could get off by pleading ignorance of law, convictions would probably be rare; nor could society exist for a year, if even a sincere belief in the propriety of his conduct could justify any one who chose to murder or steal.—ARCH. 19.

80. Nothing is an offence which is done by accident or misfortune, and without any criminal intention or knowledge, in the doing of a lawful act in a lawful manner by lawful means, and with proper care and caution.

Accident in doing a lawful act.

Illustration.

A is at a work with a hatchet: the head flies off, and kills a man who is standing by. Here, if there was no want of proper caution on the part of A, his act is excusable, and not an offence.

Accident caused by runaway horses.—Where a horse ran away with its rider, killing a passer-by, it was held that this was a pure accident, and the rider was not held liable, as he had lost all control over the animal (Holmes v. Mather, L. R., 10 Ex. 261); but where two omnibuses were racing, and one ran over a passer-by, it was held that this was not an accident, and that the driver was liable, because he had so urged his horses that he could not stop them afterwards, he having lost the command of them by his own act.—1 RUSS. 828.

Nature of caution the law requires.—The caution which the law requires is not the utmost caution that can be used, but such reasonable precaution as is used in similar cases, and has been found by long experience, and in the ordinary course of things, to answer the end.—ALISON'S CRIM. L. 143.

Wife accidentally killed with a gun not known to be loaded.—A man, having discharged his gun, went out to dine. On his return he took up the gun, and touched the trigger. The gun went off killing his wife. He was not aware that in his absence the gun had been loaded by some one. He was acquitted.—ALISON'S CRIM. L. 265.

A girl accidentally killed by a shot which penetrated her eye.—A man, having loaded a fowling-piece with small shot, fired it in a field within an easy shot of a high road, which was used by passers-by. One of the shots killed a girl who was passing by. The evidence showed that the shot was really a long one being above fifty yards, and that it proved fatal owing to one of the shots penetrating the child's eye, while the other shot hardly penetrated the skin. Under the above circumstances it was held that the death was accidental.—ALISON'S CRIM. L. 144.

81. Nothing is an offence merely by reason of its being done with the knowledge that it is likely to cause harm, if it be done without any criminal intention to cause harm, and in good faith for the purpose of preventing or avoiding other harm to person or property.

Act likely to cause harm, but done without criminal intent, and to prevent other harm.

Explanation.—It is a question of fact in such a case whether the harm to be prevented or avoided was of such a nature and so imminent as to justify or excuse the risk of doing the act with the knowledge that it was likely to cause harm.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, the captain of a steam-vessel, suddenly and without any fault or negligence on his part, finds himself in such a position that, before he can stop his vessel, he must inevitably run down a boat, B, with 20 or 30 passengers on board, unless he changes the course of his vessel; and that, by changing his course, he must incur risk of running down a boat, C, with only two passengers on board, which he may possibly clear. Here, if A alters his course without any intention to run down the boat C, and in good faith for the purpose of avoiding the danger to the passengers in the boat B, he is not guilty of an offence, though he may run down the boat C by doing an act which he knew was likely to cause that effect, if it be found as a matter of fact that the danger which he intended to avoid was such as to excuse him in incurring the risk of running down C.

(b.) A, in a great fire, pulls down houses in order to prevent the conflagration from spreading. He does this with the intention, in good faith, of saving human life or property. Here, if it be found that the harm to be prevented was of such a nature and so imminent as to excuse A's act, A is not guilty of the offence.

Placing the juice of the milk-bush in toddy-pots to detect an unknown thief.—Held that a person who placed in his toddy-pots juice of the milk-bush, knowing that, if taken by a human being, it would cause injury, and with the intention of thereby detecting an unknown thief who was in the habit of stealing the toddy from such pots, and which toddy was drunk by, and caused injury to, certain soldiers who purchased it from an unknown vendor, was rightly convicted, under s. 328 of the Penal Code, of 'causing to be taken an unwholesome thing with intent to injure," and that s. 81, which says that, "if an act be done without any criminal intention to cause harm, it is not an offence," did not apply to the case.—REG. v. DHANA DAJI, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 59. [Newton and Tucker, JJ. July 23, 1868.]

A sepoy turning out to extinguish a fire, and kicking a chief constable not in uniform at a fracas between the sepoys and the police.—The accused was a sepoy in a Native Infantry regiment. On the occasion of a fire in the city of Ahmednagar, he and the rest of his company turned out to assist in extinguishing it. He, with other sepoys, was stationed by their officer, with orders to keep clear a space in front of the burning house, and not to allow any one not in uniform to intrude on that space. The police under the city chief constable were also engaged at the fire; and, on some of them coming round from the rear, they were warned off by the sentries. A fracas between the soldiers and the police took place, and the chief constable was kicked by the accused For this he was charged before the Magistrate, and fined for voluntarily causing hurt under s. 323 of the Penal Code. In evidence it appeared that the police attempted to force the military guard which had been posted as above stated, and it was further proved that the chief constable was not in uniform, and that the accused did not know who he was. It was not alleged that the kick was unnecessarily violent. Held that the conviction was bad. The Magistrate having found that the chief constable was not in uniform, and that the accused did not know who he was, the kick was justifiable as given in good faith for the purpose of preventing much greater harm under s. 81 of the Penal Code, and as a means of acting up to the military order.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BOSTAN, I. L. R., 17 Bom. 626. [Jardine and Telang, JJ. Aug. 18, 1892.]

Theft committed from hunger to prevent starvation.—The following are the remarks of the Indian Law Commissioners in connection with the above section: "Nothing is more usual than for thieves to urge distress and hunger as excuses for their thefts. It is certain, indeed, that many thefts are committed from the pressure of distress so severe as to be more terrible than the punishment of theft, and than the disgrace which that punishment brings with it to the mass of mankind. It is equally certain that when the distress from which a man can relieve himself by theft is more terrible than the evil consequences of theft, those consequences will not deter him from committing theft. Yet it by no means follows that it is irrational to punish him for theft; for though the fear of punishment is not likely to keep any man from theft when he is actually starving, yet it is very likely to keep him from being in a starving state. It is of no effect to counteract the irresistible motive which immediately prompts to theft, but it is of great effect to counteract the motives to that idleness and that profusion which end in bringing a man to that condition in which no law will keep him from committing theft."

Act of a child under seven years of age.

82. Nothing is an offence* which is done by a child under seven years of age.

Act of a child, above 7 and under 12, of immature understanding.

83. Nothing is an offence which is done by a child above seven years of age and under twelve, who has not attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of his conduct on that occasion.

Capacity to do wrong to be measured by strength of understanding, not by years.—In construing s. 83 of the Penal Code, the capacity of doing that which is wrong is not so much to be measured by years as by the strength of the offender's understanding and judgment. The circumstances of a case may disclose such a degree of malice as to justify the application of the maxim malitia supplet ætatem.—QUEEN v. MUSSAMUT AIMONA, 1 W. R. 43. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 14, 1865.]

Incapacity to commit offence arises where a child has not attained sufficient maturity of understanding.—An objection that the accused is of such an age as not to have attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge of the nature and consequences of his conduct is not one of a preliminary character, but rather a matter of defence, to be considered with the other issues arising in the case. Where the accused was over seven years of age, and under twelve, the incapacity to commit an offence only arises where the child has not attained sufficient maturity, &c.; such non-attainment would have apparently to be specially pleaded and proved. The "consequences of his conduct" mentioned in s 83, Penal Code, are not the penal consequences to the offender, but the natural consequences which flow from a voluntary act.—QUEEN v. LUKHINI AGRADANINI, 22 W. R. 27. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. June 11, 1874.]

Discharge of child-thief for want of understanding.—The fact that a child has been tried for theft and discharged under s. 215 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872, on the ground of want of understanding within the meaning of s. 82 of the Penal Code, is no bar to the conviction of a person charged under s. 411 of the Penal Code with receiving the property alleged to have been stolen.—QUEEN v. KRISHNA, I. L. R., 6 Mad. 373. [Kernan and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. April 24, 1883.]

When maturity of understanding is to be presumed.—Upon the above section the Indian Law Commissioners remark as follows: "It would seem from this that maturity of understanding is to be presumed in the case of such a child unless the negative be proved on the defence." But, according to the English law, during this second period, "an infant shall be primâ facie deemed to be doli incapax, and presumed to be unacquainted with guilt; yet this presumption will diminish with the advance of the offender's years, and will depend upon the particular facts and circumstances of his case. The evidence of malice, however, which is to supply age, should be strong and clear beyond all doubt and contradiction."—1 RUSS. 109.

Confinement in reformatory. — When any person under the age of 15 years is sentenced by any Criminal Court to imprisonment for any offence, the Court may direct that such person, instead of being imprisoned in a criminal jail, shall be confined in any reformatory established by the Local Government as a fit place for confinement, in which there are means of suitable discipline and of training in some branch of useful industry, or which is kept by a person willing to obey such rules as the Local Government prescribes with regard to the discipline and training of persons confined therein.—CRIM. PRO. CODE (ACT V. OF 1898), s. 399.

Presumption that a child has not guilty knowledge.—If a child more than seven and under 14 (under the Penal Code, under 12) is indicted for a felony, it will be left to the jury to say whether the offence was committed by him, and, if so, whether at the time of the commission of the offence the prisoner had a guilty knowledge that he or she was doing wrong; and the presumption of law is that a child of that age has not such guilty knowledge, unless the contrary is proved—Per Littledale, J., in Rex v. Owen, 4 C. V. P. 236. And this maturity of understanding must be affirmatively proved by the prosecution (Reg. v. Vamplew, 3 F. & F. 520), and must, in most cases, be inferred from surrounding circumstances.

84. Nothing is an offence which is done by a person who, at the time of doing it, by reason of unsoundness of mind, is incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law.

Act of a person of unsound mind.

An apparently insane person charged with murder.—A prisoner was charged with he murder of his wife and his mother. His child was also wounded, but recovered under medical treatment. There was an absence of all motive for the crime, and there was independent evidence of the prisoner's previous insanity—evidence which is not without weight. Although the medical officer reports and deposes that, during the month, the prisoner has been under his observation, he has shown no symptoms of insanity, yet the medical officer hesitates to say that the prisoner may not have been insane at some former period. The neighbours deposed to his insanity, and gave instances of conduct on his part which were quite inconsistent with the theory that the prisoner was sane. His wife and his mother, in their dying declarations, stated that he was a good husband and son; that he never quarrelled with his wife; that he was quiet, but subject to fits of temporary insanity. With their dying breath they emphatically denied that he committed a voluntary and premeditated murder. "With all the evidence before us," say the High Court, "we cannot but acquit the prisoner, leaving the Judge to take such steps for his safe custody as the law sanctions.—QUEEN v. SHEIKH MUSTAFFA, 1 W. R. 19. [Loch and Seton-Karr, JJ. Aug. 1, 1864.]

What a Judge should do when an accused person is found to be insane before the completion of the trial.—When an accused person is found to be insane before the completion of his trial, the Judge should postpone the trial under s. 389, and report the case to the Lieutenant-Governor under s. 390 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, instead of trying the accused when he is incapable of making his defence, and acquitting him under s. 394, on the ground that he committed the offence charged when he was incapable of knowing that he was doing wrong, and consequently that he has committed no offence under s 84 of the Penal Code—QUEEN v. NOORKHAN CHOWDRY, 1 W. R. 11. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Sep. 9, 1864.]

Course to be adopted where the sanity of a prisoner, who was sentenced to death, was, before confirmation of sentence, doubted.—The prisoner was convicted of murder, and sentenced to death. But, before confirming the sentence, as doubts were entertained of her sanity, the case was referred to the Sessions Judge with instructions for further enquiry.—QUEEN v. ARZAO BEBEE, 2 W. R. 33. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Feb. 4, 1865.]

A prisoner, who was convicted by the Sessions Judge, was acquitted by the High Court on the ground of insanity.—Case in which the prisoner, notwithstanding that he had been convicted by the Sessions Judge, was acquitted by the High Court on the ground of insanity under s. 393 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and directed to be kept in safe custody, pending the orders of the Local Government to be applied for by the Judge.—QUEEN v. PURSORAM DOSS, 7 W. R. 42. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 11, 1867.]

Father sacrificing his son.—Curious case of murder where a father sacrificed his son, because wealth had not accompanied its birth, and afterwards cut his own throat as a protest against his deity's injustice.—QUEEN v. BISHENDHAREE, 7 W. R. (100) 64. [Glover and Hobhouse, JJ. May 7, 1867.]

Unsoundness of mind must be clearly proved to justify a verdict under s. 84.—The fact of unsoundness of mind is one which must be clearly and distinctly proved before any jury is justified in returning a verdict under s. 84 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. NOBIN CHUNDER BANERJEE, 20 W. R. 70; 13 B. L. R. App. 20. [Macpherson and Morris, JJ. Oct. 21, 1873.]

Test of soundness of mind at the time of the commission of the act.—The test to determine whether a person who has committed an act, which is charged against him as an offence, was of sound mind at the time of its commission, is whether he knew that he was doing wrong.—QUEEN v. JUGO MOHUN MALO, 24 W. R. 5. [Glover and Mitter JJ. June 2, 1875.]

Father killing his two younger children: Legal test of responsibility in cases of alleged unsoundness of mind.—S. 84 of the Penal Code lays down the legal test of responsibility in cases of alleged unsoundness of mind. It is by this test, as distinguished from the medical test, that the criminality of an act is to be determined. The accused killed his two young children with a hatchet. The reason given for the crime was that, while he was laid up with fever the crying of the children annoyed him. It was alleged that the fever had made him irritable and sensitive to sound, but it did not appear that he was delirious at the time of perpetrating the crime. There was no attempt at concealment, and the accused made a full confession. Held that, as the accused was conscious of the nature of his act, he must be presumed to have been conscious of its criminality. He was, therefore, guilty of murder.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. LAKSHMAN DAGDU, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 512. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Mar. 4, 1886.]

Accused stabbing and killing his brother's child: Plea, insanity: Conviction for murder upheld.—The accused stabbed a child (his brother's wife) with a sword, and killed her. He was charged with murder, and a plea of insanity was set up at the trial. No motive could be assigned for his attack on the child, in which he persisted in the presence of other persons: and it appeared that he had been in the habit of treating the child kindly and affectionately. He was suffering from fever and want of food at the time, and the medical evidence showed it was possible that the act was committed under a sudden attack of homicidal mania. It was in evidence that he had abused some of his relations a short time before, the abuse being probably due to irritability of mind caused by fever. He confessed the crime to the Village Magistrate, and answered questions put to him rationally; but before the committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge he denied that he had killed the child. He was convicted of murder. Held that as the accused was not proved to have been, by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of his act, or that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law, the conviction was right. Queen-Empress v. Lakshman Dagdu (I. L. R., 10 Bom. 512) approved.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VENKATASAMI, I. L. R., 12 Mad. 459. Collins C.J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J. April 15, 1889.]

A ganja-smoker charged with the murder of his wife and infant son: Plea, insanity: Conviction for murder. Sentence, death.—The accused, who was a habitual ganja smoker, was charged with the murder of his wife and infant son. In his confession he stated that he had killed his wife, because she quarrelled with him, and objected to go to another village, where he proposed a change of house on account of their poverty. He adhered to this statement when placed for trial before the Court of Session. The Sessions Judge treated this statement as a plea of guilty on the charge of murder, convicted the accused, and sentenced him to death, subject to confirmation by the High Court. Held (per Jardine and Candy, JJ.) that the accused's statement did not amount to a plea of guilty on the charge of murdering his wife. He alleged a sudden provocation: he ought, therefore, to have been put on his trial, in order that the Court might ascertain whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder. Held (per Birdwood and Jardine, JJ.) that, unless the accused's habit of smoking ganja had induced in him such a diseased state of mind as to make him incapable of knowing the nature of his act or its criminality, s. 84 of the Indian Penal Code did not apply in his favour. Queen-Empress v. Lakshman Dagdu (I. L. R., 10 Bom. 512) distinguished.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SAKHARAM valad RAMJI, I. L. R., 14 Bom. 564. [Birdwood, Jardine, and Candy, JJ. Feb. 25, 1890.]

Where unsoundness of mind held insufficient to exonerate an accused person from responsibility for crime under s. 84.—The confession of an accused person made in Bengali, the language in which the accused was examined, was recorded in English. The committing Magistrate, in his evidence in Court, said that he could not write Bengali well, and that there was no mohurrir with him at the time when the confession was recorded. Held the provisions of s. 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code had been sufficiently complied with. Jai Narayan Rai v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 17 Cal. 862) distinguished. Where the unsoundness of mind deposed to was not such as would make the accused incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he was doing what was contrary to law, it was held to be insufficient to exonerate him from responsibility for crime under s. 84 of the Penal Code. — QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAZAI MIA, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 817. [Macpherson and Banerji, JJ. July 1, 1895.]

Unsoundness of mind: Legal test of criminal liability.—A person subject to insane impulses, but whose cognitive faculties appear to be unimpaired, is not, by virtue of s. 84 of the Penal Code, exempt from criminal liability. Semble.—In extreme cases it is difficult to say that the cognitive faculties are not affected when the will and the emotions are affected. It may, therefore, be said that, under the provisions of s. 84 of the Penal Code, exemption from criminal liability by reason of unsoundness of mind extends as well to cases where insanity affects the offender's will and emotions as to those where it affects his cognitive faculties. Queen-Empress v. Lakshman Dagdu (I. L. R, 10 Bom. 512), Queen-Empress v. Venkatasami (I. L. R, 12 Mad. 459), and Queen-Empress v. Razai Mia (I. L. R., 22 Cal. 817), followed.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KADER NASYER SHAH, I. L. R., 23 Cal. 604. [O'Kinealy and Banerjee, JJ. April 15, 1896.]

85. Nothing is an offence which is done by a person who, at the time of doing it, is, by reason of intoxication, incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law: provided that the thing which intoxicated him was administered to him without his knowledge, or against his will.

Act of a person incapable of judgment by reason of intoxication caused against his will.

Murder committed in a drunken quarrel.—In a case of murder committed in a drunken squabble, it was held that voluntary drunkenness, though it did not palliate any offence, may be taken into account as throwing light upon the question of intention.—QUEEN v. RAM SAHOY BHUR, W. R., Gap, 1864, 24. Steer and Glover, JJ. April 29, 1864.]

Voluntary intoxication, no plea for offence.—Voluntary intoxication is not a valid plea for an offence. — QUEEN v. BODHEE KHAN, 5 W. R. 79. [Kemp, J. May 17, 1866.]

Offence committed during voluntary intoxication.—Drunkenness does not, in the eye of the law, make an offence the more heinous though it is no excuse; and an act which, if committed by a sober man, is an offence, is equally an offence if committed by one when drunk, if the intoxication was voluntarily caused.—QUEEN v. ZOOLKAR KHAN, 16 W. R. 36; 8 B. L. R. App. 21. [Macpherson and Ainslie, JJ. July 31, 1871.]

86. In cases where an act done is not an offence unless done with a particular knowledge or intent, a person who does the act in a state of intoxication shall be liable to be dealt with as if he had the same knowledge as he would have had if he had not been intoxicated, unless the thing which intoxicated him was administered to him without his knowledge, or against his will.

Offence requiring a particular intent or knowledge committed by one who is intoxicated.

Drunkenness is not any excuse for crime.—The following notes on the above section, taken from Starling's "Indian Criminal Law and Procedure," will be found useful:—

"By the English law drunkenness is not any excuse for crime (Pearson's Case, 2 Lewin, C. C., 144). Still, by the practice of the Courts in England, it is constantly held that a person who is intoxicated may be incapable of having any intention, and thus the nature of an offence may be considerably reduced, though intoxication does not render him entirely dispunishable for the act he may have committed while under the influence of liquor. Thus, in a case of stabbing, where the prisoner used a deadly weapon, the fact that he was drunk does not at all alter the nature of the case; but if he had intemperately used an instrument not in its nature a deadly weapon at a time when he was drunk, the fact of his being drunk might induce the jury to less strongly infer a malicious intent in him at the time."—Per ANDERSON, B., in Rex v. Meakin, 7 C. and P. 297.

"Again, Parke, B., says that, if a man is drunk, this is no excuse for any crime he may commit; but where provocation by a blow has been given to a person who kills another with a weapon which he happens to have in his hand, the drunkenness of the prisoner may be considered on the question whether he was excited by passion or acted from malice, as also it may be on the question whether expressions used by the prisoner manifested a deliberate purpose, or were the idle expression of a drunken man."—Rex v. Thomas, 7 C. and P. 817.

"In a third case, Crowder, J. laid it down that, though drunkenness is no excuse for crime, it may be taken into account by the jury when considering the motive or intent of a person acting under its influence."—Reg. v. Gamlen, 1 F and F. 90

"Where, on a trial of an indictment for an attempt to commit suicide, it appeared that the prisoner was, at the time of the commission of the alleged offence, so drunk that she did not know what she was doing it was held that this negatived the intent to commit suicide."—Reg v. Moore, 3 C. and K. 319; 16 Jur. 750.

Murder in a drunken squabble.—In a case of murder committed in a drunken squabble, it was held that voluntary drunkenness, though it did not palliate any offence, might be taken into account as throwing light on the question of intention —QUEEN v. RAM SAHOY BHUR, W. R. Gap, 1864, 24 [Steer and Glover, JJ. April 29, 1864.]

Intoxication no excuse for murder.—Intoxication is no excuse for a man throttling to death another and a weaker man who was intoxicated also. The assessors having brought the case within exception 4 of s. 300 of the Penal Code without any good evidence or substantial grounds, the Sessions Judge was held to have correctly overruled their verdict, and found the prisoner guilty of murder.—QUEEN v. AKULPUTTEE GOSSAIN, 5 W. R. 58. [Seton-Karr, J. Mar. 26, 1866.]

Intoxication no excuse for murder.—Voluntary intoxication is not a valid plea for an offence.—QUEEN v. BODHEE KHAN, 5 W. R. 79 [Kemp, J. May 17, 1866.]

Murder where two parties, in a drunken state, abuse each other, and one of them strike the other with a heavy pestle.—Two parties met each other in a drunken state, and commenced a quarrel, during which they became grossly abusive to each other. This lasted for about half an hour, when one of them ran to his own house, distant 30 yards from the spot, and came back with a heavy pestle, with which he struck the other a violent blow on the left temple as the latter was rising, or had just risen, from the ground, causing instant death. Held that the act was done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, and also with the knowledge that such act was likely to cause death, and that the offence committed was murder within the provisions of clauses 2 and 3 section 300 of Indian Penal Code.—QUEEN v. DASSER BHOOYAN, 8 W. R. 71. [Kemp, Seton-Karr, and Mitter, JJ. Sep. 11, 1867.]

An offence is equally an offence if committed during drunkenness.—Drunkenness does not, in the eye of the law, make an offence the more heinous, though it is no excuse; and an act which, if committed by a sober man, is an offence, is equally an offence, if committed by one when drunk, if the intoxication was voluntarily caused.—QUEEN v. ZULFKAR KHAN, 16 W. R. 36; 8 B. L. R. App. 21. [Macpherson and Ainslie, JJ. July 31, 1871.]

Act not intended, and not known to be likely, to cause death or grievous hurt, done by consent.

87. Nothing which is not intended to cause death or grievous hurt, and which is not known by the doer to be likely to cause death or grievous hurt, is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause, or be intended by the doer to cause, to any person above eighteen years of age who has given consent, whether express or implied, to suffer that harm; or by reason of any harm which it may be known by the doer to be likely to cause to any such person who has consented to take the risk of that harm.

A and Z agree to fence with each other for amusement. This agreement implies the consent of each to suffer any harm which, in the course of such fencing, may be caused without foul play; and if A, while playing fairly hurts Z, A commits no offence.

88. Nothing, which is not intended to cause death, is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause, or be intended by the doer to cause, or be known by the doer to be likely to cause, to any person for whose benefit† it is done in good faith, and who has given a consent, whether express or implied, to suffer that harm or to take the risk of that harm.

A, a surgeon, knowing that a particular operation is likely to cause the death of Z, who suffers under a painful complaint, but not intending to cause Z's death, and intending, in good faith, Z's benefit, performs that operation on Z with Z's consent. A has committed no offence.

Emasculation: Culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—One count charging each specific offence, and describing it with a reasonable degree of certainty, is sufficient. Where a man of full age (i.e., above 18 years) submits himself to emasculation, performed neither by skilful hand, nor in the least dangerous way, and dies from the injury, the persons concerned in the act are guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. BABOOLUN HIJRAH, 5 W. R 7 [Norman and Campbell, JJ. Jan. 15, 1866.]

Murder by consent.—In a case of murder by consent, held that evidence of consent, which would be sufficient in a civil transaction, must be equally sufficient in exculpation of a prisoner's guilt.—QUEEN v. ANUNTA RUBNAGAT, 6 W. R. 57. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Aug. 25, 1866.]

Emasculation: Culpable homicide.—The benefit alluded to in this section must be some physical benefit, that is, the alleviation of some disease, or diseased or disorganized condition of some part or member of the body. Thus, if a man, desiring to enter the society of eunuchs, induces another to castrate him, the operator is liable for the consequences of the emasculation. And, in the case of Reg. v. Baboolun Hijrah (5 W R. 7), it was held that, where a man of full age (over 18 years) voluntarily submitted himself, for the cure of no disease, to emasculation, performed neither by a skilful hand nor in the least dangerous way, and died from the injury, the persons concerned in the act were guilty of culpable homicide, although not only did they not know that emasculation was unlawful, but believed that a man might cause himself to be emasculated if he pleased.

Kobiraj operating for piles: Conviction under s. 304A.—A kobiraj operated on a man for internal piles by cutting them out with an ordinary knife. The man died from hæmorrhage. The kobiraj was charged, under s. 304A of the Penal Code, with causing death by doing a rash and negligent act It was contended that inasmuch as the prisoner had performed similar operations on previous occasions, it was not a rash act within the meaning of that section, and that, at all events, he was entitled to the benefit of s. 88 of the Penal Code, as he did the act in good faith, without any intention to cause death, and for the benefit of the patient who had accepted the risk. Held that, as the prisoner was admittedly uneducated in matters of surgery, and having regard to the meaning of "good faith" as defined in s. 52 of the Penal Code, he was not entitled to the benefit of s. 88. Held further that s. 88 did not apply to the case, as it was not shown by the accused, on whom the burden of proving that fact lay, that the deceased knew the risk he was running in consenting to the operation, and he could not, therefore, be said to have accepted the risk. Held also that, under the circumstances, the conviction under s. 304A was a proper one.—SUKAROO KOBIRAJ v. THE EMPRESS, I. L. R., 14 Cal. 566. [Tottenham and Ghose, JJ. April 30, 1887.]

* For exception to ss. 87, 88, and 89, see s. 91, infra.

† Pecuniary benefit is not "benefit" within the meaning of this section.—See s. 92 (expl.), infra.

89. Nothing, which is done in good faith for the benefit † of a person under twelve years of age, or of unsound mind, by or by consent, either express or implied, of the guardian or other person having lawful charge of that person, is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause, or be intended by the doer to cause, or be known by the doer to be likely to cause, to that person :

Act done in good faith for benefit of child or insane person by or by consent of guardian.

Provisos. Provided—

First.—That this exception shall not extend to the intentional causing of death, or to the attempting to cause death;

Secondly.—That this exception shall not extend to the doing of any thing which the person doing it knows to be likely to cause death, for any purpose other than the preventing of death or grievous hurt, or the curing of any grievous disease or infirmity;

Thirdly.—That this exception shall not extend to the voluntary causing of grievous hurt, or to the attempting to cause grievous hurt, unless it be for the purpose of preventing death or grievous hurt, or the curing of any grievous disease or infirmity;

Fourthly.—That this exception shall not extend to the abetment of any offence, to the committing of which offence it would not extend.

A, in good faith, for his child's benefit, without his child's consent, has his child cut for the stone by a surgeon, knowing it to be likely that the operation will cause the child's death, but not intending to cause the child's death. A is within the exception, inasmuch as his object was the cure of the child.

90. A consent is not such a consent as is intended by any section of this Code, if the consent is given by a person under fear of injury, or under a misconception of fact, and if the person doing the act knows, or has reason to believe, that the consent was given in consequence of such fear or misconception; or Consent known to be given under fear or misconception.

if the consent is given by a person who, from unsoundness of mind or intoxication, is unable to understand the nature and consequence of that to which he gives his consent; or, unless the contrary appears from the context, if the consent is given by a person who is under twelve years of age.

Consent of child.

Rape—Sexual intercourse by a man with a woman without her free consent, i.e., a consent obtained without putting her in fear of injury, amounts to rape; and the Judge should leave the question to the jury, and not direct them to find that the woman's consent after a considerable struggle renders the charge of rape nugatory.—QUEEN v. AKBAR KAZEE, 1 W. R. 21. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Nov. 11, 1864.]

Snake-charmers inducing a person to be bitten by a poisonous snake.—The accused, who professed to be snake-charmers, persuaded the deceased to allow themselves to be bitten by a poisonous snake, inducing them to believe that they had power to protect them from harm. Held that the offence would have been murder under s. 300 of the Penal Code, if, under the circumstances of the case, it did not fall within the 5th exception to that section. Held that the consent given by the deceased allowing themselves to be bitten did not protect the accused, such consent having been founded on a misconception of facts, that is, in the belief that the accused had power by charms to cure snake-bites, and the accused knowing that the consent was given in consequence of such misconception (s. 90, Penal Code).—QUEEN v. POONAI FATTEMAH, 12 W. R. 7; 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 25. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. June 14, 1869.]

91. The exceptions in sections 87, and 88, and 89, do not extend to acts which are offences independently of any harm which they may cause, or be intended to cause, or be known to be likely to cause, to the person giving the consent, or on whose behalf the consent is given.

Exclusion of acts which are offences independently of harm caused.

Causing miscarriage (unless caused in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the woman) is an offence independently of any harm which it may cause, or be intended to cause, to the woman. Therefore it is not an offence "by reason of such harm;" and the consent of the woman or of her guardian to the causing of such miscarriage does not justify the act.

92. Nothing is an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause to a person for whose benefit* it is done in good faith, even without that person's consent, if the circumstances are such that it is impossible for that person to signify consent, or if that person is incapable of giving consent, and has no guardian or other person in lawful charge of him from whom it is possible to obtain consent in time for the thing to be done with benefit.

Explanation.—Mere pecuniary benefit is not benefit within the meaning of sections 88, 89, and 92.

Emasculation.—The benefit alluded to in this section must be some physical benefit, that is, the alleviation of some disease, or diseased or disorganized condition of some part or member of the body. Emasculation. — One count charging each specific offence, and describing it with a reasonable degree of certainty, is sufficient. Where a man of full age (i.e., above 18 years) submits himself to emasculation, performed neither by skilful hand, nor in the least dangerous way, and dies from the injury, the persons concerned in the act are guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. BABOOLUN HIJRAH, 5 W. R. 7. [Norman and Campbell, JJ. Jan. 15, 1866.]

93 No communication made in good faith is an offence by reason of any harm to the person to whom it is made, if it is made for the benefit of that person.

Communication made in good faith.

Illustration.

A, a surgeon, in good faith, communicates to a patient his opinion that he cannot live. The patient dies in consequence of the shock. A has committed no offence, though he knew it to be likely that the communication might cause the patient's death.

94. Except murder and offences against the State, punishable with death, nothing is an offence which is done by a person who is compelled to do it by threats, which, at the time of doing it, reasonably cause the apprehension that instant death to that person will otherwise be the consequence: provided the person doing the act did not of his own accord, or from a reasonable apprehension of harm to himself short of instant death, place himself in the situation by which he became subject to such constraint.

Act to which a person is compelled by threats.

Explanation 1.—A person who, of his own accord, or by reason of a threat of being beaten, joins a gang of dacoits, knowing their character, is not entitled to the benefit of this exception, on the ground of his having been compelled by his associates to do anything that is an offence by law.

Explanation 2.—A person seized by a gang of dacoits, and forced, by threat of instant death, to do a thing which is an offence by law, for example, a smith compelled to take his tools, and to force the door of a house for the dacoits to enter and plunder it, is entitled to the benefit of this exception.

Abetment by police-inspector of murder.—The conviction of a police-inspector for having abetted the bringing of a false charge of murder quashed, because it was not distinctly shown that he preferred the charge malâ fide. — QUEEN v. MATHOORA

PERSHAD PANDEY, 2 W. R. 10. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 18, 1865.]

False evidence: one of the false statements charged having been made to the police under compulsion. — Discussion as to the propriety of a conviction on a charge of false evidence, one of the statements charged having been made to the police under compulsion. — QUEEN v. NAGENA OURUT, 3 W. R. 6. [Campbell, Jackson, and Glover, JJ. May 3, 1865.]

Admission of commission of crime under compulsion.—An admission by A and B that the crime charged against them was committed by C and D, and that whatever share they had in it was under compulsion, is not a confession on which any person ought to be convicted. — QUEEN v. KISTO MUNDUL, 7 W. R. 8. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Jan. 7. 1867.]

Act done under fear of death. — A prisoner, in order to obtain the benefit of this section, must show that the act was done under fear of instant death Therefore, persons giving false evidence under the alleged influence of a threat are not protected by this section.—REG. v. SONOO, 10 W. R. 48. [Glover, J. Oct. 28, 1868.]

Offering bribe owing to threats.—The accused, who were classers employed in the Revenue Survey Department, were charged, under s. 161 of the Indian Penal Code, with taking bribes from the raiyats of certain villages The only evidence against the accused was that of persons who had either subscribed to the bribes, or collected subscription or paid the money to the accused. They stated that they had offered the bribes, because the classers had threatened to raise the assessment, cut down the hedges, and erect new boundary-marks. As regards this evidence, the trying Magistrate remarked that, even if all the witnesses for the prosecution were treated as accomplices, it was open to him to convict on their uncorroborated testimony, as "there was inherent truth in their statements, and circumstances existed which negatived the presumption of a conspiracy, and evidenced signs of truthfulness." The Magistrate was also of opinion that there was a distinction between accomplices who volunteered to assist in the receipt of illegal gratifications and those who assisted under compulsion. In the opinion of the Magistrate, the witnesses in the present case belonged to the latter class, and there was no reason to disbelieve their evidence. He, therefore, convicted the accused under s 161 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced them to rigorous imprisonment and fine. Held (Scott, J., dissenting) that the convictions were illegal, there being no evidence to corroborate the witnesses for the prosecution, all of whom were accomplices. Held also (Scott, J., dissenting) that there was such error in the consideration by the Magistrate of the evidence as to prejudice the accused, and such a failure of justice as to justify the Court in revision in setting aside the convictions. Per Curiam.—The limits of the application of the doctrine of necessity as an excuse for an act otherwise criminal are those prescribed in s. 94 of the Indian Penal Code. Therefore, witnesses who, in order to avoid pecuniary injury or personal molestation, had offered or given bribes to a public servant, were abettors of the offence of taking an illegal gratification, and their evidence should be treated as that of accomplices. By the law both of India and England, the evidence of an accomplice is admissible, and a conviction is not illegal because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice (s. 133 of the Evidence Act, I of 1872). But the presumption that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless corroborated in material particulars, has become a rule of practice of almost universal application. Per Scott, J.—There may be, however, cases of an exceptional character in which the accomplice's evidence alone convinces a Judge, and, if he acts on that conviction, with the character of the witnesses clearly present in his mind, a Revisional Court ought not to interfere in the absence of other circumstances showing a want of judicial discretion. Per Jardine, J.—The mere circumstance of a person being present on a lawful occasion does not raise a presumption of that person's complicity in an offence then committed so as to make s. 34 of the Indian Penal Code applicable. Reg. v. Farler, 8 C. and P. 106. Where the Magistrate on that ground did make that presumption against an accused person, and applied the provisions of s. 34, he committed an error in law, and the High Court, as a Court of Revision, might acquit the accused.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MAGANLAL AND MOTILAL, I. L. R., 14 Bom. 115 [Bayley, Scott, and Jardine, JJ. Sep. 24, 1889.]

A policeman was held to be guilty of abetment where he did not arrest a person who was committing assaults likely to cause grievous hurt.—Nothing but fear of instant death is a defence for a policeman who tortures any one by order of a superior. The maxim, Respondeat superior, has no application in such a case. Under the Bombay Police Act (IV. of 1890) every police-officer is bound to shelter a person in custody, and to arrest persons committing assaults likely to cause grievous bodily injury. If he omits to perform this duty, he is guilty of abetment.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. LATIFKHAN, I. L. R., 20 Bom. 394. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. Mar. 12, 1895.]

95. Nothing is an offence by reason that it causes, or that it is intended to cause, or that it is known to be likely to cause, any harm, if that harm is so slight that no person of ordinary sense and temper would complain of such harm.

Act causing slight harm.

What the Law Commissioners say.—The Law Commissioners, in framing the above section, state: "This section is intended to provide for those cases which, though from the imperfections of language, they fall within the letter of the law, are yet not within its spirit, and are all over the world considered by the public, and for the most part dealt with by the tribunals, as innocent. As our definitions are framed, it is theft to dip a pen in another man's ink, mischief to crumble one of his wafers, an assault to cover him with a cloud of dust by riding past him, hurt to incommode him by pressing in getting into a carriage. There are innumerable acts without performing which men cannot live together in society, acts which all men constantly do and suffer in turn, and which it is desirable that they should do and suffer in turn, yet which differ only in degree from crime. That these ought not to be treated as crime is evident, and we think it far better expressly to except them from the penal clauses of the Code than to leave it to the Judges to except them in practice."

Taking pods (almost valueless) from a tree.—Conviction and sentence by a Magistrate reversed, as the act of which the accused were convicted—taking pods (almost valueless) from a tree standing upon Government waste ground—came within the meaning of s. 95 of the Penal Code, and did not, therefore, amount to an offence.—REG v. KASYA BIN RAVJI, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 35. [Newton, Offg. C.J., and Tucker, J. May 20, 1868.]

A blow across the chest with an umbrella. — The pain caused by a blow across the chest with an umbrella was held to be not of such a trivial character as to come within the meaning of the Penal Code, s. 95.—GOVT. OF BENGAL v. SHEO GOLAM LALLA, 24 W. R. 67. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. Nov. 22, 1875.]

Tearing up a rough account.—A, having had certain transactions with B, wrote out a rough account showing his indebtedness to B, and signed the total. The paper was not stamped. B afterwards presented it to A, and demanded payment of the total amount. A paid part only, and after an altercation tore up the paper. Held that the act of tearing up the paper constituted the offence of destroying a valuable security, and the harm caused was such that a person of ordinary sense and temper would complain of it.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMASAMI, I. L. R., 12 Mad. 148. [Collins, C.J., and Wilkinson, J. Nov. 15, 20, 1888.]

A railway-guard, who told a passenger, "I suspect you are travelling with a wrong (false) ticket," was held to have acted bona fide.—A railway-guard, having reason to suppose that a passenger travelling by a certain train from Madras to Chingleput had purchased his ticket at an intermediate station, called upon the plaintiff and others of the passengers to produce their tickets. As a reason for demanding the production of the plaintiff's ticket, he said to him in the presence of the other passengers, "I suspect you are travelling with a wrong (false) ticket," which was the defamation complained of. The guard was held to have spoken the above words bonâ fide Held, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for damages.—SOUTH INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY v. RAMAKRISHNA, I. L. R., 13 Mad. 34. [Collins, C.J. and Wilkins, J Mar. 25, May 1, 1889.]

Mere abusive and insulting language not amounting to defamation, such as "sala," &c., is not actionable.—Held by the majority of the Full Bench (Maclean, C.J., Macpherson, Hill, and Jenkins, JJ., Ghose, J., dissenting) that mere use of abusive and insulting language, such as sala (wife's brother), haramzada (base born or bastard), soor (pig), baper beta (son of the father, that is, ironically, bastard), apart from defamation, is not actionable irrespective of any special damage. Per Ghose, J.—A case like the present should be decided according to the principle of justice, equity, and good conscience; and therefore it is but just and right that a person thus vilified, who has suffered from insult and mental pain, should be entitled to maintain an action irrespective of any special damage. —GIRISH CHUNDRR MITTER v. JATADHARI SADUKHAN, I. L. R., 26 Cal. 653. [Maclean, C.J., Macpherson, Ghose, Hill, and Jenkins, JJ. April 11, 1899.]

Of the Right of Private Defence.

Things done in private defence.

96. Nothing is an offence which is done in the exercise of the right of private defence.

Persons, believing they will be attacked, court the attack.—The right of private defence cannot be pleaded by persons who, believing they will be attacked, court the attack.—QUEEN v NOWABDEE, W R. Gap. 11. [Steer, J. Feb. 19, 1864.]

Right of private defence of property against a thief seized in the act of burglary.—Case of exercise of right of private defence of property against a thief, who was seized in the act of committing a burglary in the house of the accused.—QUEEN v. KURRIM BUX, 3 W R. 12. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. May 12, 1865.]

Right to oppose force to force.—Where A is in actual peaceable possession of land, B's attempt to recover possession of it by force is an illegal act, which A has a right to resist. If B uses force in carrying out his attempt, A has a right to oppose force to force, and to inflict upon B such injury as is necessary to compel him to desist.—QUEEN v. SACHEE alias SACHEE BOLER, 7 W. R. 76. [Markby and Glover, JJ. May 29, 1867.]

Severe assault on a trespasser who had entered the house to commit adultery.—Where a person, assisted by a friend, retaliated severely on another who trespassed into his house with the object of having intercourse with his wife, he was held to have committed no offence, ss. 96 and 104, Penal Code justifying him in causing any harm short of death to the trespasser; and his friend was also acquitted as having aided him to commit no offence.—QUEEN v DHAMUN TELI, 20 W. R. 36. [Markby and Birch, JJ. June 16, 1873.]

Plea of right of defence advanced by pleader of defence in his argument.—If the accused pleads not guilty, and does not admit the act, but the pleader for the defence advances in his argument the plea of the right of private defence, the duty of the Court is to accept the plea if it appears upon the evidence, either for the prosecution or from the defence, that what was done by the accused was in self defence.—PASPUT GOPE v. RAM BHAJAN OJHA, 1 C. W. N. 545. [Ghose and Gordon, JJ. Jan. 28, 1897.]

No question of self-defence arises where parties engage in a fight to vindicate their rights.—When a body of men are determined to vindicate their rights or supposed rights by unlawful force, and when they engage in a fight with men who, on the other hand are equally determined to vindicate by unlawful force their rights or supposed rights, no question of self-defence arises. In the Code of Criminal Procedure there is no apparent distinction between the right of appeal against an acquittal and a right of appeal against a conviction. Queen-Empress v Gayadin (I. L. R., 4 All. 148) and Queen Empress v. Gobardhan (I. L. R., 9 All 528) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v PRAG DAT, I. L. R., 20 All. 459. [Kershaw, C.J., and Knox, J. June 13, 1898.]

If an accused person has not pleaded the right of private defence, a Court of Appeal cannot raise such a plea on his behalf.—Held that an accused person, who, at his trial, has not pleaded the right of private defence, but has raised other pleas inconsistent with such a defence, cannot, in appeal, set up a case, founded upon the evidence taken at his trial, that he acted in the exercise of the right of private defence; neither is the Court competent to raise such a plea on behalf of the appellant. Queen-Empress v. Prag Dat (I. L. R., 20 All. 459) referred to.—QUEEN EMPRESS v. TIMMAL, I. L. R., 21 All. 122. [Knox, C.J., and Banerji, J. Nov. 18, 1898.]

Right of private defence of the body and of property.

97. Every person has a right, subject to the restrictions contained in section 99, to defend—

First.—His own body and the body of any other person against any offence affecting the human body;

Secondly.—The property, whether movable or immovable, of himself or of any other person, against any act which is an offence falling under the definition of theft, robbery, mischief or criminal trespass, or which is an attempt to commit theft, robbery, mischief, or criminal trespass.

A chaukidar who wounded a thief to arrest him was held justified.—The wounding of a thief by a chaukidar in order to his arrest, held under the circumstances to be justifiable.—QUEEN v. PROTAB CHOWKEEDAR, 2 W. R. 9. [Campbell and Glover, JJ. Jan. 16, 1865.]

A kills B, whom A finds near a hole in A's house, and, on being attacked by B, A strikes B at random in the dark.—A commits no offence, if, in the exercise of the right of private defence of his property against B, whom he finds near a hole in A's house, and, on being attacked by B, he strikes a blow at random, and in the dark, with a stick in his hand, whereby B is killed. C and D, by assisting A in removing the body of B, cannot be convicted (under s. 201 of the Penal Code) of having caused evidence to disappear, they having no knowledge or belief that an offence had been committed, nor any intention of screening an offender.—QUEEN v. PEIKO NUSHYO, 2 W. R. 43. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 15, 1865.]

A thief suffocated to death in the act of committing burglary.—The following is the judgment of the High Court in a case of exercise of the right of private defence of property against a thief who was seized in the act of committing a burglary in the house of the accused: "In this case the Sessions Judge has convicted the prisoner of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and sentenced him to three years' simple imprisonment. It appears that he seized a thief in the act of committing a burglary in his house, and that the thief was found, on the villagers assembling, to be dead. The prisoner says that he struck the thief one blow with a lathi; but the Sessions Judge and the assessors disbelieved this, as the medical officer who examined the body (as the Sessions Judge reports) deposed that death resulted from strangulation. We find, on looking at this report and deposition, that the thief's death was caused by suffocation; and there seems to be no doubt from the evidence that the act of the prisoner in seizing and holding the thief, whose face was downwards, as he was getting into the house, caused the suffocation. We are not satisfied that, in exercising his right of private defence of property against the thief, the prisoner exceeded the provision of the law; and we therefore acquit the prisoner, and direct his release"—REG v. KURRIM BUX, 3 W. R. 12. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. May 12, 1865.]

Right to oppose force to force.—Where A is in actual peaceable possession of land, B's attempt to recover possession of it by force is an illegal act, which A has a right to resist. If B uses force in carrying out his attempt, A has a right to oppose force to force, and to inflict upon B such injury as is necessary to compel him to desist.—QUEEN v. SACHEE alias SACHEE BOLER, 7 W. R. 76. [Markby and Glover, JJ. May 29, 1867.]

A prisoner, whose property had been stolen, went out with a lathi to watch his property, and struck and killed a thief: He was protected by s. 97.—Where the accused, whose property had frequently been stolen, went out with a lathi to watch his property, and with the lathi struck a thief, who died from the effects of the blows, it was held (having regard to the nature of the injuries inflicted, and to the subsequent conduct of the accused) that the case did not fall within the 4th exception to s. 99, and that the prisoner was not guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder but was protected by ss. 97 and 104 of the Penal Code, and had not exceeded the legal right of private defence of property.—QUEEN v. MOKEE, 12 W. R. 15. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. June 28, 1867.]

Confinement of a trespasser till the following day not protected by s. 97.—Where A trespassed on the lands of B, whose servants seized and confined A till the following day, when B gave information to the police, it was held that the conduct of B and his servants in confining A could not be supported on the ground that they were exercising the right of private defence of property under ss. 97, 104, and 105 of the Penal Code.—SHURUFOODDIN v. KASSINATH, 13 W. R. 64. [Loch and Hobhouse, JJ. April 23, 1870.]

Accused persons, who were in peaceable possession and were attacked while in such possession, did not exceed the right of private defence of property.—Held on the facts of the case (and following 7 W. R. 113) that the accused, who were in peaceable possession of their property, and were attacked while in such possession, did not exceed the right of private defence of property under s 103, Penal Code.—QUEEN v. GOOROO CHURN CHUNG, 14 W. R. 69; 6 B. L. R. App. 9. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Nov. 19, 1870.]

When raiyats who knowingly resist distraint are not protected.—A zemindar is justified in exercising his right of private distraint of crops, if he has served the defaulters with written notices under Act X. of 1859, s. 116; and in such a case raiyats who knowingly resist the distraint are not protected by the Penal Code, s. 79. But if the zemindar's people enter upon crops with the intention of distraining without notice, the raiyat-owners are justified in considering such action as trespass. Quære.—Would the raiyats in the latter case be protected by the provisions of the Penal Code, ss 97 and 99, in preventing the distraint, and confining the men employed to make it—QUEEN v. KANHAI SHAHU, 23 W. R. 40. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. Feb. 27, 1875.]

A fight between two parties who are armed and prepared to fight.—Where both parties are armed and prepared to fight, it is immaterial who is the first to attack, unless it is shown that the party was acting within the legal limits of the right of private defence—IN THE MATTER OF KALEE BEPAREE, 1 C. L. R. 521. [Jackson and Cunningham, JJ. Mar. 5, 1878.]

Accused persons held justified in resisting trespassers: Yet Sessions Judge, holding that accused had exceeded their right of private defence, convicted them of rioting: High Court set aside conviction.—A disturbance having been created with reference to the possession of certain chur-land, the Sessions Judge on appeal found that certain persons had unlawfully trespassed thereupon, and that the accused had been justified in resisting the trespassers by force. Inasmuch, however, as he considered the accused had exceeded their right of private defence of their property, he convicted them of rioting under s. 148 of the Penal Code. Held that, on the findings of the Judge, the conviction could not be supported, inasmuch as on such findings the persons convicted were not members of an unlawful assembly—IN THE MATTER OF KALEE MUNDLE, 10 C. L. R. 278 [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Feb 28, 1882.]

Conviction for riot and hurt: On appeal the Sessions Judge held that the complainants had themselves been the aggressors, and that the accused had merely exercised the right of private defence, but as the plea of private defence was not set up, the Sessions Judge did not set aside the conviction: Held, the accused were entitled to their acquittal.—Where the accused had been convicted of riot under s 148, and of grievous hurt under s. 325, of the Penal Code, the Sessions Judge on appeal held that the complainants had themselves been the aggressors, and that the accused had merely exercised the right of private defence; but inasmuch as they had not set up the plea of private defence, he considered it was not competent to him to set aside the conviction. Held that, on the finding of the Sessions Judge, the accused were entitled to an acquittal.—IN THE MATTER OF KALI CHURN MOOKERJEE, 11 C. L. R. 232. [Prinsep and O'Kinealy, JJ. May 22, 1882.]

Conviction of an unlawful assembly, whose common object was, by show of criminal force, and by criminal force if necessary, to prevent the construction of a bund, and to demolish it so far as it was constructed.—A party of persons, consisting of some five peadas and a number of coolies sufficient for the work to be done, went to a spot on a river flowing through the lands of M for the purpose of either repairing or erecting a bund across it to cause the water to flow down a channel on the lands of their master T. The river at the time was almost dry, and the party did not go armed ready to fight or use force, and they did not, during the subsequent occurrence, use force. Having arrived at the spot about 10 A.M., they proceeded to work at the bund until the afternoon. At about 4 P.M. a body of men, consisting of about 1,200 in all, many of them armed with lathis, and headed by the prisoners, who were servants of M, which had been seen collecting together during the day, proceeded to the spot, and about 25 or 30 of them attacked T's men, some five of whom were more or less severely wounded with the lathis. The occurrence resulted in the conviction of some of M's servants for rioting under s. 147 of the Penal Code. M's people wholly denied any right on the part of T to construct or repair the bund, and had previously denied the existence of such right, and refused permission to T to exercise it. It was contended that the assembly of M's people was not an "unlawful assembly;" that the interference by T's people with the channel of the river justified them in coming to stop the work, and the show and use of force in compelling them to do so. Held that the prisoners had been rightly convicted. Held, further, that, as no right of private defence of property is conferred by the Penal Code, except as against the perpetrators of offences under the Penal Code, and that as, upon the facts of the case as found, no offence had been committed by T's people, their acts amounting merely to a civil trespass, and that as there was no pressing or immediate necessity of a kind, showing that there was not time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, no question as to the right of private defence arose in the case. It was further contended that M's people did not assemble to enforce a right or supposed right within the terms of s. 141 of the Penal Code, but to defend a right, and that such action did not make the assembly an unlawful one. Held that they were members of an assembly, the common object of which was, by show of criminal force, and by criminal force, if necessary, to enforce the right to keep the river channel clear by preventing the construction of the bund, and by demolishing it so far as it was constructed, and that the case came within s. 141, para. 4. Queen v. Mitto Sing (3 W. R. Cr. 41), Shunker Singh v. Burmah Mahto (23 W. R. Cr. 25), and Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lall (19 W. R. Cr. 66), referred to and commented on.—GANOURI LAL DAS v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 206 [Pigot and Macpherson, JJ. Jan. 14, 1889.]

Distraint of cattle by landlord for arrears of rent: Tenant with eleven others forcibly obstructed removal of cattle: Accused charged with rioting, and convicted: Conviction upheld.—A landlord who had not tendered to his tenant such a pattah as the latter was bound to accept under the Madras Rent Recovery Act, distrained his cattle for arrears of rent, the assistance of the police having been procured for the purpose. The tenant, with the assistance of eleven other persons, forcibly obstructed the removal of the cattle, which had already been actually seized and driven for some yards. They were charged with the offence of rioting, and convicted. Held that the conviction was right.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMAYYA, I. L. R., 13 Mad. 148. [Collins, C.J., and Parker, J. Oct. 2, 25, 1889.

Right of private defence of property: Causing grievous hurt in furtherance of common object.—The accused, receiving information that the complainant's party were about to take forcible possession of a plot of land which was found by the Court to be in the possession of the accused, collected a large number of men, some of whom were armed, and went through the village to the land in question. While they were engaged in ploughing, the complainant's party came up, some of them being armed, and interfered with the ploughing. A fight ensued, in the course of which one of the complainant's party was grievously wounded, and subsequently died, and two of the accused's party were hurt. Held that, if the accused were rightfully in possession of the land, and found it necessary to protect themselves from aggression on the part of another body of men, they were justified in taking such precautions as they thought were required, and using such force or violence as was necessary to prevent the aggression. Held, also, that under such circumstances they could not rightly be held to be members of an unlawful assembly. Queen-Empress v. Narsang Pathahbai (I. L. R., 14 Bom. 441), Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lall (19 W. R. Cr. 66), and Shunkur Singh v. Burmah Mahto (23 W. R. Cr. 25), followed. Ganouri Lal Dass v Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 16 Cal. 206) distinguished.—PACHKAURI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 24 Cal. 686. [Ghose and Gordon, JJ. Mar. 16, 1897.]

Right of private defence against the act of a person of unsound mind, &c.

98. When an act, which would otherwise be a certain offence, is not that offence, by reason of the youth, the want of maturity of understanding, the unsoundness of mind, or the intoxication of the person doing that act, or by reason of any misconception on the part of that person, every person has the same right of private defence against that act which he would have if the act were that offence.

Illustrations.

(a.) Z, under the influence of madness, attempts to kill A. Z is guilty of no offence. But A has the same right of private defence which he would have if Z were sane.

(b.) A enters by night a house which he is legally entitled to enter. Z, in good faith, taking A for a house-breaker, attacks A. Here Z, by attacking A under this misconception, commits no offence. But A has the same right of private defence against Z, which he would have if Z were not acting under that misconception.

Acts against which there is no right of private defence.

99. There is no right of private defence against an act which does not reasonably cause the apprehension of death or of grievous hurt if done or attempted to be done by a public servant acting in good faith under colour of his office, though that act may not be strictly justifiable by law.

There is no right of private defence against an act which does not reasonably cause the apprehension of death or of grievous hurt if done or attempted to be done by the direction of a public servant acting in good faith under colour of his office, though that direction may not be strictly justifiable by law.

There is no right of private defence in cases in which there is time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities.

Extent to which the right may be exercised.

The right of private defence in no case extends to the inflicting of more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence.

Explanation 1.—A person is not deprived of the right of private defence against an act done or attempted to be done by a public servant, as such, unless he knows or has reason to believe that the person doing the act is such public servant.

Explanation 2.—A person is not deprived of the right of private defence against an act done or attempted to be done by the direction of a public servant unless he knows or has reason to believe that the person doing the act is acting by such direction, or unless such person states the authority under which he acts, or, if he has authority in writing, unless he produces such authority if demanded.

No right of private defence where persons, believing they will be attacked, court the attack.—The right of private defence cannot be pleaded by persons who, believing they will be attacked, court the attack. — QUEEN v. NOWABDEE, W. R. Gap. 1854. 11. [Steer. ]. Feb. 19. 1864.

In a case of hurt or grievous hurt, a Court should consider who was the aggressor, and was the offence committed in the exercise of the right of private defence—In cases of hurt or grievous hurt, the question should be considered as to who was the aggressor, and whether the offence was committed in the exercise of the right of private defence — QUEEN v. SOHAN AND SAMOO, 2 W. R. 59 [Campbell and Jackson, JJ. April 10, 1865.]

Causing the death of a weak half-starved old woman who was caught stealing.—Held by the majority of the Court that the offence committed was murder where the death of a weak half-starved old woman, who was detected stealing, was caused in the exercise of the right of private defence, by the doing of more harm than was necessary for the purpose of such defence; Campbell, J., contra, being of opinion that a man who detects a thief stealing his property, and who, acting on the sudden impulse of the moment, inflicts on the thief blows so severe as to be likely to cause death, but which he did not at the time know or feel to be likely to cause death, and which would not necessarily have caused death to a person in ordinary health, but which, owing to abnormal weakness in the deceased not known to him, did cause death, is not guilty of murder, but of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. GOKOOL BOWREE, 5 W. R. 33. [Norman, Campbell, and Phear, JJ. Feb. 26, 1866.]

Wilfully killing another whilst endeavouring to escape after having been detected in the act of house-breaking by night for the purposes of theft.—Held by the majority of the Court (Campbell, J., dissenting) that when a person wilfully killed another whilst endeavouring to escape after having been detected in the act of house-breaking by night for the purposes of theft, the offence committed was murder, and could not be considered to have been committed in the exercise of the right of private defence either of person or property, nor under grave and sudden provocation.—QUEEN v. DURWAN GEER, 5 W R 73; 1 Ind. Jur. 253. [Jackson, Campbell, and Macpherson, JJ. April 7. 1866.]

A thief was caught house-breaking by night, with half of his body and his head through the wall, and his head was nearly cut off. Offence—culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—Where a thief was caught house-breaking by night, with half his body and his head through the wall of a house occupied by none but women except the prisoner and his idiot-son, and where the prisoner suddenly caught up a sort of pole-axe, and with it struck the thief five times on his neck and nearly cut off his head: Held that the offence committed by the prisoner was not murder, inasmuch as it was committed in the exercise of the right of private defence; but that, as the prisoner inflicted more hurt than was necessary for the purpose of defence, he was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. FUKEERAM CHAMAR, 6 W. R. 50. [Norman and Seton-Karr, JJ. July 30, 1866.]

No right of private defence in a case of premeditated riot.—There can be no right of private defence, either on one side or the other, in a case of premeditated riot.—QUEEN v. JEOLALL, 7 W. R. 34. [Glover and Kemp, JJ. Feb. 18, 1867.]

An accused, whose property had frequently been stolen, went out with a lathi to watch his property, and with the lathi struck and killed a thief: Held, accused had not exceeded the legal right of private defence of property.—Where the accused, whose property had frequently been stolen, went out with a lathi to watch his property, and with the lathi struck a thief, who died from the effects of the blows, it was held (having regard to the nature of the injuries inflicted, and to the subsequent conduct of the accused) that the case did not fall within the 4th exception to s. 99, and that the prisoner was not guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but was protected by ss. 97 and 104 of the Penal Code, and had not exceeded the legal right of private defence of property.—QUEEN v. MOKEE, 12 W. R. 15. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. June 28, 1867.]

Confinement of a trespasser till the following day not protected by s. 97.—Where A trespassed on the lands of B, whose servants seized and confined A till the following day, when B gave information to the police, it was held that the conduct of B and his servants in confining A could not be supported on the ground that they were exercising the right of private defence of property under ss. 97, 104, and 105 of the Penal Code.—SHURUFOODDIN v. KASSINATH, 13 W. R. 64. [Loch and Hobhouse, JJ. April 23, 1870.]

An officer, without a search-warrant, attempted to enter a house to search stolen property, and was obstructed and resisted. As the officer acted in good faith and without malice, the obstruction and resistance was held unjustifiable.—An officer, subordinate to an officer in charge of a police-station, who was deputed by the latter to make an inquiry under s 135 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, attempted, without a search-warrant, to enter a house in search of property alleged to have been stolen, and was obstructed and resisted. Held (applying s 99 of the Penal Code) that, even though the police-officer was not strictly justified in searching the house without a warrant, the person obstructing and resisting could not set up the illegality of the officer's proceeding as a justification of his obstruction, as it was not shown that that officer was acting otherwise than in good faith and without malice. A Magistrate acting judicially should not import into the case before him his previous knowledge of the character of the accused, but should determine his guilt or innocence upon the evidence given in the case.—REG. v. VYANKATRAV SHRINIVAS, 7 Bom. H. C. R. 50. [Gibbs and Melvill, JJ. June 15, 1870.]

A bailiff breaking the doors of a third person to execute a decree does not find either the judgment-debtor or his property: The person obstructing the bailiff is not liable to punishment.—If a bailiff break the doors of a third person in order to execute a decree against a judgment-debtor, he is a trespasser if it turn out that the person or goods of the debtor are not in the house; and under such circumstances the owner of the house does not, by obstructing the bailiff, render himself punishable under s. 183 or s. 186 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. GAZIKOM ABA DORE, 7 Bom. H. C. R. 83. [Gibbs and Melvill, JJ. July 28, 1870.]

For the purpose of defence, the accused should not inflict more harm than is necessary.—The right of private defence under s 103 of the Penal Code is restricted by s. 99 of that Code, and does not extend to the inflicting of more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence.—QUEEN v. DHUNUNJAI POLY, 14 W. R. 68. [Kemp, J. Nov. 14, 1870.]

The High Court declined to interfere in four cases of dismissal, referred by the Judge.—The High Court declined to interfere in four cases of dismissal by the Magistrate and Deputy Magistrate referred by the Judge—the first, because the Judge considered that mere persistence in demand of rent did not amount to trespass, justifying the right of private defence as held by the Magistrate; the second, because the Judge considered that the Magistrate's reasons, viz., (1) want of explanation of the cause of complainant's presence on the spot where the alleged assault was committed, (2) want of explanation of delay in making complaint, and (3) want of material evidence in the shape of bruises, were not sufficient in law to justify a summary dismissal; the third, because the Judge considered that the mere assertion of a claim to land by the accused did not justify the dismissal of the criminal charge as to theft of its produce, and that the Deputy Magistrate should be directed to hold a proper inquiry and dispose of the case after recording evidence; and the fourth, because the Judge considered that delay in making complaint was not of itself a legal ground for dismissal, particularly where an explanation of the delay is tendered.—(1) MAHOMED JAN v. KHADI SHEIKH; (2) HUR NATH DE KHASHKHIL v. JOYGOPAL DE SIRKAR; (3)

HURIS CHUNDRA DAS v. BOLAI AUDHICAREE; (4) SHEIK AHMUDDY v. ANUND MOHUN MOZOOMDAR, 16 W. R. 65. [Bayley and Markby, JJ. Dec. 13, 1871.]

Firing of a gun.—The firing of a gun at persons at a distance of twenty-five yards, without a reasonable apprehension of danger, and without any necessity for so doing, is not justifiable by the right of private defence.—QUEEN v. HUSSAINUDDY, 17 W. R. 46. [Couch, C.J., and Ainslie, J. April 5, 1872.]

A case where the right of private defence of person and property was not allowed to be pleaded.—The right of private defence of person and property was not allowed to be pleaded in a case where there was no fear of an assault such as is described in the clauses of s. 100 of the Penal Code, and where the prisoners used deadly weapons (spears), and killed two unarmed persons whom they found ploughing land which the prisoners believed to be theirs.—QUEEN v. GOUR CHANDBHUNG, 18 W. R. 29. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 18, 1872.]

It is for those who raise the plea of private defence to prove it.—A Sessions Judge, holding a second trial, should not comment on the conduct of a previous trial. It is for those who raise the plea of private defence to prove it. The act charged cannot be denied, and the plea of private defence raised as an alternative. If raised, a full account of the occurrence must be given in evidence.—IN THE MATTER OF JAMSHEER SIRDAR, 1 C. L. R. 62. [Ainslie and McDonell, JJ. June 29, July 24, 1877.]

Where both parties are armed and prepared to fight, it is immaterial who is the first to attack.—Where both parties are armed and prepared to fight, it is immaterial who is the first to attack, unless it is shown that that party was acting within the legal limits of the right of private defence.—In re KALEE BEPAREE, 1 C. L. R. 521. [Jackson and Cunningham, JJ. Mar. 5, 1878.]

A head-constable firing a gun among a crowd of gipsies, and killing one.—A head-constable, making an investigation into a case of house-breaking and theft, searched the tents of certain gipsies for the stolen property, but discovered nothing. After he had completed the search, the gipsies gave him a certain sum of money, which he accepted, but at the same time, not deeming it sufficient, he demanded a further sum from them. They refused to give anything more, on the ground that they were poor, and had no more to give. Thereupon he unlawfully ordered one of them to be bound and taken away. On his subordinates proceeding to execute such order, all the gipsies in the camp—men, women, and children—turned out, some four or five of the men being armed with sticks and stones, and advanced in a threatening manner towards the place such gipsy was being bound, and the head-constable was standing. Before any actual violence was used by the crowd of advancing gipsies, the head-constable fired with a gun at such crowd when it was about five paces from him, and killed one of the gipsies, and, having done so, ran away. Any apprehension that death or grievous hurt would be the consequence of the acts of such crowd would have ceased had he released the gipsy he had unlawfully arrested, and withdrawn himself and his subordinates, or had he effected his escape. Held that such head-constable had not a right of private defence against the acts of such gipsies, as those acts did not reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt would be their consequence, and such head-constable was guilty of culpable homicide amounting to murder.—EMPRESS v. ABDUL HAKIM, I. L. R., 3 All. 253. [Pearson and Straight, JJ. Oct. 5, 1880.]

An accused person assaulted a sepoy, and prevented him from impressing carts for his superior officer, and was convicted and punished under s. 353, but the conviction was altered to one of simple assault under s. 352.—The rules or executive orders of Government, printed at pages 26 and 27 of Mr. Nairne's Revenue Hand Book, have not the force of law, and a public servant acting in obedience thereto cannot be considered as acting in execution of his duty as a public servant, if his act is otherwise illegal. Accordingly, where on a complaint by a sepoy in the Revenue Department deputed by a forest settlement officer to impress some carts for the use of the latter, that the accused assaulted and prevented him from seizing his cart, a Magistrate of the First Class convicted the accused under s 353 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860) for assaulting and obstructing a public servant in the execution of his duty, and sentenced the accused to undergo twenty-one days' rigorous imprisonment, Held that the conviction under s. 353 of the Penal Code should be set aside The only offence of which, upon the evidence, the accused was guilty, was that of simple assault under s. 352 of the Penal Code.—In re THE PETITION OF RAKHMAJI, I. L. R., 9 Bom. 528. [Nanabhai Haridas and Wedderburn, JJ. July 6, 1885.]

Execution of a warrant initialled only. It is an offence to offer resistance to executing officer.—A warrant issued for the arrest of a debtor under the provisions of s. 251 of the Civil Procedure Code was initialled by the Munsarim of the Court, sealed with the seal of the Court, and delivered to the proper officer for execution. The debtor forcibly resisted the officer, and was tried and convicted, under s. 353 of the Penal Code, for assaulting a public servant in the execution of his duty as such. In revision, it was contended, with reference to the requirements of s. 251 of the Civil Procedure Code, that the warrant of arrest, having been initialled only, was bad, and the officer could not legally execute it, and consequently no offence under s. 353 of the Penal Code had been committed. Held that this contention could not be allowed, and, although it was proper that the person signing a warrant should write his name in full, it could not be said that, because the signature was confined to the initials of the name, it was not the duty of the officer to execute the warrant. Held also, with reference to s. 99 of the Penal Code, that the act of the accused did not cease to be an offence on the ground that it was done in the exercise of the right of private defence.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. JANKI PRASAD, I. L. R., 8 All 293. [Oldfield, J. May 4, 1886.]

Exceeding right of private defence.—In a case of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, it was held that, though the occasion might have been one in which the prisoner was justified in meeting force by force, still, as he inflicted a blow which he must have known was likely to cause death, he had exceeded his right of private defence with reference to cl. 4, s. 99 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. FUZZA MEEAH alias FUZZA MAHOMED, 6 W. R. 89. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Dec. 13, 1886.]

Resistance to a surveyor in execution of a Mamlatdar's decree: No offence.—In a suit filed in a Mamlatdar's Court under Bom. Act III. of 1876, the plaintiff obtained a decree against the accused for possession of a certain piece of land. When the Mamlatdar proceeded to execute the decree, he found that there was no land corresponding to the boundaries set forth in the plaint, and that the parties were joint owners, and in joint occupation of the land in dispute. Finding himself unable to execute the decree, the Mamlatdar referred the matter to the Collector for advice. The Collector, on looking into the papers of the case, ordered a surveyor to execute the decree by dividing the land in dispute, and putting the decree-holder in possession of his share. The surveyor, in attempting to execute the decree, was obstructed by the accused, who was thereupon tried and convicted of the offence of voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions, under s. 186 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860). Held (reversing the conviction) that, as the Collector had no legal authority to issue the order to the surveyor in execution of the Mamlatdar's decree, the surveyor acting under that order was not discharging a public function, and the act of the accused was not an offence against s. 186 of the Penal Code. Held, further, that the Collector's order was so entirely ultra vires as to leave no room for the operation of either the first or the second clause of s. 99 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. TULSIRAM, I. L. R., 13 Bom. 168. [Birdwood and Parsons, JJ. May 3, 1888.]

In a fight, both sides received serious injuries, and the leader of the complainant's party was killed.—The third clause of s. 99 of the Indian Penal Code must be read with the first clause of s. 105. The right of private defence of property commences when a reasonable apprehension of danger to the property commences. Before such apprehension commences, the owner of the property is not called upon to apply for protection to the public authorities. The apprehension which justifies a recourse to the authorities ought to be based on some information of a definite kind as to the time and place of the danger actually threatened. The accused No. 1 received information one evening that the complainants intended to go on his land on the following day, and uproot the juvari seed sown in it. At about 3 o'clock next morning, he was informed that the complainants had entered on his land, and were ploughing up the seed. Thereupon he at once proceeded to the spot, followed by the other accused, and remonstrated with the complainants. The complainants, without paying any attention to his remonstrances, commenced an attack on the accused. In the fight which ensued, both sides received serious injuries, and the leader of the complainants' party was killed. The accused were thereupon charged and convicted, under ss. 304, 114, 325, and 323 of the Indian Penal Code, of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, and of causing hurt. Held, reversing the convictions, that the complainants being the aggressors, the accused had, under the circumstances, the right of private defence, both of person and of property, and that, in the exercise of this right, they did not inflict more harm than was necessary. Held, also, that the accused were not bound to act on the information received on the previous evening, and seek the protection of the public authorities, as they had no reason to apprehend a night-attack on their property.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NARSING PATHABHAI, I. L. R., 14 Bom. 441. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Jan. 8, 13, 1890.]

A constable arrested Dalip by virtue of a copy of a warrant in good faith under colour of his office: Some of Dalip's friends aided by Dalip, attacked the complainant, rescued Dalip, and caused hurt to the constable: Conviction held not under s. 332, but under ss. 147 and 323.—A warrant was issued by a Magistrate for the arrest of one Dalip under s. 114 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The warrant was sent to a certain thana to be executed. It was then, after being copied into a book kept for that purpose at the thana, made over to a particular constable for execution. When the constable to whom the warrant had been made over had left the thana, it was discovered that Dalip was in a village other than that in which he had been supposed to be. Thereupon the officer temporarily in charge of the thana made a copy from the book at the thana, endorsed on the back the names of one Nazir Husain and some other constables, and, having signed the endorsement, sent Nazir Husain and others out with this paper to arrest Dalip. Nazir Husain and his companions arrested Dalip; but, as they were returning with him in custody, some of Dalip's friends, aided by Dalip himself, attacked them, rescued Dalip, and caused hurt to the police. Held that the police-officers concerned in arresting Dalip under the circumstances above described were not acting in the lawful discharge of their duty within the meaning of s. 332 of the Penal Code, so as to render the accused liable to conviction under that section; but, inasmuch as they were acting in good faith under colour of their office, s. 99 of the Indian Penal Code applied, and Dalip and his associates might be properly convicted under ss. 147 and 323 of the Code. The words "in the discharge of his duty as such public servant" in the earlier portion of s. 332 of the Indian Penal Code mean in the discharge of a duty imposed by law on such public servant in the particular case, and do not cover an act done by him in good faith under colour of his office. The Queen v. Roxburgh (12 Cox. Cr. Ca. 8) referred to.—QUEEN EMPRESS v. DALIP, 18 All. 246. [Edge, C.J., and Burkitt, J. Feb. 18, 1896.]

A sub-inspector of salt and abkari, not having a search-warrant, attempted to enter a house in search of property, and was obstructed and resisted: As he acted in good faith and without malice, it was held that the obstruction and resistance was unjustifiable.—A sub-inspector of salt and abkari attempted, without a search-warrant, to enter a house in search of property, the illicit possession of which is an offence under the Madras Abkari Act, and was obstructed and resisted. Held that, having regard to s. 99 of the Penal Code, even though the sub-inspector was not strictly justified in searching a house without a warrant, the persons obstructing and resisting could not set up the illegality of the officer's proceeding as a justification of their obstruction, as it was not shewn that that officer was acting otherwise than in good faith and without malice.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PUKOT KOTU, I. L. R., 19 Mad. 349 [Davies and Boddam, JJ. July 23, 1896.]

S. 99 not applicable to a case in which police-officers were acting under a warrant issued illegally.—Section 99 of the Penal Code has no application to a case, in which the police-officers were acting under a warrant, the issue of which was altogether illegal.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. JOGENDRA NATH MUKERJEE, I. L. R., 24 Cal. 320, at p. 324. [Ghose and Gordon, JJ. Jan. 20, 1897.]

Where a licensed vaccinator attempted to take lymph from a child of one petitioner to vaccinate the child of the other, and was assaulted, the assault was held justifiable.—Where a licensed vaccinator attempted to take lymph from a child of one petitioner to vaccinate the child of the other, and was assaulted in consequence, and received slight injury, it was held that the vaccinator was not entitled to take lymph from the arm of any person who objected, and his attempting to do so was unlawful, and the petitioners were justified in assaulting him. It was also held that the slight injuries received by the vaccinator did not prevent him from discharging his duty.—MANGOBIND MUCHI v. EMPRESS, 3 C. W. N. 627. [Prinsep and Wilkins, JJ. April 28, 1899.]

100. The right of private defence of the body extends, under the restrictions mentioned in the last preceding section, to the voluntary causing of death, or of any other harm, to the assailant, if the offence which occasions the exercise of the right be of any of the descriptions hereinafter enumerated, namely:—

When the right of private defence of the body extends to causing death.

First.—Such an assault as may reasonably cause the apprehension that death will otherwise be the consequence of such assault;

Secondly.—Such an assault as may reasonably cause the apprehension that grievous hurt will otherwise be the consequence of such assault;

Thirdly.—An assault with the intention of committing rape;

Fourthly.—An assault with the intention of gratifying unnatural lust;

Fifthly.—An assault with the intention of kidnapping or abducting;

Sixthly.—An assault with the intention of wrongfully confining a person, under circumstances which may reasonably cause him to apprehend that he will be unable to have recourse to the public authorities for his release.

Striking a blow at random, and killing.—A commits no offence, if, in the exercise of the right of private defence of his property against B, whom he finds near a hole in A's house, and, on being attacked by B, he strikes a blow at random, and in the dark, with a stick in his hand, whereby B is killed. C and D, by assisting A in removing the body of B, cannot be convicted (under s. 201 of the Penal Code) of having caused evidence to disappear, they having no knowledge or belief that an offence had been committed, nor any intention of screening an offender.—QUEEN v. PELKO NUSHYO, 2 W. R. 43. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 15, 1865.]

Causing death by striking with a lathi.—The legal right of private defence of the body and property is not exceeded by a person who is attacked by another with a spear, and who strikes a blow with a lathi, which results in the death of the party attacking; and such right of private defence of the body extends under s. 100 of the Penal Code to the taking of life where grievous hurt is reasonably apprehended.—QUEEN v. MOIZUDIN, 11 W. R. 41. [Jackson and Markby, JJ April 29, 1869.]

No misdirection in not calling attention to cls. 1 and 2 of s. 100, when attention was called to cl. 6 of that section.—Held that it was no misdirection on the part of the Judge in not calling the attention of the jury to cls. 1 and 2 of s. 100 of the Penal Code, when he particularly called their attention to cl. 6 of that section.—QUEEN v. MOOKTARAM MUNDLE, 17 W. R. 45. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 23, 1872.]

Killing two unarmed persons with spears.—The right of private defence of person and property was not allowed to be pleaded in a case where there was no fear of an assault such as is described in the clauses of s. 100 of the Penal Code, and where the prisoners used deadly weapons (spears), and killed two unarmed persons whom they found ploughing land which the prisoners believed to be theirs.—QUEEN v. GOUR CHAND CHUNG, 18 W. R. 29. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 18, 1872.]

Killing an aggressor.—Under the facts of this case, a person was held to have rightly exercised the right of private defence as contemplated in cl. 2, s. 100, and cl. 4, s. 103, Penal Code, though in the exercise of such right he killed one of his aggressors.—QUEEN v. RAM LALL SINGH, 22 W. R. 51. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. July 30, 1874.]

When such right extends to causing any harm other than death.

101. If the offence be not of any of the descriptions enumerated in the last preceding section, the right of private defence of the body does not extend to the voluntary causing of death to the assailant, but does extend, under the restrictions mentioned in section 99, to the voluntary causing to the assailant of any harm other than death.

Who was the aggressor?—In a case of hurt or grievous hurt, the question should be considered as to who was the aggressor, and whether the offence was committed in the exercise of the right of private defence.—QUEEN v. SOHUN, 2 W. R. 59. [Campbell and Jackson, JJ. April 10, 1865.]

A fight between Mollahs and Shikdars.—Dispute between two parties (the Mollahs and Shikdars), in which the Shikdars attacked and killed one of the Mollahs when exercising the right of retaking their own property; three of the Shikdars being also wounded. The Shikdars were convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and rioting As to the Mollahs, Loch, J., was of opinion that they were guilty of voluntarily causing grievous hurt; while the majority of the Court held that they were entitled to the protection conferred by s. 101, Penal Code, on those who, while exercising the right of private defence, caused their assailants any harm other than death.—QUEEN v. TANOO SHIKDAR, 3 W. R. 47. [Loch, Kemp, and Seton-Karr, JJ. July 17, 1865.]

102. The right of private defence of the body commences as soon as a reasonable apprehension of danger to the body arises from an attempt or threat to commit the offence, though the offence may not have been committed, and it continues as long as such apprehension of danger to the body continues.

Commencement and continuance of the right of private defence of the body.

A drunken fight ending in death.—The prisoner and the deceased met each other at a liquor-shop, and drank together. Afterwards they walked away together, a third person who had been drinking with them following them. In the way an altercation took place in respect of the deceased having, as alleged by the prisoner, caused the death of the prisoner's four children by incantations. According to the prisoner's account, the deceased admitted having done so, and added that he would also bring about the death of the prisoner; in short, that he would not allow him to leave the jungle alive, but would cause him to be taken and eaten by a tiger. Thereupon the prisoner stated that he killed the deceased with several blows of a heavy lathi. It was held that the prisoner had no reasonable apprehension of danger to himself from the threats of the deceased, whom he killed; and that, therefore, the right of private defence of the body did not arise, and the case was not taken out of the category of murder, by reason of the second exception to s. 300 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. GOBADUR BHUYAN, 13 W. R. 55; 4 B. L. R. App. 101. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. April 6, 1870.]

103. The right of private defence of property extends, under the restrictions mentioned in section 99, to the voluntary causing of death, or of any other harm to the wrong-doer, if the offence, the committing of which, or the attempting to commit which, occasions the exercise of the right, be an offence of any of the descriptions hereinafter enumerated, namely:—

When the right of private defence of property extends to causing death.

First.—Robbery;

Secondly.—House-breaking by night;

Thirdly.—Mischief by fire committed on any building, tent, or vessel, which building, tent, or vessel is used as a human dwelling or as a place for the custody of property;

Fourthly.—Theft, mischief, or house-trespass under such circumstances as may reasonably cause apprehension that death or grievous hurt will be the consequence, if such right of private defence is not exercised.

Killing a thief.—Case of exercise of right of private defence of property against a thief, who was seized in the act of committing a burglary in the house of the accused.—QUEEN v. KURRIM BUX, 3 W. R. 12. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. May 12, 1865.]

Death in an affray.—In an affray respecting land one of the aggressive party was killed. The prisoners, who were exercising the right of private defence of property, were acquitted by the jury of culpable homicide, but convicted of rioting. Held that the prisoners, not being legally guilty of culpable homicide, were not legally guilty of any other offence coupled with rioting, and, not being rioters, or members of an unlawful assembly, could claim the benefit of s. 104, Penal Code.—QUEEN v. MITTO SINGH, 3 W. R. 41. [Seton-Karr and Campbell, JJ. July 11, 1865.]

A thief was caught house-breaking by night, with half of his body and his head through the wall, and his head was nearly cut off: Held that the offence was culpable homicide not amounting to murder. — Where a thief was caught house-breaking by night, with half his body and his head through the wall of a house occupied by none but women except the prisoner and his young idiot-son, and where the prisoner suddenly caught up a sort of pole-axe, and with it struck the thief five times on his neck and nearly cut off his head: Held that the offence committed by the prisoner was not murder, inasmuch as it was committed in the exercise of the right of private defence; but that, as the prisoner inflicted more hurt than was necessary for the purpose of defence, he was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. FUKEERA CHAMAR, 6 W. R. 50. [Norman and Seton-Karr, JJ. July 30, 1866.]

When a party has a right to oppose force to force.—Where A is in actual peaceable possession of land, B's attempt to recover possession of it by force is an illegal act, which A has a right to resist. If B uses force in carrying out his attempt, A has a right to oppose force to force, and to inflict upon B such injury as is necessary to compel him to desist.—QUEEN v. SACHEE alias SACHEE BOLER, 7 W. R. (112) 76. [Markby and Glover, JJ. May 29, 1867.]

Rioting: Party in possession protected.—In investigating a case of dispute as to land between two parties, a Magistrate found that one party was in possession; but there being a charge against both parties of rioting under s. 147 of the Penal Code, he punished both parties. The High Court held that the party in possession were protected by s. 104 of the Penal Code; and the punishment inflicted on them for maintaining their possession was accordingly remitted.—IN THE MATTER OF TOOLSEE SING, 2 B. L. R. A. Cr. 16; 10 W. R. 64. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Dec. 21, 1868.]

A person should not inflict more harm than is necessary.—The right of private defence under s. 103 of the Penal Code is restricted by s. 99 of that Code, and does not extend to the inflicting of more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence.—QUEEN v. DHUNUNJAI POLY, 14 W. R. 68. [Kemp, J. Nov. 14, 1870.]

An assailant killed with a bamboo in self-defence.—Certain persons made a sudden attack upon the prisoners for the purpose of cutting their crops. The prisoners resisted, and, having no time to complain to the police, inflicted a wound upon one of the assailants with a bamboo, from the effects of which he afterwards died. The Sessions Judge convicted the prisoners under ss. 148 and 304. In appeal, the High Court held that the force used, and the injuries inflicted, were not such as to exceed the right of private defence of property, and directed an acquittal.—QUEEN v. GOOROO CHURN CHUNG, 6 B. L. R. App. 9; 14 W. R. 69. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Nov. 19, 1870.]

Killing an aggressor in self-defence.—Under the facts of this case, a person was held to have rightly exercised the right of private defence as contemplated in cl. 2, s. 100, and cl. 4, s. 103, Penal Code, though in the exercise of such right he killed one of his aggressors.—QUEEN v. RAM LALL SINGH, 22 W. R. 51. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. July 30, 1874.]

Unlawful assembly: Rioting.—A party of persons, consisting of some five peadas, and a number of coolies sufficient for the work to be done, went to a spot on a river flowing through the lands of M, for the purpose of either repairing or erecting a bund across it to cause the water to flow down a channel on the lands of their master T. The river at the time was almost dry, and the party did not go armed ready to fight or use force, and they did not, during the subsequent occurrence, use force. Having arrived at the spot about 10 A.M., they proceeded to work at the bund until the afternoon. At about 4 P.M., a body of men, consisting of about 1,200 in all, many of them armed with lathis, and headed by the prisoners, who were servants of M, which had been seen collecting together during the day, proceeded to the spot, and about 25 or 30 of them attacked T's men, some five of whom were more or less severely wounded with the lathis. The occurrence resulted in the conviction of some of M's servants for rioting under s. 147 of the Penal Code. M's people wholly denied any right on the part of T to construct or repair the bund, and had previously denied the existence of such right, and refused permission to T to exercise it. It was contended that the assembly of M's people was not an "unlawful assembly;" that the interference by T's people with the channel of the river justified them in coming to stop the work, and the show and use of force in compelling them to do so. Held that the prisoners had been rightly convicted. Held, further, that as no right of private defence of property is conferred by the Penal Code, except as against the perpetrators of offences under the Penal Code, and that, as, upon the facts of the case as found, no offence had been committed by T's people, their acts amounting merely to a civil trespass, and that, as there was no pressing or immediate necessity of a kind showing that there was not time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, no question as to the right of private defence arose in the case. It was further contended that M's people did not assemble to enforce a right or supposed right within the terms of s. 141 of the Penal Code, but to defend a right, and that such action did not make the assembly an unlawful one. Held that they were members of an assembly, the common object of which was, by show of criminal force, and by criminal force, if necessary, to enforce the right to keep the river channel clear by preventing the construction of the bund, and by demolishing it so far as it was constructed, and that the case came within s. 141, para. 4. Queen v. Mitto Sing (3 W. R. Cr. 41), Shunker Singh v. Burmah Mahto (23 W. R. Cr. 25), and Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lall (19 W. R. Cr. 66), referred to and commented on.—GANOURI LAL DAS v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 206. [Pigot and Macpherson, JJ. Jan. 14, 1889.]

104. If the offence, the committing of which, or the attempting to commit which, occasions the exercise of the right of private defence, be theft, mischief, or criminal trespass, not of any of the descriptions enumerated in the last preceding section, that right does not extend to the voluntary causing of death, but does extend, subject to the restrictions mentioned in section 99, to the voluntary causing to the wrong-doer of any harm other than death.

When such right extends to causing any harm other than death.

An affray ending fatally.—In an affray respecting land, one party were the aggressors, and the other side (had the affair not ended fatally) would have been in the legal exercise of the right of defence of property, and would have been entitled to the benefit of s. 104 of the Penal Code. Held that one year's imprisonment was sufficient punishment for the latter.—QUEEN v. SHUNKER, 1 W. R. 34. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 5, 1864.]

Where, in exercising the right of private defence of property, A, finding a man near a hole in A's house, and being attacked by the man, strikes a blow at random in the dark with a stick, and kills him, he kills no offence.—A commits no offence, if in exercising the right of private defence of his property against B, whom he finds near a hole in A's house, and, on being attacked by B, he strikes a blow at random, and in the dark, with a stick in his hand, whereby B is killed. C and D, by assisting A in removing the body of B, cannot be convicted (under s. 201 of the Penal Code) of having caused evidence to disappear, they having no knowledge or belief that an offence had been committed, nor any intention of screening an offender. —QUEEN v. PELKOO NUSHYO, 2 W. R. 43. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 15, 1865.]

Right of defence in a case of affray.—In an affray respecting land one of the aggressive party was killed. The prisoners, who were exercising the right of private defence of property, were acquitted by the jury of culpable homicide, but convicted of rioting. Held that the prisoners, not being legally guilty of culpable homicide, were not legally guilty of any other offence coupled with rioting, and, not being rioters, or members of an unlawful assembly, could claim the benefit of s. 104, Penal Code.—QUEEN v. MITTO SINGH, 3 W. R. 41. [Seton-Karr and Campbell, JJ. July 11, 1865.]

Killing a thief: Private defence of property.—Where the accused, whose property had frequently been stolen, went, armed with a lathi, to watch his property, and with the lathi struck a thief, who died from the effects of the blow, held (having regard to the nature of the injuries inflicted and the subsequent conduct of the accused) that the case did not fall within the 4th clause of s. 97, and that the prisoner was not guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, being protected by ss. 97 and 104, he not having exceeded the legal right of private defence of property.—QUEEN v. MOKEE, 12 W. R. 15. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. June 28, 1867.]

Two factions were convicted of rioting: High Court convicted the party who were found to be in possession.—In investigating a case of dispute as to land between two parties under Ch. XXII. of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), a Magistrate found that one party were in possession; but there being a charge against both parties of rioting under s. 147 of the Penal Code, he punished both parties. Held that the party in possession were protected by s. 104 of the Penal Code; and the punishment inflicted in maintaining their possession on them was accordingly remitted. —TOOLSEE SINGH, 10 W. R. 64; 2 B. L. R. A. Cr. 16. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Dec. 21, 1868.]

Accused's property being frequently stolen, he went out with a lathi to watch his property, and with the lathi struck a thief, who died from the effects of the blows: Accused was held to be protected by ss. 97 and 104.—Where the accused, whose property had frequently been stolen, went out with a lathi to watch his property, and with the lathi struck a thief, who died from the effects of the blows, it was held (having regard to the nature of the injuries inflicted and to the subsequent conduct of the accused) that the case did not fall within the 4th exception to s. 99, and that the prisoner was not guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but was protected by ss. 97 and 104 of the Penal Code, and had not exceeded the legal right of private defence of property.—QUEEN v. MOKEE, 12 W. R. 15 [Norman and Jackson, JJ. June 28, 1869.]

Wrongfully confining a trespasser: Held that there was no right of private defence.—Where A trespassed on the lands of B, whose servants seized and confined A till the following day, when B gave information to the police, it was held that the conduct of B and his servants in confining A could not be supported on the ground that they were exercising the right of private defence of property under ss. 97, 104, and 195 of the Penal Code.—SHURUPOODDIN v. KASSINATH, 13 W. R. 64. [Loch and Hobhouse, JJ. April 23, 1870.]

Certain prisoners, being suddenly attacked with the view of cutting their crop, resisted, and inflicted a wound on one of the attacking party, ending fatally: Right of private defence of property: Acquittal.—Certain persons made a sudden attack upon the prisoners for the purpose of cutting their crops. The prisoners resisted, and, having no time to complain to the police, inflicted a wound upon one of the assailants with a bamboo, from the effects of which he afterwards died. The Sessions Judge convicted the prisoners under ss. 148 and 304. In appeal to the High Court, held that the force used, and the injuries inflicted, were not such as to exceed the right of private defence of property, and directed an acquittal. —QUEEN v. GOOROO CHURN CHUNG, 6 B. L. R. App. 9; 14 W. R. 69. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Nov. 19, 1870.]

In a case of criminal trespass, the causing of some harm other than death is justified.—Where the offence which occasions the right of private defence of property is criminal trespass, the right of defence under s. 104 of the Penal Code only extends (subject to the restrictions of s. 99) to the voluntarily causing to the wrong-doers some harm other than death.—QUEEN v. GOBURDHUN PARI, 14 W. R. 74. [Bayley and Glover, JJ. Nov. 30, 1870.]

In a case of trespass with intent to commit adultery, the causing of any harm short of death is justified.—Where a person, assisted by a friend, retaliated severely on another who trespassed into his house with the object of having intercourse with his wife, he was held to have committed no offence, ss. 96 and 104, Penal Code, justifying him causing any harm short of death to the trespasser; and his friend was also acquitted as having aided him to commit no offence.—QUEEN v. DHAUMUN TELI, 20 W. R. 36. [Markby and Birch, JJ. June 16, 1873.]

Unlawful assembly: Common object was, by show of criminal force, to enforce the right to keep the river-channel clear by preventing the construction of a bund.—A party of persons, consisting of some five peadas and a number of coolies sufficient for the work to be done, went to a spot on a river flowing through the lands of M for the purpose of either repairing or erecting a bund across it to cause the water to flow down a channel on the lands of their master T. Commencement and continuance of the right of private defence of property.

105. The right of private defence of property commences when a reasonable apprehension of danger to the property commences.

The right of private defence of property against theft continues till the offender has effected his retreat with the property, or either the assistance of the public authorities is obtained, or the property has been recovered.

The right of private defence of property against robbery continues as long as the offender causes or attempts to cause to any person death or hurt or wrongful restraint, or as long as the fear of instant death or of instant hurt or of instant personal restraint continues.

The right of private defence of property against criminal trespass or mischief continues as long as the offender continues in the commission of criminal trespass or mischief.

The right of private defence of property against house-breaking by night continues as long as the house-trespass which has been begun by such house-breaking continues.

No private defence where both parties turned out armed with deadly weapons.—An affray having taken place, both parties turned out armed with deadly weapons. Held that there was no right of private defence, as both parties well knew beforehand what was likely to happen. The factory had no right forcibly to attempt to sow indigo in land already sown with corn, although it was indigo-contract land. The villagers had no right to oppose force to force, the police-station being near at hand.—REG. v. JEOLALL, 3 Wyman's Rev., Civ., and Crim Reporter 21; 7 W. R. 34. [Glover and Kemp, JJ. Feb. 18, 1867.]

Pursuing and killing a thief after his house-trespass had ceased.—Held that a case in which the accused pursued after a thief, and killed him after the house-trespass had ceased, did not fall within the 2nd exception to s. 300 of the Penal Code, the right of private defence of property continuing under cl. 5, s. 105 of that Code, only so long as the house-trespass continues.—QUEEN v BALAKEE JOLAHED, 10 W R. 9. [Glover, J. July 3, 1868.]

Unlawful assembly: Ceasing of the right of private defence of property.—Where land in the possession of A was encroached on by the servants of B, who committed mischief on the land, and the servants of A assembled, and resisted the encroachments, the High Court declined to interfere with the Magistrate's order convicting the servants of A of unlawful assembly, as there was no error in law in the order of the Magistrate, who found as a fact that the right of defence of private property had ceased under cl. 4, s. 105 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. RAJKRISTO DOSS, 12 W. R. 43. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Aug 3, 1869.]

Wrongful confinement of a trespasser: No justification.—Where A trespassed on the lands of B, whose servants seized and confined A till the following day, when B gave information to the police, it was held that the conduct of B and his servants in confining A could not be supported on the ground that they were exercising the right of private defence of property under ss. 97, 104, and 105 of the Penal Code.—SHURUFOODDIN v. KASSINATH, 13 W. Before apprehension of danger to property commences, the owner of property is not called upon to apply for protection to public authorities.—The third clause of s. 99 of the Indian Penal Code must be read with the first clause of s. 105. The right of private defence of property commences when a reasonable apprehension of danger to the property commences. Before such apprehension commences, the owner of the property is not called upon to apply for protection to the public authorities. The apprehension which justifies a recourse to the authorities ought to be based on some information of a definite kind as to the time and place of the danger actually threatened. The accused No. 1 received information one evening that the complainants intended to go on his land on the following day, and uproot the juvari seed sown in it. At about 3 o'clock next morning, he was informed that the complainants had entered on his land, and were ploughing up the seed. Thereupon he at once proceeded to the spot, followed by the other accused, and remonstrated with the complainants. The complainants, without paying any attention to his remonstrances, commenced an attack on the accused. In the fight which ensued, both sides received serious injuries, and the leader of the complainants' party was killed. The accused were thereupon charged and convicted, under ss. 304, 114, 325, and 323, of the Indian Penal Code, of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, and of causing hurt. Held, reversing the convictions, that, the complainants being the aggressors, the accused had, under the circumstances, the right of private defence, both of person and of property, and that, in the exercise of this right, they did not inflict more harm than was necessary. Held, also, that the accused were not bound to act on the information received on the previous evening, and seek the protection of the public authorities, as they had no reason to apprehend a night-attack on their property.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NARSANG PATHABHAI, I. L. R., 14 Bom. 441. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Jan. 8, 13, 1890.]

106. If, in the exercise of the right of private defence against an assault which reasonably causes the apprehension of death, the defender be so situated that he cannot effectually exercise that right without risk of harm to an innocent person, his right of private defence extends to the running of that risk.

Right of private defence against deadly assault when there is risk of harm to innocent person.

CHAPTER V.*

OF ABETMENT.

Abetment of a thing.

107. A person abets the doing of a thing who—

First.—Instigates any person to do that thing; or,

Secondly.—Engages with one or more other person or persons in any conspiracy for the doing of that thing, if an act or illegal omission takes place in pursuance of that conspiracy, and in order to the doing of that thing; or,

Thirdly.—Intentionally aids, by any act or illegal omission, the doing of that thing.

Explanation 1.—A person who, by wilful misrepresentation, or by wilful concealment of a material fact which he is bound to disclose, voluntarily causes or procures, or attempts to cause or procure, a thing to be done, is said to instigate the doing of that thing.

Illustration.

A, a public officer, is authorized by a warrant from a Court of Justice to apprehend Z. B, knowing that fact, and also that C is not Z, wilfully represents to A that C is Z, and thereby intentionally causes A to apprehend C. Here B abets by instigation the apprehension of C.

Explanation 2.—Whoever, either prior to, or at the time of, the commission of an act, does anything in order to facilitate the commission of that act, and thereby facilitates the commission thereof, is said to aid the doing of that act.

Grievous hurt: Abetment of.—The prisoners having abetted an assault, and murder having been committed, held, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, that they were guilty of abetment of grievous hurt, and not abetment of murder.—QUEEN v. GOLUCK CHUNG, 5 W. R. 75. [Campbell and Macpherson, JJ. April 28, 1866.]

Grievous hurt: Abetment of.—Where A ordered B and C to seize and forcibly take D in the contemplation of an assault upon D, and D was so beaten and tortured as to have died in consequence: Held that A was guilty at least of abetting the commission of voluntarily causing grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. DOORGESSUR SURMAH, 17 W. R. (97) 61. [Hobhouse, J. April 30, 1867.]

Grievous hurt: Abetment of.—Held that, where A gave a dao to B, who had given out his intention to coerce the party against whom he was acting and who inflicted grievous hurt on such party with the dao, A was guilty of abetment within the second

* Ch. V. applies to offences punishable under ss. 121A, 124A, 225A, 225B, 294A, and 304A.—See the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act (XXVII. of 1870), s. 13, as amended by the Repealing and Amending Act (XII. of 1891).

The definition of "abet" here given applies in the case of all Acts of the Governor-General in Council and Regulations under "the Government of India Act, 1870" (33 Vict., c. 3) s. 1, made after the 14th January 1887.—See the General Clauses Act (X. of 1897), ss. 3 (1), 4 (2).

As to the application of ss. 109, 110, 112, 114 to 117, to offences under special or local laws see s. 40, supra.

The abetment of certain offences is compoundable.—See the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), Sch. II.

head of the third clause of s. 107 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. ESHAN MEAH, 12 W. R. 52. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. Sep. 3, 1869]

Suttee : Abetment of.—Persons present, and abetting a boy to set fire to the pile upon which a widow voluntarily burnt herself, were guilty themselves of culpable homicide. One who took no active part in causing the death, but induced the widow to return to the pile, was guilty of abetment of suicide.—1 R. J. P. J. 174.

Suttee : Abetment of.—The conviction of certain persons as abettors of culpable homicide in having looked on passively at a suttee was upheld on appeal. Campbell, J., in passing judgment in the case, made the following remarks: "The more important question remains behind—whether all persons in the position of the appellants are not, by the mere act of going to a suttee, and giving it, by their presence, their countenance and support, guilty of abetment of suttee, even though nothing more active can be proved against them. It would seem to be very dangerous to let it be supposed that, so long as it cannot be proved that a man brought the faggots or the fire, he may give the utmost moral and actual support to a suttee with impunity. Practically, I believe, spectators are most powerful abettors . . . . I am inclined to think that every man of education or intelligence who goes to a suttee, and stands an unopposing and passively supporting spectator, does, by every step towards the suttee commit an act of abetment."—QUEEN v. JHOTEE SINGH, 1 R. J. P. J. 246. The above ruling is contrary to the remarks of the Indian Law Commissioners on the Penal Code and to the following cases: Queen v. Gora Chand Gope (5 W. R 45), Queen v. Goburdhun Bera (6 W. R. 80), Gopal Chunder Sirdar v. Foolmoni Bewa (I. L. R., 8 Cal. 728, s.c., 11 C. L. R. 223).

Suttee: Abetment of.—In the case of Queen v. Jhotee Singh (1 R. J. P. J. 246), it was held by Campbell and Kemp that persons who looked on passively at a suttee were rightly convicted of abetment of culpable homicide. But from the following remarks of Sir Barnes Peacock in another case it will be seen that a contrary and more sensible opinion was entertained: "If the object and design of those who seized Amoordee was merely to take him to the thana on a charge of theft, and it was not part of the common design to beat him, they would not all be liable for the consequence of the beating, merely because they were present. It is laid down that, when several persons are in company together engaged in one common purpose lawful or unlawful, and one of them, without the knowledge or consent of the others, commits any offence, the others will not be involved in the guilt unless the act done was in some manner in furtherance of the common intention. It is also said that, although a man is present when a felony is committed, if he take no part in it, and do not act in concert with those who committed it, he will not be a felon, merely because he did not attempt to prevent it, or to apprehend the felon. But if several persons go out together for the purpose of apprehending a man, and taking him to the thana on a charge of theft, and some of the party, in the presence of the others, beat and ill-treat the man in a cruel and violent manner, and the others stand by and look on, without endeavouring to dissuade them from their cruel and violent conduct, it appears to me that those who have to deal with the facts might very properly infer that they were all assenting parties, and acting in concert, and that the beating was in furtherance of a common design. I do not know what the evidence was. All I wish to point out is that all who are present do not necessarily assist by their presence every act that is done in their presence, nor are consequently liable to be punished as principals."—QUEEN v. GORA CHAND GOPE, 5 W. R. 45; B. L. R Sup. Vol. 443; 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 177; 1 Wyman's Rev., Civ., and Crim. Rep. 43. [Peacock, C.J., and Trevor and Norman, JJ. Mar. 3, 1866]

Suttee · Abetment of.—Evidence that a woman prepared herself to commit suicide in the presence of the accused, that they followed her to the pyre, and stood by her, her step sons crying, "Ram, Ram," and one of the accused admitting that he told the woman to say, "Ram, Ram," and she would become "suttee," proves active connivance and unequivocal countenance of the suicide by the accused, and justifies the inference that they had engaged with her in a conspiracy for the commission of the suttee.—REG. v. MOHIT PANDEY, 3 N.-W. P. 316. [Pearson, J Sep. 6, 1871.]

False evidence : Abetment of.—The prisoner asked a witness to suppress certain facts in giving his evidence against the prisoner before the Deputy Magistrate on a charge of defamation. Held that this was abetment of giving false evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding, and was triable before a Court of Session only.—In re ANDY CHETTY, 2 Mad. H. C. R. 438. [Frere and Innes, JJ. Aug. 12, 1865.]

False evidence : Abetment of.—Where C falsely represented himself to be U, and the writer of a document signed by U and T, knowing that C was not U, and had not written such document, adduced C as U, and as the writer of that document, held that T ought to have been convicted on a charge of abetting the giving of false evidence.—QUEEN v. CHUNDI CHURN NATH, 8 W. R. 5. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. June 4, 1867.]

False evidence: Abetment of.—The lower Criminal Courts cannot punish, as abettors, persons who gave evidence in support of false charges, or rather charges found by such Courts to be false. S. 108 of the Penal Code does not contemplate any acts of subsequent abetment, or provide for the punishment of such offences, except when they are such as are defined in ss 212 to 218.—QUEEN v. PAUN PUNDAH, 18 W. R. 28; 9 B. L. R. App. 16. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 11, 1872.]

False evidence: Abetment of.—In order to convict a person of abetting the commission of a crime, it is not only necessary to prove that he has taken part in those steps of the transaction which are innocent, but in some way or other it is absolutely necessary to connect him with those steps of the transaction which are criminal. There can be no offence of the abetment of giving false evidence unless the person charged with abetment intended, not only that the statement should be made, but intended that the statement should be made falsely.—QUEEN v. NIM CHAND MOOKERJEE, 20 W. R. 41. [Markby and Birch, JJ. June 27, 1873.]

False evidence: Abetment of.—The Magistrate convicted accused of abetting the giving of false evidence in a judicial case proceeding before himself. Held that, as by the proceedings of 24th March 1873 the Magistrate could not have tried the person who gave false evidence, he could not try the abettor.—PRO., Nov. 6, 1873; 7 Mad. H. C. R. App 28.

Theft: Abetment of.—A person can be convicted of abetment of theft under the 1st explanation of s. 107 of the Penal Code only if he either procures, or attempts to procure, the commission of the theft. Mere subsequent knowledge of the offence is insufficient.—QUEEN v. SHUMEERUDDEEN, 2 W. R. 40. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 14, 1865.]

Theft: Abetment of.—A prisoner who consented to form one of a party who committed theft, and resiled from his agreement, but was present at the commission of theft, does not come within cl. 2, s. 107, Penal Code, and ought not to have been convicted of the theft, but of the abetment thereof, under cl. 3, s. 107, and s. 109, Penal Code, read together.—QUEEN v. BOODHUN MOOSHUR, 8 W. R. 78. [Glover, J. Oct. 30, 1867.]

Theft: Abetment of.—The carrying off of certain buffaloes belonging to the complainant by order of the accused, and the retention of them in the custody of the latter's servant, were held to amount to an abetment of theft as defined in the Penal Code.—TARINEE PROSAUD BANERJEE, 18 W. R. 8. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. June 14, 1872.]

Theft: Abetment of.—A Hindu, intending to separate himself from his family, emigrated to Demerara as a coolie. After an absence of thirty years he returned to his family, bringing with him money and other moveable property which he had acquired in Demerara by manual labour as a coolie. On his return to his family he lived in commensality with it, but he did not treat such property as joint family-property, but as his own property. Held that such property was his sole property, and his brother was not a joint owner of it, and could properly be convicted of theft in respect of it. It is irregular to convict and punish a person for abetment of theft, and at the same time to convict and punish him for receiving the stolen property.—EMPRESS v. SITA RAM RAI, I. L. R., 3 All. 181. [Straight, J. Aug. 16, 1880.]

Forgery: Abetment of.—Where a prisoner, who appealed to the Commissioner from an order of an assessor under Act XXI. of 1867, filed a stamp-paper for a copy of the assessor's decision after the period of appeal had elapsed, but on appeal averred that he filed the stamp-paper before the time for appealing had elapsed, and fraudulently obtained a certificate to that effect, which was antedated, it was held that he was guilty of having abetted the commission of a forgery of a document within s 463 and cl. 1, s 464 of the Penal Code. The evidence of a prisoner taken by a Collector cannot be used against him on his trial before a Magistrate.—QUEEN v. SOOKHMOY GHOSE, 10 W. R. 23. [Loch and Glover, JJ. July 25, 1868.]

Forgery: Abetment of.—To prepare, in conjunction with others, a copy of an intended false document, and to buy a stamped paper for the purpose of writing such false document, and to ask for information as to a fact to be inserted in such false document, do not constitute forgery nor an attempt to commit forgery under the Penal Code, but are facts which would support a conviction for abetment of forgery as being acts done to facilitate the commission of the offence.—REG v. PADALA VENKATASAMI, I. L. R., 3 Mad 4. [Turner, C.J., and Kindersley, J. Mar. 8, 1881.]

Stamp offence: Abetment of.—A executed to B on plain paper an instrument which should have been executed on a paper bearing a four-anna stamp. B filed a suit against A in the Civil Court, and produced the instrument in evidence. The Civil Court called upon A to pay the duty and penalty, and, on B's refusal to pay, impounded the instrument, and sent it to the Collector. The Collector, concurring with the opinion of the Civil Court, sanctioned the prosecution, in the Criminal Court, of both A and B, but without requiring the payment of the duty and penalty. The prosecution resulted in the conviction of A under s. 61 of the Stamp Act (I. of 1879), and of B of abetment of A's offence. Held that the convictions were illegal, inasmuch as the Collector failed to allow an opportunity of paying the duty and penalty. Held further that mere receipt of an unstamped instrument did not constitute the offence of an abetment of the execution of such an instrument.—EMPRESS v. JANKI, I. L. R., 7 Bom. 82. [West and Pinhey, JJ. Nov. 2, 1882.]

Stamp offence: Abetment of.—A debtor, having paid a sum of money to his creditor, accepted from the latter an unstamped receipt, promising to affix a stamp thereto. Held that this did not constitute abetment, within the meaning of s. 107 of the Penal Code, of the offence of making an unstamped receipt. Empress v. Bahadur Singh (Weekly Notes, 1885, p. 30) distinguished Empress v. Janki (I. L. R., 7 Bom. 82) and Empress v. Bhairon (Weekly Notes, 1884, p. 37) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MITTHU LAL, I. L. R., 8 All. 18. [Petheram, C.J. Oct. 26, 1885.]

How a charge of abetment should be framed.—In drawing up a charge of abetment, the section of the principal offence, and the section of this chapter (v.) which the case covers, should be mentioned, with the circumstances which bring the offence under the particular section of this chapter.—1 W. R., Cr. L. 9; 2 W. R., Cr. L. 1, 8.

Bigamy and abetment thereof: How a charge should be framed.—Bigamy and abetment of bigamy to be charged separately.—5 W. R., Cr. L. 5.

What persons may be charged jointly.—When more persons than one are accused of the same offence, or of different offences committed in the same transaction, or when one person is accused of committing any offence, and another of abetment of, or attempt to commit, such offence, they may be charged and tried together or separately, as the Court thinks fit; and the provisions contained in the former part of this chapter shall apply to all such charges.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), s. 239.

Contents of bond.—The bond to be executed by any such person shall bind him to keep the peace or to be of good behaviour, as the case may be; and, in the latter case, the commission or attempt to commit, or the abetment of, any offence punishable with imprisonment, wherever it may be committed, is a breach of the bond.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), s. 121.

Where a charge of abetment should be enquired into or tried.—A charge of abetment may be enquired into or tried either by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the abetment was committed, or by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offence abetted was committed.—CRIM. PRO CODE (ACT V. OF 1898), s. 180, illus. a.

False certificate of summons: Abetment of the issue of a.—Abetment of the issue of a false certificate of summons. Although there was no chaukidar in the village of the name appearing on the receipt, acknowledging due service, the prisoner was acquitted in the absence of proof of guilty knowledge or belief, it being probable that he (an utter stranger in the village) was deceived by the villagers.—QUEEN v. HISSAMUDDEEN, 3 W. R. 37. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. June 27, 1863.]

Murder: There can be no conviction for abetment of murder without proof of murder.—There can be no conviction for abetment of murder without proof of murder. A husband, or those who aided him, cannot be convicted of kidnapping for taking away his own wife, but they are guilty of rioting if they carry out the husband's object of getting possession of his wife by force and violence, and in the darkness of night.—QUEEN v. ASKUR, W. R., Sp. 12. [Steer and Seton-Karr, JJ. Feb. 22, 1864.]

Marriage: Abetment of an illegal.—Proof of dishonest or fraudulent intent is necessary for a conviction under s. 496 of the Penal Code of falsely going through the ceremony of marriage. The mere act of allowing the marriage to take place at one's house does not amount to the abetment of an illegal marriage.—QUEEN v. KUDUM, W. R., Sp. 13. [Steer and Morgan, JJ. Feb. 24, 1864.]

Abduction of a woman: Abetment of.—The prisoners having been sentenced for abetment of abduction of a woman under ss. 109 and 498 of the Penal Code, and for wrongful confinement of her under s. 343, held that both sentences could not stand, and that, as the essence of the case was abduction, the prisoners, as abettors therein, should be punished for it alone.—QUEEN v. ISHWAR CHUNDER JOGI, W. R., Sp. 21. [Loch and Seton-Karr, JJ. April 12, 1864.]

Murder: Abetment of.—When two persons take an active part in a murder, they become principals in the first degree, though one of them only may have been the actual killer. If one stood by whilst the crime was being committed, he would be an abettor.—QUEEN v. JAN MAHOMED, 1 W. R. 49. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 26, 1864.]

Murder: Conviction of a police-inspector for having abetted the bringing of a false charge of.—The conviction of a police-inspector for having abetted the bringing of a false charge of murder quashed, because it was not distinctly shown that he preferred the charge mala fide.—QUEEN v. MUTHOORAPERSHAD PANDAY, 2 W. R. 9. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 18, 1865.]

When instigation amounts to abetment.—The mere "voluntarily causing" a person to commit an offence is not sufficient to constitute abetment of that offence. It is the voluntarily causing by wilful misrepresentation, or by wilful concealment of a material fact which a person is bound to disclose, that constitutes such instigation as amounts to abetment.—3 W. R. Cr. L. 12, No. 632, July 6, 1865.

When trial should not be adjourned because principal offenders not arrested.—The attention of the Joint Magistrate should be drawn to s. 224 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If the proceedings have been completed against a prisoner, the decision of the case should not be deferred, because they are merely subordinate prisoners, and because the principal offenders have not been apprehended. A trial should be adjourned only when there is a probability of obtaining additional evidence against an accused.—3 W. R. Cr. L. 21, No. 795, Aug. 10, 1865.

Dacoity: When concealment of certain facts does not amount to abetment of.—Knowing of a design to commit a dacoity, and voluntarily concealing the existence of that design with the knowledge that such concealment would facilitate the commission of dacoity, does not amount to an abetment of the dacoity.—QUEEN v. JHUGROO, 4 W. R. 2. [Seton-Karr and Jackson, JJ. Sep. 4, 1865.]

Cheating or extortion: Issue of a hukumnama (to correct statistical information) by police-officer is not abetment of.—To amount to the offence of extortion, property must be obtained by intentionally putting a person in fear of injury to that person, and thereby dishonestly inducing him to part with his property. The mere issue of a hukumnama (to correct statistical information) by a police-officer is no legal ground for a conviction of abetment of cheating or of extortion.—QUEEN v. MEAJAN, 4 W. R. 5. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Sep. 9, 1865.]

Abetment: Principals punished as such cannot also be punished for.—Persons punished as principals cannot also be punished for abetment of the same offence.—QUEEN v. JEETOO CHOWDHRY, 4 W. R. 23. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov. 8, 1865.]

Grievous hurt and abetment of riot: Prisoners who have, as principals, been convicted of grievous hurt and riot cannot also be convicted of abetment of the same offences.—Held that the prisoners could not be convicted of abetment of grievous hurt and of abetment of riot after having been convicted of both charges as principals. As, however, the evidence credited by the jury was held by the High Court to support a conviction of culpable homicide, and as the prisoners, even on their conviction on the lesser charge of grievous hurt, might have been sentenced to a much heavier punishment than had been passed on them, their punishment was not reduced.—QUEEN v. RAMNARAIN JOSH, 4 W. R. 37. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Dec. 21, 1865.]

Bribe: Abetment of.—Where a constable and others enter a house, and apprehend certain persons as gamblers, and afterwards release them on payment of a sum of money by the latter, the offence committed is not house-trespass and extortion, but taking a bribe as regards the constable, and abetment of that offence as regards the others.—GOVT. v. MAHOMED HOSSEIN, 5 W. R. 49. [Norman and Campbell, JJ. Mar. 5, 1866.]

Extortion: Abetment of.—Held that it is not necessary in a case of extortion under the Penal Code that the threat should be used, and the property received, by one and the same individual, nor that the receiver should be charged with abetment, although that might be done.—REG. v. SHANKAR BHAGVAT, 2 Bom. H. C. R. 394. [Couch, C.J., and Warden, J. July 12, 1866.]

Wrongful act of servant: When master not criminally responsible for.—A master is not criminally responsible for the wrongful act of a servant, unless he can be shown to have expressly authorized it.—SUFFER ALLY KHAN v. GOLAM HYDER KHAN, 6 W. R. 60. [Norman and Seton-Karr, JJ. Aug. 27, 1866.]

Suicide: Abetment of.—Held that the prisoners, having abetted the suicide, were rightly convicted by the Judge for that offence. The sentence was mitigated under the circumstances.—GOVT. v. GOPAUL SING 1 Agra H. C. R. 21. [Pearson and Turner, JJ., and Spankie, Offg J. Sep 10, 1866.]

Murder: Where a master, who is present at the commission of murder by his servant, is held guilty as principal.—A person may be convicted of murder on his own confession. Where a master accompanies a servant, knowing the latter's intention to commit murder, and is present at the commission of the murder, although he struck no blow, still he is guilty as a principal, the only reasonable presumption being that both were acting with a common intent.—QUEEN v. HYDER JOLAHA, 6 W. R. 83. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Sep. 21, 1866.]

Murder: Prisoner convicted not of abetment of murder, but of causing disappearance of evidence.—Prisoner was present at a murder without being aware that such an act was to be committed. Through fear he not only did not interfere to prevent the commission of the crime, but joined the murderers in concealing the body. Held that he was guilty, not of abetment of murder, but causing the disappearance of evidence of a crime under s. 201 of the Penal Code. —QUEEN v. GOBURDHUN BERA, 6 W. R. 80. [Loch and Pundit, JJ. Oct. 4, 1866.]

Torture: Prisoners treated not as abettors, but as principals.—Where several prisoners were all concerned in a case of torture, and were prosecuting a common object, each was held guilty as a principal, and not as an abettor of others.—QUEEN v. TARINEE CHURN CHUTTOPADHYA, 7 W. R. 3. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Jan 3, 1867.]

Dacoity: Unlawful assembly living on the proceeds of.—Case of an unlawful assembly, the members of which were held guilty of an offence under s. 402 of the Penal Code on their own admission that they not only knew that the assembly was an assembly for the purpose of committing dacoity, but also that all the persons (including themselves) constituting the assembly lived on the proceeds of dacoity, and had no other means of living.—QUEEN v. KENDRA KAMAR, 7 W. R. 61. [Hobhouse, J. April 30, 1867.]

Registration Act: Abetment of false personation under the.—Three persons, who put up a fourth to personate one whose authority was required to complete a conveyance of immoveable property, were held guilty under s. 94 of the Registration Act (XX. of 1866).—QUEEN v. SOLEEMODDEEN, 7 W. R. 63. [Seton-Karr, J. May 6, 1867.]

Registration Act: Abettor may be punished more severely than principal.—Under s. 94, Act XX. of 1866, an abettor may be punished more severely than his principal can be.—QUEEN v. GOPAL PROSAD SEIN, 8 W. R. 16. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. June 15, 1867.]

Registration Act: Abetment of offence under. — Where A intended to register a deed, but was too ill to do so, and B, who was known to A, personated A, and had the deed registered in her name, it was held that in the absence of anything to prove that it was intended to defraud anybody, A was not guilty of cheating by personation under s. 419 of the Penal Code, but of an offence under s. 93 of the Registration Act (XX. of 1866). C and D, who abetted A, were convicted of an offence under s. 94 of the said Act XX.—LOOTHY BEWA, 11 W. R. 24; 2 B. L. R. A. Cr. 25. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. Mar. 31, 1869.]

Assault: Abetment of. — Where, of several persons constituting an unlawful assembly, some only are armed with sticks, and A, one of them, is not so armed, but picks up a stick and uses it, B (the master of A), who gave a general order to beat, is guilty of abetting the assault made by A.—QUEEN v. RASSOKOOLLAH, 12 W. R. 51. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. Sep. 2. 1869.]

Servant: When a master can be held criminally responsible for an offence committed by a.—To make a master criminally responsible for an offence committed by his servants, it must be shown that there has been some act or illegal omission on the part of the master whereby he abetted the offence, or some prior instigation or conspiracy. Evidence not admissible cannot be received as corroborative proof.—CROWN PROSECUTOR v. SHAMSUNDER, 1 N.-W. P. 310. [Pearson and Turner, JJ. Sep. 3, 1869.]

Information: When it is not an offence to omit to give information of commission of crime.—An omission to give information that a crime has been committed does not, under s. 107 of the Penal Code, amount to abetment, unless such omission involves a breach of a legal obligation. [See ss. 44 and 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882)]. — QUEEN v. KHADIM SHEIK, 4 B. L. R. A. Cr. 7. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov. 23, 1869.]

Ship: Destroying a ship on the high seas: Abetment in British India of such offence when committed at a greater distance than three miles from the coast.— The substantive law applicable to a British-born subject tried in the High Court of Judicature at Bombay for destroying a British ship on the high seas, at a distance of more than three miles from the shores of British India, is the English law, and not the Penal Code, notwithstanding the provisions of Stat. 30 and 31 Vict., c. 124, s. 11. The same substantive law is applicable to prisoners who conspire together in Bombay to destroy such ship on the high seas, and such ship is so destroyed in consequence. The procedure applicable in such cases is the ordinary criminal procedure of the High Court. The question whether the Indian Legislature has power to legislate with reference to offences committed on the high seas considered. There is not any Act of the Indian Legislature now in force which provides for the offence of destroying a ship when committed at a greater distance than three miles from the coast, or for the abetment in British India of such an offence so committed.—REG. v. ELMSTONE, WHITWELL, et al., 7 Bom. H. C. R. 89. [Westropp, C.J., and Bayley and Green, JJ. July 22, 30, 1870.]

Waging war: Abetment of.—The Sessions Court at Patna was held to have jurisdiction to try the offence of abetment of waging war against the Queen, though the waging of war did not take place in Patna, the rule of law as to abetment being that, where parties concert together and have a common object, the act of one of the parties, done in furtherance of the common object, and in pursuance of the concerted plan, is the act of the whole. The jurisdiction of the Sessions Court at Patna was not affected by the erroneous statement in the charge of the abetment having taken place at Calcutta, when the evidence was sufficient to show the abetment at Patna, such erroneous statement being an error or defect in the charge which is cured by s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882.—QUEEN v. AMEER KHAN, 17 W. R. 15; 9 B. L. R. 36. [Couch, C.J., and Jackson and Macpherson, JJ. Dec. 12, 1871.]

Abetment: Act need not be committed.—It is not necessary to constitute the offence of abetment that the act abetted should be committed.—DINONATH BUROOA, 18 W. R. 32. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 24, 1872.]

Abetment: Confession of principal not admissible against abettor even when both tried jointly.—S. 30 of the Evidence Act (I. of 1872) ought to be considered with great strictness, and the confession of one person is not admissible in evidence against another, although the two are jointly tried, if one is tried for the abetment of the offence for which the other is on his trial.—QUEEN v. JAFFER ALI, 19 W. R. 57. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. April 17, 1873.]

Abetment: Foreign subject, resident in foreign territory, abetting commission of offence committed in British territory.—Where a foreign subject, resident in foreign territory, instigated the commission of an offence which, in consequence, was committed in British territory, held that the instigation not having taken place in any district created by the Code of Criminal Procedure, the instigator was not amenable to the jurisdiction of a British Court established under that Code, s. 66.—REG. v. PIRTAI, 10 Bom. H. C R. 356. [Melvill and West, JJ. July 19, 1873.]

Abetment: Instigation depends upon the act actually done.—The offence of abetment by instigation depends upon the act which is actually done by the person whom he abets.—QUEEN v. IMAMDI BHOOYAH, 21 W. R. 8. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Dec. 1, 1873.]

Torture: Abetment of.—Where a head-constable, who knew that certain persons were likely to be tortured for the purpose of extorting confession, purposely kept out of the way, it was held that he was guilty of abetment under the words of s. 107 of the Penal Code, expl. 2.—QUEEN v. KALEE CHURN GANGOOLY, 21 W. R. 11. [Markby and Birch, JJ. Dec. 4. 1873.]

Incorrect record: Abetment of false preparation of.—S was charged with the preparation of a certain record, and was in the habit of preparing it from certain abstracts made and read to him by D. D made and read false abstracts, whereby an incorrect record was prepared. The Court was of opinion that D could not strictly be held to have committed the offence described in s. 218 of the Penal Code He was guilty, however, of abetment of the offence described in that section, and not the less so, that S had no guilty knowledge or intention in the matter.—QUEEN v. BRIJ MOHAN LAL, 7 N.-W. P. 134. [Pearson, J. Jan. 25, 1875.]

Illegal omission: Abetment by.—If a number of persons, assembled for any lawful purpose, suddenly quarrel with an intruder without any previous intention or design, they do not commit "riot" in the legal sense of the word. To prove abetment under s. 107, Penal Code, by "illegal omission," it would be necessary to show that the accused intentionally aided the commission of the offence by his non-interference.—KHAJAH NOORUL HOSSEIN alias KHAJA WAHED JAN v. FABRE-TONNERRE, 24 W. R. 26. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. July 12, 1875.]

Abetment: Conviction of abettor not dependent on conviction of principal.—The offence of abetment under the Penal Code is a substantive offence. The conviction of an abettor is, therefore, in no way dependent on the conviction of the principal.—REG v. MARUTI DADA, I. L. R., 1 Bom. 15. [West and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ. Oct 12, 1875.]

Fabricating false evidence: Abetment of.—M instigated Z to personate C, and to purchase in C's name certain stamped paper, in consequence of which the vendor of the stamped paper endorsed C's name on such paper as the purchaser of it. M acted with the intention that such endorsement might be used against C in a judicial proceeding. Held that the offence of fabricating false evidence had been actually committed, and that M was properly convicted of abetting the commission of such offence. Queen v. Ramsaran Chowbey (4 N.-W. P. 46) distinguished and observed on.—EMPRESS v. MULA, I. L. R., 2 All. 105. [Turner, J. Jan. 24, 1879.]

Food: When the supplying of, amounts to abetment.—The supplying of food to a person about to commit a crime is not necessarily an abetment of the crime; but if food were supplied in order that the criminal might go on a journey to the intended scene of the crime, or conceal himself while waiting for an opportunity to commit the crime, the supply of food would be in order to facilitate the commission of the crime, and might facilitate it.—In re LINGAM RAMANNA, I. L. R., 2 Mad 137. [Turner, C.J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J. May 3, 1880.]

When a person cannot be convicted of abetting the offence of instituting a false charge—There being no abetment of an offence after it has been committed, a person cannot be convicted of abetting the offence of instituting a false charge, on evidence which shows only that he gave evidence in support of a charge found to be false.—IN THE MATTER OF JUGUT MOHINI DASSI AND MADHU SUDHAN DUTT, 10 C. L. R 4. [McDonell and Tottenham, JJ. Dec. 13, 1881.]

Extortion: When village-chaukidar not liable as abettor of.—The mere fact that the offence of extortion under s. 384 of the Penal Code is committed in the presence of the village-chaukidar, without eliciting any disapproval on his part, will not render him liable as an abettor of the offence.—IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF GOPAL CHUNDER SIRDAR: GOPAL CHUNDER SIRDAR v. FOOLMONI BEWA, I. L. R., 8 Cal. 728, 11 C. L. R. 223. [McDonell and Field, JJ. April 20, 1882.]

Negligent act likely to spread infection of disease dangerous to life: Abetment of.—K, knowing that he was suffering from cholera, entered a train as a passenger without informing the Railway Company's servants of his condition. M, knowing of K's condition, bought K's ticket, and travelled with him. Held that K was properly convicted under s. 269 of the Penal Code of negligently doing an act which was, and which he had reason to believe was, likely to spread infection of a disease dangerous to life, and M of abetment of K's offence.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KRISHNAPPA, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 276. [Turner, C.J., and Kernan, J. Dec. 14, 1883.]

Bigamy: Abetment of.—A was baptized in infancy into the Roman Catholic Church, but subsequently relapsed, with the rest of her family, into Hinduism, and was married to a Hindu. Her Hindu husband since discarded her, and alleged that he would not have married her if he had known that she had been baptized. A was subsequently readmitted into the Roman Catholic Church, and married by B, a priest, to a Roman Catholic during the lifetime of her Hindu husband. Held that A's marriage with the Hindu was subsisting and valid at the time of her Christian marriage; that she was guilty of the offence of bigamy; and that B was guilty of abetting that offence. Lopes v. Lopes (I. L. R., 12 Cal. 709) discussed.—In re MILLARD, I. L. R., 10 Mad. 218. [Collins, C.J., and Parker, J. April 1, 1887.]

Illegal omission.—Mere non-feasance will not generally amount to an illegal omission (1. Russ. 91); but circumstances may exist where mere non-feasance towards a child of tender years amounts to an illegal omission. So a refusal or neglect to provide sufficient food or other necessaries for an infant of tender years, unable to provide for or take care of itself, by a party obliged by duty or contract to provide for it, amounts to an illegal omission.—1 RUSS. 80.

Abetment in British India by British subject of offence committed in foreign territory.—An abetment in British India by a British subject of an offence committed in foreign territory is not an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860), and cannot, therefore, be tried by a Court in British India. Regina v. Elmstone (7 Bom. H. C. R. 89) and Empress v. Moorga Chetty (I. L. R, 5 Bom. 338, 347), followed. — QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GANPATRAO RAMCHANDRA, I. L. R., 19 Bom. 105. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. Mar. 8, 1894.] But now see s. 108A, infra.

Letter: Instigating another to the commission of an offence by means of a—Where one person instigates another to the commission of an offence by means of a letter sent through the post, the offence of abetment by instigation is completed so soon as the contents of such letter become known to the addressee, and such offence is triable at the place where such letter is received.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SHEO DIAL MAL, I. L. R., 16 All. 389. [Edge, C.J., and Tyrrell, J. May 25, 1894.]

Abetment by policeman who stands by and acquiesced in an assault by another policeman to extort confession.—A policeman who stands by, acquiescing in an assault on a prisoner committed by another policeman for the purpose of extorting a confession, is guilty of abetment of an offence under s. 330 of the Indian Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. LATIFKHAN, I. L. R., 20 Bom. 394. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. Mar. 12, 1895.]

Accessory after the fact.—Under the Indian Law no one is liable for being an accessory after the fact.—RAKHAL NIKARI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, 2 C. W. N. 81. [Ghose and Rampini, JJ. Aug. 24, 1897, and Trevelyan, J. Sep. 1, 1897.]

108. A person abets an offence who abets either the commission of an offence, or the commission of an act which would be an offence, if committed by a person capable by law of committing an offence, with the same intention or knowledge as that of the abettor.

Abettor.

Explanation 1.—The abetment of the illegal omission of an act may amount to an offence, although the abettor may not himself be bound to do that act.

Explanation 2.—To constitute the offence of abetment, it is not necessary that the act abetted should be committed, or that the effect requisite to constitute the offence should be caused.

Illustrations.

(a.) A instigates B to murder C. B refuses to do so. A is guilty of abetting B to commit murder.

(b.) A instigates B to murder D. B, in pursuance of the instigation, stabs D. D recovers from the wound. A is guilty of instigating B to commit murder.

Explanation 3.—It is not necessary that the person abetted should be capable by law of committing an offence, or that he should have the same guilty intention or knowledge as that of the abettor, or any guilty intention or knowledge.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, with a guilty intention, abets a child or a lunatic to commit an act which would be an offence if committed by a person capable by law of committing an offence, and having the same intention as A. Here A, whether the act be committed or not, is guilty of abetting an offence.

(b.) A, with the intention of murdering Z, instigates B, a child under seven years of age, to do an act which causes Z's death. B, in consequence of the abetment, does the act in the absence of A, and thereby causes Z's death. Here, though B was not capable by law of committing an offence, A is liable to be punished in the same manner as if B had been capable by law of committing an offence, and had committed murder, and he is, therefore, subject to the punishment of death.

(c.) A instigates B to set fire to a dwelling-house B, in consequence of the unsoundness of his mind, being incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law, sets fire to the house in consequence of A's instigation. B has committed no offence, but A is guilty of abetting the offence of setting fire to a dwelling-house, and is liable to the punishment provided for that offence.

(d.) A, intending to cause a theft to be committed, instigates B to take property belonging to Z out of Z's possession. A induces B to believe that the property belongs to A. B takes the property out of Z's possession in good faith, believing it to be A's property. B, acting under this misconception, does not take dishonestly, and therefore does not commit theft. But A is guilty of abetting theft, and is liable to the same punishment as if B had committed theft.

Explanation 4.—The abetment of an offence being an offence, the abetment of such an abetment is also an offence.

Illustration.

A instigates B to instigate C to murder Z. B accordingly instigates C to murder Z, and C commits that offence in consequence of B's instigation. B is liable to be punished for his offence with the punishment for murder; and, as A instigated B to commit the offence, A is also liable to the same punishment.

Explanation 5.—It is not necessary to the commission of the offence of abetment by conspiracy that the abettor should concert the offence with the person who commits it It is sufficient if he engage in the conspiracy in pursuance of which the offence is committed.

Illustration.

A concerts with B a plan for poisoning Z. It is agreed that A shall administer the poison. B then explains the plan to C, mentioning that a third person is to administer the poison, but without mentioning A's name. C agrees to procure the poison, and procures and delivers it to B for the purpose of its being used in the manner explained. A administers the poison. Z dies in consequence. Here, though A and C have not conspired together, yet C has been engaged in the conspiracy in pursuance of which Z has been murdered. C has, therefore, committed the offence defined in this section, and is liable to the punishment for murder.

There being no intention to cause death, the offence committed may be grievous hurt, and not murder, &c.—The offences of murder and of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, each supposes an intention or knowledge of likelihood of the causing of death. In the absence of such intention or knowledge, the offence committed may be the offence of causing grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. BHADOO PORAMANICK, 4 W. R. 23. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov 10, 1865.]

Abetment of grievous hurt, and not abetment of murder.—The prisoners having abetted an assault, and murder having been committed, held, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, that they were guilty of abetment of grievous hurt, and not abetment of murder.—QUEEN v. GOLUCK CHUNG, 5 W. R. 75 [Campbell and Macpherson, JJ. April 28, 1866.]

Acts of subsequent abetment.—S. 108 of the Penal Code does not contemplate any acts of subsequent abetment, or provide for the punishment of such offences, except when they are such as are defined in ss. 212 to 218.—QUEEN v. PAUN PUNDAH, 18 W. R. 28; 9 B. L. R. App. 16. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 11, 1872.]

Abetment by instigation.—The offence of abetment by instigation depends upon the intention of the person who abets, and not upon the act which is actually done by the person whom he abets.—QUEEN v. IMAMDI BHOOYAH, 21 W. R. 8. Phear and Morris, JJ. Dec. 1, 1873.

Abetment by conspiracy.—Under expl. 5, s. 108 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary to the commission of the offence of abetment by conspiracy that the abettor shall concert the offence with the person who commits it. It is sufficient if he engage in the conspiracy in pursuance of which the offence is committed.—QUEEN v. GOBIND DOBEY, 21 W. R. 35. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 27, 1874.]

Theft · Abetment of theft with the knowledge and consent of owner.—A sought the aid of B with the intention of committing a theft of the property of B's master. B, with the knowledge and consent of his master, and for the purpose of procuring A's punishment, aided A in carrying out his object. On the prosecution of A for theft, held that, as the property removed was so taken with the knowledge of the owner, the offence of theft had not been committed; held, further, that it is not necessary to an indictment for the abetment of an abetment of an offence to show that such offence was actually committed.—EMPRESS v. TROYLUCKHO NATH CHOWDHRY, I. L. R., 4 Cal. 366 : 3 C. L. R. 525. [Jackson and White, JJ. Nov. 12, 1878.]

108A A person abets an offence within the meaning of this Code who, in British India, abets the commission of any act without and beyond British India which would constitute an offence if committed in British India.

Abetment in British India of offences outside it.

* S. 108A has been added by the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act (IV. of 1898), s 3. As to the authority for instituting prosecutions under s. 108A, see the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898), s. 196.

A, in British India, instigates B, a foreigner in Goa, to commit a murder in Goa. A is guilty of abetting murder.

Selling minor for prostitution: when the act does not amount to principal offence, or an attempt or abetment thereof.—A minor girl under the age of sixteen years was taken by accused No. 1, under the direction of accused No. 2, from Sholapur to Tuljapur (in the Nizam's territory), and there dedicated to the goddess Amba, with intent or knowing it to be likely that the minor would be used for purposes of prostitution. The District Magistrate of Sholapur convicted accused No. 1 of an offence under s 372 and accused No. 2 of abetment of the offence under ss. 372 and 108A of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced them each to six months' rigorous imprisonment. Held that, as the offence of the disposal of the minor took place out of British India, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the offence, in the absence of a certificate of the Political Agent or the sanction of the Local Government as required by s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898). Held, also, that accused No. 2 was not guilty of abetment, and s. 108A of the Indian Penal Code had no application to the present case. Mere intention not followed by any act cannot constitute any offence, and an indirect preparation which does not amount to an act which amounts to a commencement of the offence does not constitute either a principal offence or an attempt or abetment of the same. The intention of either of the accused while they were staying at Sholapur did not constitute any offence, and their removal with the girl at Tuljapur did not by itself constitute an abetment.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BAKU, I. L. R., 24 Bom. 287. [Ranade and Crowe, JJ. Oct. 9, 1899.]

Punishment of abetment if the act abetted is committed in consequence, and where no express provision is made for its punishment.

109. Whoever abets any offence shall, if the act abetted is committed in consequence of the abetment, and no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of such abetment, be punished with the punishment provided for the offence.

Court by which offence abetted is triable.
Cog. if offence abetted cog.
According as warrant or summons may issue for offence abetted.
According as offence abetted is bailable or not.
According a offence abetted is compoundable or not.

Explanation.—An act or offence is said to be committed in consequence of abetment when it is committed in consequence of the instigation, or in pursuance of the conspiracy, or with the aid which constitutes the abetment.

Illustrations.

(a.) A offers a bribe to B, a public servant, as a reward for showing A some favour in the exercise of B's official functions. B accepts the bribe. A has abetted the offence defined in section 161.

(b.) A instigates B to give false evidence. B, in consequence of the instigation, commits that offence. A is guilty of abetting that offence, and is liable to the same punishment as B.

(c.) A and B conspire to poison Z. A, in pursuance of the conspiracy, procures the poison, and delivers it to B, in order that he may administer it to Z. B, in pursuance of the conspiracy, administers the poison to Z in A's absence, and thereby causes Z's death. Here B is guilty of murder. A is guilty of abetting that offence by conspiracy, and is liable to the punishment for murder.

S. 109 contemplates that the act abetted has been committed in consequence of the abetment.—S. 109 of the Penal Code contemplates that the act abetted should be committed in consequence of the abetment. The term "fabrication" in s. 193 refers to the fabrication of false documentary evidence to be used in a suit, so that, to convict under this section, it is essential to aver and to prove that the fabricated documents were intended for that purpose. The illegal concealment, by act or omission, contemplated by s. 120 of the Code, has reference to the existence of a design on the part of third persons to

* Special provisions have been made for the punishment of abetment of certain offences by ss. 121, 121A, 125, and 164 of this Code. Sections 131-135, 138, 236, 305, and 306, provide punishment for the abetment of acts which are themselves not punishable under the Code.

fabricate evidence.—QUEEN v. RAJCOOMAR BANERJEE, 1 Ind. Jur. O. S. 105. [Trevor and Seton-Karr, JJ. Sep. 27, 1862.]

Abetment of issue of a false certificate of summons.—Abetment of the issue of a false certificate of summons. Although there was no chaukidar in the village of the name appearing on the receipt acknowledging due service, the prisoner was acquitted in the absence of proof of guilty knowledge or belief, it being probable that he (an utter stranger in the village) was deceived by the villagers. —QUEEN v. HISSAMUDDEEN, 3 W. R. 37. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. June 27, 1863.]

Abetment of abduction: Wrongful confinement: Sentences for both offences set aside: Sentence for abetment only upheld.—The prisoners having been sentenced for abetment of abduction of a woman under ss. 109 and 498 of the Penal Code, and for wrongful confinement of her under s. 343, held that both sentences could not stand, and that, as the essence of the case was abduction, the prisoners, as abettors therein, should be punished for it alone.—QUEEN v. ISHWAR CHUNDER JOGI, W. R. Sp., 21. [Loch and Seton-Karr, JJ. April 12, 1864.]

How charges of abetment should be framed.—As the offences with abetting which the prisoners were severally charged were distinct, the abetment of each should have formed separate heads of the charge in accordance with the provisions of s. 240 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; while to render s. 109 of the Indian Penal Code applicable, it should have been stated in the charge and proved in evidence that the act abetted was committed in consequence of the abetment of the accused.—2 W. R. Cr. L. 8, No. 58, Jan. 17, 1865. (See also 1 W. R. Cr. L. 9, No. 1093, Dec. 20, 1864.)

Where the act with the abetment of which the prisoner was charged, was not committed, the fact should be mentioned in the charge.—That the act, with the abetment of which the prisoner was charged, was not committed in consequence of the abetment, should have been specified in the charge, in order to bring it within the terms of s. 116 of the Penal Code.—2 W. R. Cr. L. 1, No. 12, Jan. 6, 1865.

How a charge of abetment of miscarriage should be framed.—In order to render Ramchand Doss subject to the full punishment for the offence abetted, by the application of s. 109 of the Penal Code, the charge against him should have stated the act abetted [i.e., causing the miscarriage of Chund Kaiburtin] was committed in consequence of the abetment of the accused Ramchand Doss, no express provision being made for the punishment of such abetment. —3 W. R. Cr. L. 5, No. 478, May 19, 1865.

Abetment by keeping watch while a murder was being committed: Charge should be under s. 114, if not under s 109.—If the abetment charged was committed by keeping watch at the door when the murder was being committed, the prisoner should have been charged under s. 114 of the Penal Code, not under s. 109, for it could hardly be said that the murder took place in consequence of such abetment.—6 W. R. Cr. L. 4, No. 1410, Oct. 9, 1866.

Abetment of cheating by personation.—Where a person represented a girl to be the daughter of one woman when she was within his knowledge the daughter of another woman, held that he was guilty of cheating by personation under s. 416 of the Penal Code, and that it was unnecessary to bring in s. 109 relating to abetment.—QUEEN v. DHANPUT OJHAH, 7 W. R. 51. [Glover, J. April 5, 1867.]

Abetment under Registration Act.—Act XIV. of 1866 does not provide for the punishment of abetting an offence under that Act. Under s. 109 of the Penal Code, the abetment must be of an offence punishable under that Act, and not of an offence punishable under a distinct and special law. —QUEEN v. RAMLUGUN LALL MOONSHEE, 7 W. R. 54. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. April 8, 1867.] [But the law has now been altered. See definition of "offence" in s. 40, supra, which includes abetment of offences committed under special or Local Acts.]

Abetment of grievous hurt.—Where A ordered B and C to seize and forcibly take D in the contemplation of an assault upon D, and D was so beaten and tortured as to have died in consequence, held that A was guilty at least of abetting the commission of voluntarily causing grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. DOORGESSUR SURMAH, 7 W. R. 61. [Hobhouse, J. April 30, 1867.]

Abetment of giving false evidence.—Where C falsely represented himself to be U, and the writer of a document signed by U and T, knowing that C was not U, and had not written such document, adduced C as U and as the writer of that document. Held that T ought to have been convicted on a charge of abetting the giving of false evidence.—QUEEN v. CHUNDI CHURN NAUTH, 8 W. R. 5. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. June 4, 1867.]

Under the Registration Act (XX. of 1866) an abettor may be punished more severely than the principal.—Under s. 94, Act XX. of 1866, an abettor may be punished more severely than his principal can be.—

QUEEN v. GOPAL PROSAD SEIN, 8 W. R. 16. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. June 15. 1867.]

Abetment of theft.—A prisoner who consented to form one of a party who committed theft, and resiled from his agreement, but was present at the commission of theft, does not come within cl. 2, s. 107, Penal Code, and ought not to have been convicted of the theft, but of the abetment thereof under cl. 3, s. 107, and s. 109, Penal Code, read together. —QUEEN v. BOODHUN MOOSHUR, 8 W. R. 78. Glover, J. Oct. 30, 1867.]

Where abettor should be tried —"The abetment may be enquired into or determined in any district within which the abettor has done anything for abetting the commission of the offence." — QUEEN v. AMEER KHAN, 17 W. R. 15; 9 B. L. R. 36. [Couch, C.J., and Jackson, and Macpherson, JJ. Dec. 21, 1871.]

Abetment of theft.—The carrying-off of certain buffaloes belonging to the complainant by order of the accused, and the retention of them in the custody of the latter's servant, were held to amount to an abetment of theft as defined in the Penal Code.—TARINEE PROSAD BANERJEE, 18 W. R. 8. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. June 14, 1872.]

What constitutes abetment.—It is not necessary to constitute the offence of abetment that the act abetted should be committed.—DINONATH BUROOA, 18 W. R. 32. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 24, 1872.]

Abetment of bigamy.—The elder paternal uncle of a Mahomedan girl, a minor, disposed of her in marriage after he knew she had previously been given in lawful marriage by his younger brother. Held that the act did not, per se, constitute a criminal offence, even though the second marriage were valid, it appearing that the accused was the only person concerned in the second marriage who knew of the first, and that the girl was not present. A and B were indicted under ss. 109 and 495 of the Penal Code—A for giving his niece (a minor) in marriage, she being then married, and B for aiding therein. The girl was not present at the marriage, and there was no evidence to show that A had conspired with any person but B, whom the jury acquitted. Held that the acquittal of B involved the acquittal of A.—IN THE MATTER OF ABDOOL KURREEM v. EMPRESS, 3 C. L. R. 81: I L. R., 4 Cal. 10. [White and Prinsep, JJ. July 19, 1878.]

Abetment of fabrication of false evidence.—M instigated Z to personate C, and to purchase in C's name certain stamped paper, in consequence of which the vendor of the stamped paper endorsed C's name on such paper as the purchaser of it. M acted with the intention that such endorsement might be used against C in a judicial proceeding. Held that the offence of fabricating false evidence had been actually committed, and that M was properly convicted of abetting the commission of such offence. Queen v. Ramsaran Chowbey (4 N.-W. P. 46) distinguished and observed on.—EMPRESS v. MULA, I. L. R., 2 All. 150. [Turner, J. Jan. 24, 1879.]

Abetment of bigamy.—A member of the caste of Ajanya Rajput Guzars, residing in Khandesh, executed a deed of divorce to his wife. The Court held on the evidence that the deed was proved, and that in this caste a husband was, for a sufficient reason, such as incontinence, allowed to divorce his wife; that the deed in the present case had not been executed for a sufficient reason, and that, consequently, the parties entering into a second marriage were guilty of an offence under s. 494 of the Penal Code; and that the priest who officiated at that marriage was an abettor under ss. 494 and 109. Mere consent of persons to be present at an illegal marriage, or their presence in pursuance of such consent, or the grant of accommodation in a house for the marriage, does not necessarily constitute abetment of such marriage.—EMPRESS v. UMI, I. L. R., 6 Bom. 126. [Melvill and Kemball, JJ. Jan. 11, 1882.]

Abetment of kidnapping.—A mother cannot have a right to the custody of her legitimate children adversely to the father. Ordinarily the custody of the mother is the custody of the father, and any removal of the children from place to place by the mother ought to be taken to be consistent with the right of the father as guardian, and not as a taking out of his keeping. But where a Hindu woman left her husband's house, taking with her her infant daughter, and went to the house of A, and on the same day the daughter was married to B, the brother of A, without the father's consent, it was held that A was rightly convicted under ss 109 and 363 of the Penal Code of abetting the offence of kidnapping.—IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF PRAN KRISHNA SURMA: EMPRESS v. PRAN KRISHNA SURMA, I. L. R., 8 Cal. 969; 10 C. L. R. 6. [Wilson and Macpherson, JJ. June 20, 1882.]

Abetment of committing public nuisance.—The lessee of a house, who permitted disorderly people to use it for gambling, and thereby caused annoyance to the public, was convicted of an offence under the Penal Code, s. 290. It appeared, however, that the accused had not engaged the house with the object of letting it out as a gaming-house. Held that the conviction was right —QUEEN-EMPRESS v. THANDAVARAYUDU, I. L. R., 14 Mad. 364. [Muttusami Ayyar and Wilkinson, JJ. Jan. 28, 1891.]

An abetment in British India by a British subject of an offence committed in foreign territory.—An abetment in British India by a British subject of an offence committed in foreign territory is not an offence punishable under the Penal Code, and cannot, therefore, be tried by a Court in British India Regina v Elmstone (7 Bom. H. C. Rep. 89, Cr. Ca.) and Empress v. Moorga Chetty (I. L. R., 5 Mad. 338) followed. The accused, a Native Indian subject of Her Majesty, was committed to the Court of Session for abetting the commission of murder or of rioting under ss. 302 and 147 of the Penal Code. The alleged abetment consisted of words spoken in British territory by the accused, inciting certain Portuguese subjects to kill one Bhana if he attempted to remove the produce of certain lands situate in the Portuguese territory of Daman. A disturbance afterwards occurred at Daman in connection with this matter in which one man was killed, and another wounded. Thereupon the Governor-General of Portuguese India moved the Government of Bombay to bring the accused to justice as the instigator of the murder The Government of Bombay, being of opinion that s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was applicable to the case, passed a Resolution in the Political Department directing the District Magistrate to take the necessary action in the matter. The District Magistrate thereupon committed the accused to the Court of Session on a charge of abetment of murder or of rioting. Held, quashing the commitment, that the alleged abetment was not an offence punishable under the Penal Code, and that, therefore, the Sessions Court had no jurisdiction to try the accused. Held, also, that s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had no application to the present case, the alleged offence of abetment not having been committed outside British India.—QUEEN-EMPRERS v. GANPATRAO RAMCHANDRA, I. L. R., 19 Bom. 105. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. March 8, 1894.]

Abetment of an offence: Sanction to prosecute.—Though sanction to prosecute is necessary in cases falling under the sections of the Penal Code set forth in s. 195, Criminal Procedure Code, no such sanction is required previous to the prosecution of a person charged with the abetment of such offences.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ABDUL KADAR SHERIFF SAHEB, I. L. R., 20 Mad. 8. [Subramania Ayyar and Davies, JJ. Sep. 14, 1896.]

Abetment of forgery by writing out the deed.—The accused was not only the writer, but also took an active part in the preparation, of a document the alleged executant of which was dead before the date of the document, and the person who really had an interest under the document was convicted under s. 82 of the Registration Act (III. of 1877). But evidence was wanting to show that the accused took any part in the forgery of the name of the alleged executant. Held that the accused could not be convicted of the offence of forgery under s. 467 of the Penal Code. There being nothing on the record to show that the accused was a party to, or took any part in, the actual forgery of the document, or that he was present on the occasion when it was forged, the proper section to convict him under would be s. 467 read with s. 109, that is, of abetment of forgery, and not s. 467 read with s. 114 An unregistered document, though it may not be a valuable security until the registration is completed, still "purports" to be a valuable security within the meaning of s. 467 of the Penal Code. Queen-Empress v. Ramasami (I. L. R., 12 Mad 148) approved of.—KASHI NATH NAEK v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 25 Cal. 207. [Ghose and Wilkins, JJ. July 6, 1897.]

The following note equally applies to ss. 110 and 111: Court by which offence abetted is triable. Cog. if offence abetted cog. According as warrant or summons may issue for offence abetted. According as offence abetted is bailable or not. According as offence abetted is compoundable or not.

110. Whoever abets the commission of an offence shall, if the person abetted does the act with a different intention or knowledge from that of the abettor, be punished with the punishment provided for the offence which would have been committed if the act had been done with the intention or knowledge of the abettor and with no other.

Punishment of abetment if person abetted does act with different intention from that of abettor.

111. When an act is abetted, and a different act is done, the abettor is liable for the act done, in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had directly abetted it:

Liability of abettor when one act abetted, and different act done.

* As to the application of s. 110 to offences under special or local laws, see s. 40, supra.

Provided the act done was a probable consequence of the abetment, and was committed under the influence of the instigation, or with the aid, or in pursuance of the conspiracy which constituted the abetment.

(a.) A instigates a child to put poison into the food of Z, and gives him poison for that purpose. The child, in consequence of the instigation, by mistake, puts the poison into the food of Y, which is by the side of that of Z. Here, if the child was acting under the influence of A's instigation, and the act done was, under the circumstances, a probable consequence of the abetment, A is liable in the same manner, and to the same extent, as if he had instigated the child to put the poison into the food of Y.

(b.) A instigates B to burn Z's house. B sets fire to the house, and at the same time commits theft of property there. A, though guilty of abetting the burning of the house, is not guilty of abetting the theft; for the theft was a distinct act, and not a probable consequence of the burning.

(c.) A instigates B and C to break into an inhabited house at midnight for the purpose of robbery, and provides them with arms for that purpose. B and C break into the house, and, being resisted by Z, one of the inmates, murder Z. Here, if the murder was the probable consequence of the abetment, A is liable to the punishment provided for murder.

Abetment of assault: Murder resulted Conviction for grievous hurt.—The prisoners having abetted an assault, and murder having been committed, it was held, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, that they were guilty of grievous hurt, but not of abetment of murder.—QUEEN v. GOLUCK CHUNG, 5 W. R 75. [Campbell and Macpherson, JJ. April 28, 1866.]

Abetment of grievous hurt.—Where A ordered B and C to seize and forcibly take D in the contemplation of an assault upon D, and D was so beaten and tortured as to have died in consequence, held that A was guilty at least of abetting the commission of voluntarily causing grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. DOORGESSUR SURMAH, 7 W. R. 61. [Hobhouse, J. April 30, 1867.]

Abetment of robbery—M and C were proved to have connived at a robbery in which excessive violence was used, resulting in the death of the persons robbed. The Sessions Judge convicted M and C of abetment of murder, on the ground that the death was "a probable consequence of the intention known and abetted by them." Held that the test of guilt in charges of abetment must always be whether, having regard to the immediate object of the instigation or conspiracy, the act done by the principal is one which, according to ordinary experience and common sense, the abettor must have foreseen as probable, and that, having regard both to the strictness of the tests which should be applied to the interpretation of a penal statute, and especially of a section such as s 111 of the Penal Code, and also to the necessary difficulty of questions as to the state of a man's mind at a particular moment, it could not, in the present case, be said that, because the accused knew of, and connived at, the intended robbery, they must be presumed to have foreseen that such excessive violence as was used was probable.—EMPRESS v. MATHURA DAS, I. L. R., 6 All. 491. [Straight, Offg. C J. June 27, 1884.]

112. If the act for which the abettor is liable under the last preceding section is committed in addition to the act abetted, and constitutes a distinct offence, the abettor is liable to punishment for each of the offences.

Abettor when liable to cumulative punishment for act abetted, and for act done.

the distress and the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, B is liable to punishment for both these offences; and, if A knew that B was likely voluntarily to cause grievous hurt in resisting the distress, A will also be liable to punishment for each of the offences.

Abetment of house-trespass.—A entered the house of B without the latter's permission, and committed adultery with B's wife. Held that A could be separately convicted of, and punished for, both the adultery and house-trespass, as they were distinct offences; but that, under the circumstances, B's wife was by law incapable of committing abetment of the house-trespass.—CROWN v. SHEIKH MUNGLI, Panj. Rec., No. 5 of 1871.

118. When an act is abetted with the intention on the part of the abettor of causing a particular effect, and an act for which the abettor is liable in consequence of the abetment causes a different effect from that intended by the abettor, the abettor is liable for the effect caused in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had abetted the act with the intention of causing that effect; provided he knew that the act abetted was likely to cause that effect.

114. Whenever any person, who, if absent, would be liable to be punished as an abettor, is present when the act or offence for which he would be punishable in consequence of the abetment is committed, he shall be deemed to have committed such act or offence.

Abettor present when offence is committed.

Charge.—"The charge should have set forth that, as the prisoner was present abetting the abduction of Mussamut Bhoola with intent that she might be compelled to marry ——against her will, he, under s. 114 of the Penal Code, committed the said abduction—an offence punishable under s. 366 of the Penal Code, and within," &c.—3 W. R., Cr. L. 9, No. 518 of 1865.

Principals cannot also be punished as abettors.—Persons punished as principals cannot also be punished for abetment of the same offence.—QUEEN v. JEETOO CHOWDHRY, 4 W. R. 23. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov. 8, 1865.]

Abetment of grievous hurt, and abetment of riot, after conviction of both offences as principals.—Held that the prisoners could not be convicted of abetment of grievous hurt, and of abetment of riot, after having been convicted of both charges as principals. As, however, the evidence credited by the jury was held by the High Court to support a conviction of culpable homicide, and as the prisoners, even on their conviction on the lesser charge of grievous hurt, might have been sentenced to a much heavier punishment than had been passed on them, their punishment was not reduced.—QUEEN v. RAMNARAIN JOSH, 4 W. R. 37. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Dec 21, 1865.]

Bigamy and abetment of bigamy.—In a case of bigamy and abetment of bigamy, the High Court observed that the woman (who was the principal) and the two men (who were the abettors) should have been charged in separate heads of the charge, since the former was charged actually with bigamy, and the latter as principals of the second degree by reason of their having been present, abetting the commission of that offence under s. 114 of the Penal Code.—5 W. R., Cr. L. 5, No. 243 of 1866.

* As to the application of ss. 114 and 115 to offences under special or local laws, see s. 40, supra.

Abetment, while present, of forgery of valuable document.—How a Judge should charge the jury in a case of abetment, while present, of the forgery of a valuable document.—QUEEN v. JEHAN BUKSH, 5 W. R. 68. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. April 16, 1866.]

Disappearance of evidence of murder: Abetment of murder unsustainable.—Prisoner was present at a murder without being aware that such an act was to be committed. Through fear, he not only did not interfere to prevent the commission of the crime, but joined the murderers in concealing the body. Held that he was guilty, not of abetment of murder, but of causing the disappearance of evidence of a crime under s. 201, Penal Code. —REG. v. GOBURDHUN BERA, 6 W. R. 80. Loch and Pundit, JJ. Oct. 4, 1866.

Keeping a watch while murder was being committed.—When a prisoner kept watch at a door while a murder was being committed inside, he should be charged under s. 114 (and not under s. 109) of the Penal Code, for it could hardly be said that the murder took place in consequence of such abetment.—6 W. R., Cr. L. 4, No. 1410 of 1866.

Torture · Principal in, and not as abettor of.—Where several prisoners were all concerned in a case of torture, and were prosecuting a common object, each was held guilty as a principal, and not as an abettor of others.—QUEEN v. TARINEE CHURN CHUTTOPADHYA, 7 W. R. 3. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Jan. 3. 1867.]

What to be made out where a prisoner is to be brought under s. 114.—In order to bring a prisoner within s. 114 of the Penal Code, it is necessary first to make out the circumstances which constitute abetment, so that, "if absent," he would have been "liable to be punished as an abettor," and then to show that he was also present when the offence was committed.—QUEEN v. MUSSAMUT NIRUNI, 7 W. R. 49. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. Mar. 28, 1867.]

Carrying off a crop: Offenders guilty of substantive offence under s. 378 — Where a Court finds that parties came with a number of armed men, and carried off a crop, the finding amounts to that of a forcible carrying off without the consent of the owner. Even if they took no part in the actual taking, they must, with reference to s. 114, Penal Code, be considered guilty of the substantive offence under s. 378.—QUEEN v. SHIB CHUNDER MUNDLE, 8 W. R. 59. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 5, 1867.]

Abettor, if present, is to be admitted to have committed the offence, though another actually committed it.—According to s. 114 of the Penal Code, if the nature of the act constitutes abetment, the abettor, if present, is to be deemed to have committed the offence, though in point of fact another actually committed it. S. 114 of the Penal Code simply provides for the punishment of what the English law calls principals in the second degree. A person present, abetting an offence, is to be deemed to have committed the offence, though he does not, in fact, do so any more than a principal in the second degree does. Hence, "all who are present aiding and assisting a man to commit a rape are principal offenders in the second degree, whether they be men or women" (1 Russ. 905); and hence Lord Audley (3 Howell's State Trials 401) was convicted as a principal of a rape on his own wife, because he aided another to ravish her. There are several modes of abetment defined in the Penal Code One is instigating another to commit an offence. If A instigates B to murder Z, he commits abetment, if absent, he is punishable as an abettor; and if the offence is committed, then under s. 109; if present, he is, by s. 114, to be deemed to have committed the offence, and is punishable as a principal. Another mode of abetment is by intentionally aiding, by any act or illegal omission, the doing of an offence. A aids B to murder Z; if absent, he is punishable as an abettor, and may be liable under s. 109; if present, then he is to be deemed as much to have committed the offence as if he had struck the fatal blow. The meaning of s. 114 is that, if the nature of the act done constitutes abetment, then, if present, the abettor is to be deemed to have committed the offence, though in point of fact another actually committed it.—PRO., Mar. 8, 1869, 4 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 37.

Abettor, if present, should be tried for the same offence as principal.—A young Brahman widow was confined of a child. The chief constable of police acting, as he stated, on information that the accused was about to kill a baby, went to search her house with a number of men, and found her lying on the first floor, and discovered on the second floor a living new-born child wrapped up in a cloth with a cooking pot turned over it. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused of attempt to murder. The High Court on appeal reversed the conviction, on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to support it. It was also held in this case that the chief con-stable's statement, that he "had information that the accused was about to kill the baby," was most improperly admitted as evidence against the accused. Action of the police censured. When a person abets the commission of an offence, and is present at the time when it is committed, he should be tried, under s. 114 of the Penal Code, for the same offence as the principal.—REG. v. CHIMA, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 164. [Gibbs and West, JJ. July 6, 1871.]

Abettor when present should be tried under s. 114.—When a person abets the commission of an offence, and is present at the time when it is committed, he should be tried, under s. 114 of the Indian Penal Code, for the same offence as the principal.—REG. v. CHIMA, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 164. [Gibbs and West, JJ. July 6, 1871.]

Abettor present when mischief by fire committed.—S. 114 (and not s. 149) was held to apply to a case where, upon a charge of mischief by fire, the prisoner admitted that he was an abettor, and that he was present at the time the offence was committed.—QUEEN v. PEER MAHOMED, 17 W. R. 52. [Couch, C.J., and Ainslie, J. April 17, 1872.]

Abetment of hook-swinging.—Where, by direction of Government, the Magistrate promulgated an order under s. 144, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, directing all persons to abstain from hook-swinging, or other self-torture in public, and from the abetment thereof, and no such order was upon the record, the High Court annulled the conviction of the prisoners by the Deputy Magistrate under ss. 188, 114, Penal Code, for having knowingly disobeyed that order.—IN THE MATTER OF DWARICK MISSER, 18 W. R. 30. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 19, 1872.]

Abetment must continue down to time of commission of offence.—If an abettor of a crime is, on account of his presence at its commission, to be charged under s. 114 of the Penal Code as principal, his abetment must continue down to the time of the commission of the offence. If he distinctly withdraws at any moment before the final act is done, the offence is not committed with his continuing abetment.—REG. v. AMIRTA GOVINDA, 10 Bom. H. C. R. 497. West and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ. Dec. 17, 1873.]

Abetment of bigamy.—A was baptized in infancy into the Roman Catholic Church, but subsequently relapsed with the rest of her family into Hinduism, and was married to a Hindu. Her Hindu husband since discarded her, and alleged that he would not have married her if he had known that she had been baptized. A was subsequently re-admitted into the Roman Catholic Church, and married by B, a priest, to a Roman Catholic during the lifetime of her Hindu husband. Held that A's marriage with the Hindu was subsisting and valid at the time of her Christian marriage; that she was guilty of the offence of bigamy; and that B was guilty of abetting that offence. Lopes v. Lopes (I. L. R., 12 Cal. 706) discussed.—In re MILLARD, I. L. R., 10 Mad. 218. [Collins, C.J., and Parker, J. April 1, 1887.]

Abetment of forgery by writing out the deed.—The accused was not only the writer, but also took an active part in the preparation, of a document the alleged executant of which was dead before the date of the document, and the person who really had an interest under the document was convicted under s. 82 of the Registration Act (III. of 1877). But evidence was wanting to show that the accused took any part in the forgery of the name of the alleged executant. Held that the accused could not be convicted of the offence of forgery under s. 467 of the Penal Code. There being nothing on the record to show that the accused was a party to, or took any part in, the actual forgery of the document, or that he was present on the occasion when it was forged, the proper section to convict him under would be s. 467 read with s. 109, that is, of abetment of forgery, and not s. 467 read with s. 114. An unregistered document, though it may not be a valuable security until the registration is completed, still "purports" to be a valuable security within the meaning of s. 467 of the Penal Code. Queen-Empress v. Ramasami (I. L. R., 12 Mad. 148) approved of.—KASHI NATH NAEK v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 25 Cal. 207. [Ghose and Wilkins, JJ. July 6, 1897.]

What would constitute a charge under s. 114.—Where the accused persons have been acquitted of rioting, they cannot be properly convicted of grievous hurt under section 325 by the application of s. 119 of the Penal Code, where it has not been found that these persons or any of them were members of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object, of which grievous hurt was caused by any other member of the same assembly, or that the offence was such as each member of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. The mere presence as an abettor of any person would not, under the terms of s. 114 of the Penal Code, render him liable for the offence committed. Empress v. Chatradhari Goala (2 Cal. W. N. 49) explained. In order to bring a person within s. 114 of the Penal Code, it is necessary first to make out the circumstances which constitute abetment, so that, if absent, he would have been liable to be punished as an abettor, and then to show that he was also present when the offence was committed. Queen v. Mussamut Nirumi (7 W. R. Cr. 49) relied on.—ABHI MISSER v. LACHMI NARAIN, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 566. [Prinsep and Stanley, JJ. Mar. 6, 1900.]

115. Whoever abets the commission of an offence punishable with death or transportation for life shall, if that offence be not committed in consequence of the abetment, and no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of such abetment, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine; and if any act for which the abettor is liable in consequence of the abetment, and which causes hurt to any person, is done, the abettor shall be liable to imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to fourteen years, and shall also be liable to fine.

if act causing harm be done in consequence.

A instigates B to murder Z. The offence is not committed. If B had murdered Z, he would have been subject to the punishment of death or transportation for life. Therefore A is liable to imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, and also to a fine; and if any hurt be done to Z in consequence of the abetment, he will be liable to imprisonment for a term which may extend to fourteen years, and to fine.

116. Whoever abets an offence punishable with imprisonment shall, if that offence be not committed in consequence of the abetment, and no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of such abetment, be punished with imprisonment of any description provided for that offence for a term which may extend to one-fourth part of the longest term provided for that offence, or with such fine as is provided for that offence, or with both;

Case of offering a bribe to a juryman.—Although what passed between the prisoner and the juryman might not have amounted to an offer of a bribe to the latter, yet it was held to be so when taken in connection with what passed between the prisoner and the juryman's brother.—QUEEN v. BAWOOL CHUNDER BISWAS, 1 W. R. 36 [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 7, 1864.]

Abetment under s. 116.—The conviction of a procuress changed from abduction to enticing, the woman alleged to have been abducted having been of mature age and a free agent. The conviction of the other prisoners also changed from abetting wrongful concealment under s. 368 of the Penal Code to abetment under s. 116.—QUEEN v. SRIMOTEE PODDEE, 1 W. R. 45. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 16, 1864.]

Abetment of giving false evidence.—The prisoner asked a witness to suppress certain facts in giving his evidence against the prisoner before the Deputy Magistrate on a charge of defamation. Held that this was abetment of giving false evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding, and was triable before a Court of Session only.—In re ANDY CHETTY, 2 Mad. H. C. R. 438. [Frere and Innes, JJ. Aug. 12, 1865.]

Abetment of taking bribe—Where a constable and others enter a house, and apprehend certain persons as gamblers, and afterwards release them on payment of a sum of money by the latter, the offence committed is not house-trespass and extortion, but taking a bribe as regards the constable, and abetment of that offence as regards the others—GOVT. v. MAHOMED HOSSEIN, 5 W. R. 49 [Norman and Campbell, JJ. Mar 5, 1866.]

Abetment under s. 116.—A Police Magistrate has power to convict summarily, under Act IV. of 1866 (B.C.), s. 26, for an offence punishable under s. 116 of the Penal Code—QUEEN v. MAHBUB KHAN, 1 B. L. R. O. Cr. 39. [Norman, J. Aug. 12, 1868.]

Abetment of taking bribe.—Where the accused was charged under s. 116, Penal Code, with having abetted the commission of an offence punishable under s. 161 of that Code, the person abetted having been a Civil Surgeon of a Sadr Station, it was held that the enhanced imprisonment prescribed by the latter part of s. 116 could not be awarded, as the Civil Surgeon was not a public servant within the words of the section, "whose duty it is to prevent the commission of such offence."—QUEEN v. RAMNATH SURMA BISWAS, 21 W. R. 9. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Nov. 18, 1873.]

Abetment of kidnapping.—Accused was convicted by the Magistrate of abetting the kidnapping of a minor accused, knowing that the minor had left home without the consent of his parents, and at the instigation of one Komaren, the actual kidnapper, undertook to convey the minor to Kandy in Ceylon and was arrested on the way thither. The Sessions Judge reversed the conviction on the ground that there was no concert between the accused and Komaren previous to the completion of the kidnapping by the latter. Held by the High Court that, so long as the process of taking the minor out of the keeping of his lawful guardian continued, the offence of kidnapping might be abetted; and that, in the present case, the conviction should be of an offence punishable under ss. 363 and 116 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. SAMIA KAUNDAN, I. L. R., 1 Mad. 173. [Morgan, C.J., and Innes, J. Dec. 5, 1876.]

Abetment of an offence under the Legal Practitioners' Act.—A vakil of the High Court signed and sent a letter to another vakil of that Court who practised in District Courts subordinate thereto. The purport of this, which was one of several printed forms prepared for circulation to vakils practising in districts, was to the effect that the vakil, to whom it was addressed, "could easily send his clients' cases, both civil and criminal," to the writer, who would conduct them in that Court. And,—"as a remuneration"—the fees paid by the clients would be shared between the writer and the vakil who had sent the cases. The Judicial Committee concurred substantially in the conclusions of the High Court that this was an incitement within s. 116 (abetment) of the Indian Penal Code to commit an offence made penal by s. 36 (which was a special law within s. 41 of that Code) of Act XVIII of 1879, the Legal Practitioners' Act. This misconduct had been aggravated by the appellant's having denied to the Vakils' Association, North-Western Provinces, and caused evidence to be called to negative his having signed the printed letter, which he had signed. Thus, there was "reasonable cause" within s. 8 of the Letters Patent of March 17th 1866, establishing the High Court, for his suspension, to which, for four years from the date of that Court's order, his punishment was reduced.—IN THE MATTER OF PARBATI CHARAN CHATTERJI, I. L. R., 17 All. 498. [Watson, Morris, and Couch, JJ. June 20, 1895.]

Abetment: Instigating person to give false evidence.—B, without having obtained sanction under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, charged C before the Chief Presidency Magistrate with instigating her to give false evidence in a certain divorce suit in which C was co-respondent. Held that the Chief Presidency Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case without the sanction of the Court before which the divorce proceedings were pending, as the offence charged was alleged to have been committed in relation to those proceedings.—CHANDRA MOHAN BANERJEE v. BALFOUR, I. L. R., 26 Cal. 359. [Prinsep and Stanley, JJ. Feb. 22, 1899.]

Abetment of dacoity.—The accused was committed for trial before a Sessions Court on a charge of abetment of dacoity under s. 116 of the Penal Code. In the course of the trial the Assistant Sessions Judge added an alternative charge under s. 511 of the Code, and sentenced the accused under ss. 395, 116, and 511 of the Penal Code. In appeal the Sessions Judge held that the evidence disclosed the offence of an attempt to commit the offence of collecting arms, &c., with intention of waging war against the Queen, under s. 122, and as no charge under that section could be framed for want of sanction of Government under s. 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898), the accused could not be brought to trial at all. He, therefore, reversed the conviction and acquitted the accused. Held (reversing the order of acquittal) that the mere fact that no charge for the graver offence under s. 122 of the Penal Code could be framed for want of Government sanction, did not render the trial for the minor offence of attempting or abetting dacoity either irregular or illegal. Per Fulton, J.—According to the 2nd clause of s. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898), if the accused abetted an offence under s. 122 of the Penal Code, and by the same speech also attempted or abetted the offence of dacoity, he could be tried for each of these offences; but as that section is controlled, as regards the offence against the State, by the provisions of s. 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code, its operation in this case is restricted to the minor offence for which the accused could legally be charged and tried. Queen-Empress v. Karigowda (I. L. R., 19 Bom. 51) and In re Nagarji (I. L. R., 19 Bom. 340) distinguished.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v ANANT PURANIK, I. L. R., 25 Bom. 90. [Ranade and Fulton, JJ. July 19, 1900.]

Abetment of breach of contract.—In a reference to the High Court the question was whether an abetment of breach of contract by more than 10 persons was an abetment of the nature meant in s. 114 of the Penal Code. The reply of the High Court was as follows: "The prisoners in this case appear to have abetted 12 coolies in breaking their several contracts; and the Court's opinion is requested whether, inasmuch as 12 exceeds 10, this is an abetment under s. 117, which, it is presumed, is the section intended, and not s. 114. The Court are of opinion that the offence described is not an abetment under s. 117, Penal Code. The offence abetted must have been committed by more than 10 persons; whereas in the case under reference each breach of contract is a separate offence under s. 492 by each coolie, so that an abetment of such breach cannot be punished under s. 117, notwithstanding that more than 10 coolies broke contracts in consequence of such abetment.—3 W. R. Cr. L. 24, No. 821 of 1865.

Abetment to fight.—In August 1893, a riot took place in Bombay between Hindus and Mussalmans. The excitement caused by the riot had not entirely subsided, when the accused composed and published a poem, giving an account of the outbreak, and incidentally extolling certain classes of the Hindu community, namely, the Ghatis and Kamatis, for the brave resistance which they had offered to the Mahomedan rioters. The poem extolled the Ghatis and Kamatis, and then followed these lines:—

* As to the application of s. 117 to offences under special or local laws, see s. 40, supra.

May God give glory to you, confer joy on you night and day,
Fight again for your country's good.
Brave, brave are the Kamatis.
Why fear for dying, brother, why fear for dying?
Sooner or later, but only once, a man has to die.

The poem was written in Gujarati, a language not ordinarily spoken by the Ghatis and Kamatis, or even by the Mahomedans. It did not appear that any copies of the work were distributed among the people who had taken part in the riot. Nor did any fresh riot take place subsequently to the publication of the work. The accused were prosecuted and convicted under ss 117 and 153 of the Penal Code on the ground that the lines quoted above, especially the words 'Fight again," were a direct instigation to the Ghatis and Kamatis to renew the disturbances. Held that the meaning of the passages complained of was to be gathered from the whole poem. The general spirit of the poem was clearly in favour of peace and reconciliation. It consisted from beginning to end of a lamentation over the riots, and the destruction and death they had caused, and of repeated counsel to peace and harmony between Hindus and Mahomedans. And there was nothing to indicate that the author's intention was to instigate the Hindus or provoke the Mahomedans to renew the disturbances. The words, "Fight again," were, no doubt, objectionable, but it would not be a proper construction of the words to allow them to override the whole context of the work. The composition could not be regarded as an "illegal act," and its publication was not "malignant" or "wanton" within the meaning of s. 153 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KAHANJI, I. L. R., 18 Bom. 758. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. Dec. 11, 1893.]

What does not amount to abetment of dacoity.—Knowing of a design to commit a dacoity, and voluntarily concealing the existence of that design with the knowledge that such concealment would facilitate the commission of dacoity, does not amount to an abetment of the dacoity.—QUEEN v. GHUGROO 4 W. Omission to report robbery.—Held that the prisoner could not be punished under s. 118, as there was no omission of an act which he was bound to perform which facilitated the commission of an offence, but that he should be convicted under s 176, Penal Code, as he was bound to report under s. 44, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, after he was informed of the robbery.—GOVT. v. KESREE, 1 Agra H. S. 109 contemplates that the act abetted should be committed in consequence of the abetment.—S. 109 of the Penal Code contemplates that the act abetted should be committed in consequence of the abetment. The term "fabrication" in s. 193 refers to the fabrication of false documentary evidence to be used in a suit, so that to convict under this section it is essential to aver and to prove that the fabricated documents were intended for that purpose. The illegal concealment, by act or omission, contemplated by s. 120 of the Code has reference to the existence of a design on the part of third persons to fabricate evidence.—QUEEN v. RAJ COOMAR BANERJEE, 1 Ind. ### OF OFFENCES AGAINST THE STATE.

Jurisdiction to try.—A person who is admittedly a subject of the British Government is liable to be tried by the Courts of this country for acts done by him, whether wholly within or wholly without, or partly within and partly without, the British territories in India, provided they amount together to an offence under the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. MOGULVIE AHMUDOOLLAH. 2 W. R. 60. [Trevor and Loch, JJ. April 13, 1865.]

Confiscation of property.—Where N and M were convicted of rebellion under Act XI. of 1857, s. 3, and sentenced, the former to be transported for life and to have all his property confiscated, and the latter to have all his property confiscated. The sentence of confiscation held to be absolute, and not to depend upon the amount of punishment, and the fact of the punishment being remitted by the Governor-General does not restore the property. The Government having left the property of the convicts in the hands of the Administrator-General as administrator to the state of the convict's father whence it was derived, in whose hands it was allowed to accumulate pending a separate litigation in respect of that estate, while it asserted its right by virtue of the confiscation to other property of the convicts the title to which was undisputed, it was held that the Government had sufficiently declared and acted upon its intention to enforce the confiscation. The Queen's proclamation of amnesty (Nov. 1858) coming after the conviction, and confiscation has not the effect of revesting in the convict the property confiscated. Held also that the property in question being Government Paper was liable to confiscation, and lastly that N's widow was not entitled to maintenance out of the property confiscated by the State.—GUNGA BAEE v. CHARLES SWINTON HOGG, 2 Ind. assessors, there is nothing in the Code to prevent a Judge from summing up the evidence, which is, in fact, only a mode of going through and discussing it with the assessors. The real object of appointing assessors is to assist the Court, and the discussion and statement of points by a Judge sitting with assessors cannot be said to be otherwise than in furtherance of the object of getting the best assistance for the proper adjudication of the case. The special limitation of the period for prosecution (three years) in cases of treason and misprision of treason under Stat. 7 Wm. III., c. 3, s. 5, is an exception to the general rule in criminal cases; and, in enacting s. 121 of the Penal Code, the Legislature has not thought fit to limit in any way the period within which a prosecution for an offence against that enactment may be commenced, and consequently such limitation does not form part of the Penal Code. In a case in which the accused was charged with abetting the waging of war against the Queen under s. 121 of the Penal Code, it was held that the Calcutta Gazette and the Gazette of India were admissible in evidence, under s. 8 of Act II. of 1855, to prove the proclamation and official communications of the Government relating to the war. A printed official letter from the Secretary of the Government of the Punjab to the Secretary of the Government of India was held to be admissible in evidence under s. 6, Act II of 1855. S. 200 relates only to the oral evidence of witnesses. As to documentary evidence, although a prisoner has a right to have all or any part of any document used on his trial translated or interpreted to him, yet where a document is put in for the purpose of merely giving formal proof of that which is an incontestable fact, it is not necessary to interpret it at length. It would be sufficient if the prisoner was made to understand what the document was, and for what purpose it was used. Quære, whether, with reference to s. 28 of Act II. of 1855, a prisoner charged with treason can be convicted on the evidence of a single witness?—QUEEN v. AMEEROODDEEN, 15 W. Jurisdiction to try the offence of abetment of waging war.—The proceedings before a Magistrate preliminary to commitment are not impeachable for irregularity, because some of the depositions were taken before the accused persons were brought before him. The Sessions Court at Patna was held to have jurisdiction to try the offence of abetment of waging war against the Queen, though the waging of war did not take place in Patna, the rule of law as to abetment being that where parties concert together, and have a common object, the act of one of the parties done in furtherance of the common object, and in pursuance of the concerted plan, is the act of the whole. The jurisdiction of the Sessions Court at Patna was not affected by the erroneous statement in the charge of the abetment having taken place at Calcutta, when the evidence was sufficient to show the abetment at Patna; such erroneous statement being an error or defect in the charge which is cured by s. 426 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The issue of a warrant of commitment by the Governor-General in Council, under Reg. III. of 1818, cannot be treated in the nature of a conviction of the person so placed under personal restraint, so as to give immunity to the person so committed, and afterwards discharged from all political offences committed before that period, on the ground that he has already been tried, convicted, and punished. The rule of evidence that letters found in the house of a person after his arrest, and whilst in custody, cannot be used in evidence, is subject to the exception that the existence of the letters found may be established either by direct proof or by strong presumptive evidence.—QUEEN v. AMBER KHAN, 17 W. R. 15: 9 B. L. R. 36. [Couch, C.J., and Jackson and Macpherson, JJ. Dec. 21, 1871.]

Disaffection.—The accused, who was the editor, proprietor, and publisher of the Kesari newspaper, was charged, under s. 124A of the Penal Code, with exciting and attempting to excite feelings of disaffection to Government by the publication of certain articles, &c., in the Kesari in its issue of the 15th June 1897. An order for the prosecution given by Government under s. 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, in the following form was tendered in evidence: "Under the provisions of s. 196 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Mirza Abas Ali Baig, Oriental translator to Government, is hereby ordered by His Excellency the Governor in Council to make a complaint against Mr. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, B.A., LL.B., of Poona, publisher, proprietor, and editor of the Kesari, a weekly vernacular newspaper of Poona, and against Mr. Hari Narayan Gokhale of Poona, printer of the said newspaper, in respect of certain articles appearing in the said newspaper, under s. 124A of the Indian Penal Code and any other section of the said Code which may be found to be applicable to the case." Counsel for the accused objected that the order was too vague, and should have specified the articles with reference to which the accused was to be charged. Held that the order was sufficient and was admissible, but that, if it were not sufficient, the commitment might be accepted, and the trial proceeded with under s 532 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen-Empress v. Morton (I. L. R., 9 Bom. 288) followed. In order to show the intention of such publications, counsel for the prosecution tendered in evidence a certain letter signed "Ganesh" which appeared in the issue of the Kesari of May 4. 1897. Objection was taken that it was not admissible, inasmuch as letters to newspapers often express opinions which are not the opinions of the editor and publisher. Held that the letter was admissible to show intention and animus. The proceedings in the Legislative Council which result in the passing of an Act cannot be referred to as aids to the construction of that Act. Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick (L. R., 22 I A. 107) followed. S. 124A of the Penal Code explained—meaning of the word "disaffection." At the close of the Judge's charge to the jury, counsel for the first accused asked that the following points might be reserved for the decision of the Court under s. 434 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, viz.: 1. Whether the order for prosecution was sufficient under s. 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code. 2. Whether the High Court had power, in the absence of a sufficient order, to accept the commitment of the accused under s. 532 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and to proceed with the trial. 3. Whether the meaning given to the term "disaffection" by the Judge in his charge to the jury was correct. The Judge declined to reserve the above points. The first accused, having been convicted, applied to a Full Bench under cl. 41 of the Amended Letters Patent, 1865, for a certificate that the case was a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council. The points upon which he desired to appeal were those which his counsel at the close of the trial asked the Judge to reserve as above stated. The Full Bench refused to grant the certificate.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BAL GANGADHAR TILAK, I. L. R., 22 Bom. 112. [Strachey, J. Sep. 8-11, 13, 14, 1897.]

Appeal to Privy Council.—The petitioner applied to the Privy Council for leave to appeal from a verdict finding him guilty on a charge under s. 124A of the Penal Code. Held that, consistently with the rules hitherto guiding the Judicial Committee in recommending the grant of leave to appeal from convictions in criminal cases, the petitioner's case was not one in which leave should be granted.—BAL GANGADHAR TILAK v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 22 Bom. 528. [Chancellor, Hobhouse Davey, and Couch, JJ. Nov. 19, 1897.]

Disaffection.—The word "disaffection" in s. 124A of the Indian Penal Code is used in a special sense as meaning political alienation or discontent, a spirit of disloyalty to the Government or existing authority. An attempt to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government is equivalent to an attempt to produce political hatred of Government as established by law, to excite political discontent, and alienate the people from their allegiance. This meaning of the word "disaffection" in the main portion of the section is not varied by the explanation. Per Parsons, J.: The word "disaffection" used in s. 124A of the Indian Penal Code cannot be construed as meaning an absence of or the contrary of affection or love, that is to say, dislike or hatred, but is used in its special sense as signifying political alienation or discontent, that is to say, a feeling of disloyalty to the existing Government, which tends to a disposition not to obey, but to resist and subvert the Government. Per Ranade, J.: "Disaffection" is not a mere absence or negation of love or good will, but a positive feeling of aversion which is akin to disloyalty, a defiant insubordination of authority, or when it is not defiant, it secretly seeks to alienate the people and weaken the bond of allegiance, and prepossesses the minds of the people with avowed or secret animosity to Government—a feeling which tends to bring the Government into hatred or contempt by imputing base and corrupt motives to it, and makes them indisposed to obey or support the laws of the realm, and which promotes discontent and public disorder.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMCHANDRA NARAYAN, I. L. R., 22 Bom. 152. [Farran, C.J. Parsons and Ranade, JJ. Nov. 23, 1897.]

Disaffection.—Any one who, by any of the means referred to in s. 124A of the Indian Pena Code, excites, or attempts to excite, feelings of hatred, dislike, ill-will, enmity, or hostility towards the Government established by law in British India, excites or attempts to excite, as the case may be, feelings of "disaffection" as that term is used in s. 124A. Such feelings are necessarily inconsistent with and incompatible with a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of Government, and to support that Government against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist it. The term "disaffection" may be taken as synonymous with "disloyalty." The ordinary meaning of the term "disaffection," as used in s. 124A, is not varied by the explanation appended to that section. When a person is charged with having committed the offence punishable under s. 124A of the Indian Penal Code, his intention may be inferred from one particular speech, article, or letter, or from that speech, article, or letter considered in conjunction with what such person has said, written, or published on another or other occasions. Where it is ascertained that the intention of such person was to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India, it is immaterial whether or not the words spoken, written, or published, could have the effect of exciting such feelings of disaffection, and it is immaterial whether the words were true or were false, and, except on the question of punishment, or in a case in which the speaker, writer, or publisher, is charged with having excited such feelings of disaffection, it is immaterial whether or not the words did in fact excite such feelings of disaffection. Queen-Empress v. Jogendra Chunder Bose (I. L. R., 19 Cal 35), In re the Petition of Bal Gangadhar Tilak (14 Times Law Reports 50) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. AMBA PRASAD, I. L. R., 20 All. 55. [Edge, C J. Blair and Burkitt, JJ. Dec. 14. 1897.]

125. Whoever wages war against the Government of any Asiatic Power in alliance or at peace with the Queen, or attempts to wage such war or abets the waging of such war, shall be punished with transportation for life, to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, to which fine may be added, or with fine.*

Waging war against any Asiatic Power in alliance with the Queen.

Punishment for waging war with an Asiatic Power in alliance with the Queen.—In this case the prisoner has been convicted of waging war against the Munipore Rajah, an Asiatic Sovereign in alliance with the Queen; and under s. 125 of the Penal Code has been sentenced to ten years' transportation. The High Court considered the sentence illegal. The punishment for the offence in the Penal Code is transportation for life, or imprisonment of either description, which may extend to seven years. Transportation for ten years, consequently, cannot be inflicted. The sentence must be either transportation for the prisoner's whole life, or imprisonment not beyond seven years commutable to transportation for the same period. Accordingly the prisoner was suntenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, commutable under s. 59 to transportation for a like period.—QUEEN v. KEIFA SINGH, 3 W. R. 16. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. May 19, 1865.]

To whom application for pardon or mitigation should be made.—Application for pardon or mitigation of punishment for a political offence (e.g., waging war against a Power in alliance with the Queen) should be made to the Executive Government.—QUEEN v. SAJOWPA, 7 W. Public servant negligently suffering such prisoner to escape.

129. Whoever, being a public servant, and having the custody of any State prisoner or prisoner of war, negligently suffers such prisoner to escape from any place of confinement in which such prisoner is confined, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Ct. of Ses. Uncog. Warrant. Not bailable. Not comp. Sanction.

Aiding escape of, rescuing, or harbouring, such prisoner.

130. Whoever knowingly aids or assists any State prisoner or prisoner of war in escaping from lawful custody, or rescues or attempts to rescue any such prisoner, or harbours or conceals any such prisoner who has escaped from lawful custody, or offers, or attempts to offer, any resistance to the recapture of such prisoner, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation.—A State prisoner or prisoner of war who is permitted to be at large on his parole within certain limits in British India is said to escape from lawful custody if he goes beyond the limits within which he is allowed to be at large.

CHAPTER VII.

OF OFFENCES RELATING TO THE ARMY AND NAVY.*

131. Whoever abets the committing of mutiny by an officer, soldier, or sailor in the army or navy of the Queen, or attempts to seduce any such officer, soldier, or sailor from his allegiance or his duty, shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine. Ct. of Ses. Cognizable. Warrant. Not bailable. Not comp.

Abetting mutiny, or attempting to seduce a soldier or sailor from his duty.

Explanation.—In the section the words "officer" and "soldier" include any person subject to the Articles of War† for the better government of Her Majesty's army, or to the Articles of War contained in Act No. V. of 1869 ‡

132. Whoever abets the committing of mutiny by an officer, soldier, or sailor in the army or navy of the Queen, shall, if mutiny be committed in consequence of that abetment, be punished with death or with transportation for life, or imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine. Ditto.

Abetment of mutiny, if mutiny is committed in consequence thereof.

133. Whoever abets an assault by an officer, soldier, or sailor in the army or navy of the Queen on any superior officer being in the execution of his office, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine. Ct. of Ses., Presy. Mag., or Mag. of 1st class. Cognizable. Warrant. Not bailable. Not comp.

Abetment of assault by soldier or sailor on his superior officer when in execution of his office.

134. Whoever abets an assault by an officer, soldier, or sailor in the army or navy of the Queen on any superior officer being in the execution of his office, shall, if such assault be committed in consequence of that abetment, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine. Ct of Ses. Cognizable. Warrant. Not bailable. Not comp.

Abetment of such assault, if the assault is committed.

135. Whoever abets the desertion of any officer, soldier, or sailor in the army or navy of the Queen, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both. Presy. Mag., or Mag. of 1st or 2nd class. Cognizable. Warrant. Bailable. Not comp.

Abetment of desertion of soldier or sailor.

136. Whoever, except as hereinafter excepted, knowing, or having reason to believe, that an officer, soldier, or sailor in the army or navy of the Queen has deserted, harbours such officer, soldier, or sailor, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both. Ditto.

Harbouring deserter.

Exception.—This provision does not extend to the case in which the harbour is given by a wife to her husband.

137. The master or person in charge of a merchant-vessel, on board of which any deserter from the army or navy of the Queen is concealed, shall, though ignorant of such concealment, be liable to a penalty not exceeding five hundred rupees, if he might have known of such concealment, but for some neglect of his duty as such master or person in charge, or but for some want of discipline on board of the vessel.

Deserter concealed on board merchant-vessel through negligence of master.

Presy. Mag. or Mag. of 1st or 2nd class. Cognizable. Warrant. Bailable. Not comp.

138. Whoever abets what he knows to be an act of insubordination by an officer, soldier, or sailor in the army or navy of the Queen, shall, if such act of insubordination be committed in consequence of that abetment, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Abetment of act of insubordination by soldier or sailor.

138A * The foregoing sections of this chapter shall apply as if Her Majesty's Indian Marine Service were comprised in the navy of the Queen.

Application of foregoing sections to the Indian Marine Service.

139. No person subject to any Articles of War for the army or navy of the Queen, or for any part of such army or navy, is subject to punishment under this Code for any of the offences defined in this chapter.

Persons subject to Articles of War.

Any Mag. Cognizable. Summons. Bailable. Not comp.

140. Whoever, not being a soldier in the military or naval service of the Queen, wears any garb or carries any token resembling any garb or token used by such a soldier, with the intention that it may be believed that he is such a soldier, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both †

Wearing garb or carrying token used by soldier.

CHAPTER VIII.‡

OF OFFENCES AGAINST THE PUBLIC TRANQUILLITY.

141. An assembly of five or more persons is designated an "unlawful assembly," if the common object of the persons composing that assembly is—

Unlawful assembly.

First.—To overawe, by criminal force or show of criminal force, the Legislative or Executive Government of India, or the Government of any presidency, or any Lieutenant-Governor, or any public servant in the exercise of the lawful power of such public servant; or

---

* S. 138A has been inserted by the Indian Marine Act (XIV. of 1887), s. 79.

† The offence of purchasing, &c. arms, ammunition, cloth, Military accoutrements, forage, &c, from a soldier, is punishable by the Annual Mutiny Act.

‡ As to duty to give information of offences punishable under s. 143, 144, 145, 147, or 148, see the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898) ss. 44 and 45.

In s. 141 the word offence has the same meaning when the thing punishable under the special or local law as defined in ss. 41 and 42 is punishable under such law with imprisonment for a term of six months or upwards, whether with or without fine.—See s. 40, supra.

As to punishment for an offence under s. 148, enquired into by a Council of Elders in a Punjab Frontier District or in Baluchistan, see the Punjab Frontier Crimes Regulation (IV. of 1887), s 14.

As to dispersion of unlawful assemblies, see the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), Ch. IX.

Second—To resist the execution of any law or of any legal process; or,

Third—To commit any mischief or criminal trespass or other offence; or,

Fourth—By means of criminal force, or show of criminal force, to any person, to take or obtain possession of any property, or to deprive any person of the enjoyment of a right of way, or of the use of water, or other incorporeal right of which he is in possession or enjoyment, or to enforce any right or supposed right; or,

Fifth—By means of criminal force, or show of criminal force, to compel any person to do what he is not legally bound to do, or to omit to do what he is legally entitled to do.

Explanation.—An assembly which was not unlawful when it assembled may subsequently become an unlawful assembly.

THERE cannot be a conviction both of "rioting" and of "being members of an illegal assembly." The greater charge includes the less, and to punish under both sections of the Penal Code would be cumulative and illegal. Were both original sentences legal, the appeal would lie to the Sessions Judge. — MUELAN KHALIFA v. DWARKA NATH GOOPTO, 1 W R 7 [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 17, 1864.]

ON the acquittal of an accused person on the ground of insanity, the Court should proceed under s. 394 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861); and report the case to Government.—QUEEN v. SHEIKH MUSTAFA, 1 W. R. 15. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Sep. 23, 1864.]

AN assembly, lawful in its inception, may become unlawful by its acts. If force is used, the higher offence of rioting has been committed.—QUEEN v. KHEMEE SINGH, 1 W. R. 18. Kemp, J. Sep. 26, 1864.

TO convict a prisoner of being a member of an unlawful assembly and of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, it must be shewn that he had an illegal object in common with, and took part in the illegal act done by, the others.—FOIZ ALI alias IMDAD ALI, 1 W. R. 20 [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov. 4, 1864.]

IN an affray respecting land one of the aggressive party was killed. The prisoners, who were exercising the right of private defence of property, were acquitted by the jury of culpable homicide, but convicted of rioting. Held that the prisoners, not being legally guilty of culpable homicide, were not legally guilty of any other offence coupled with rioting, and not being rioters, or members of an unlawful assembly, could claim the benefit of s. 104, Penal Code.—QUEEN v. MITTO SINGH, 3 W. R. 41. [Seton-Karr and Campbell, JJ. July 11, 1865.]

THE common object of the assembly should always be mentioned in the charge.—4 W. R., Cr. L., 9, 10, NOS. 1137 and 1150 of 1865.

THE prisoner was convicted and sentenced separately for culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and for being a member of an unlawful assembly. The two offences, however, being held to be one (the latter being only part of the evidence of the former), the conviction and sentence for the second offence were quashed.—QUEEN v. RUBBEEOOLAH, 7 W. R. 13. [Norman and Seton-Karr, JJ. Jan. 16, 1867.]

IN order to convict of the offence of being members of an unlawful assembly, it must be shown that the accused were actuated by a common object, and that the acts done by them were of such a nature as to make them guilty under s. 141 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. DINOBUNDO RAI, 9 W. R. 19. [Seton-Karr and Markby, JJ. Feb. 20, 1868.]

WHERE the defendants, raiyats of portion of a zamindari sold in execution of a decree of the Civil Court, reaped and carried away their crops despite the purchaser's people, and refused to allow the purchaser's people to seal and mark grain which had been reaped, and the raiyats were assembled in such numbers and so armed that nothing could be done against them, held by the High Court that the acts of the defendants did not amount to an offence under s. 141 of the Penal Code. —PRO., Aug. 10, 1869, 4 Mad. H C. R. Ap., 65.

WHERE, of several persons constituting an unlawful assembly, some only are armed with sticks, and A, one of them, is not so armed, but picks up a stick and uses it, B (the master of A), who gave a general order to beat, is guilty of abetting the assault made by A.—QUEEN v. RASOOKOOLLAH, 12 W. R 51. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. Sep. 2, 1869.]

THE act of the defendants in assembling and forcibly interrupting a procession was forbidden by cl. 4 of s. 141 of the Penal Code, although the defendants acted upon the ground that the procession was a nuisance or annoyance to them or their community.—PRO., Nov. 16, 1869, 5 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 6.

HELD that the owner or occupier of land on which an unlawful assembly is held cannot be convicted under s. 154 of the Penal Code, unless there is a finding that the riot was premeditated. Where two opposite factions commit a riot, it is irregular to treat both parties as constituting one unlawful assembly, and to try them together, inasmuch as they do not have "one common object" within the meaning of s. 141 of the Penal Code. The right of an accused party to cross-examine witnesses is limited to a right to cross-examine the witness for the prosecutor or for the Crown called against him. If he wishes to avail himself of evidence which has been given, or which can be given by a witness called for another of the parties accused, he must call him as his own witness. —QUEEN v. SURROOP CHUNDER PAUL, 12 W. R. 75. [Norman and Kemp, JJ. Dec. 10, 1869.]

WHERE a police-officer duly appointed under Act V. of 1861 was engaged, in the discharge of his duty as such police-officer, at a time when an unlawful assembly took place, it was held that he was competent to apprehend any of the members of such unlawful assembly; and a person who rescued the party apprehended was convicted of rescuing from lawful custody within the meaning of s. 225 of the Penal Code —QUEEN v. ASSAM SHURRUFF, 13 W. R. 75 Phear and Mitter, JJ. 17 May, 1870.

PROCEDURE to be observed in the case of a charge under s. 154, Penal Code, against the owner of land on which an unlawful assembly is held, pointed out. The record of the original riot-case is no evidence in the case under s. 154.—IN THE MATTER OF C. G. D. BETTS AND MAHOMED ISMAIL CHOWDHRY, 15 W. R. 6, 6 B. L. R. Ap. 83. [Bayley and Mitter, JJ. Jan. 21, 1871.]

THERE is no ground for the distinction between an unlawful assembly as a premeditated act and an affray as a sudden one, for, according to s. 141 of the Penal Code, an assembly, which was not unlawful when it assembled, may subsequently become an unlawful assembly.—IN THE MATTER OF LOKENATH KAR, 18 W. R 2. [Bayley and Mitter, JJ. May 13, 1872.]

PROCEEDINGS in which certain villagers were accused of having committed a serious riot in order to stop a procession which they disapproved of, and believed had been rendered illegal as contrary to law. The rioters were acquitted by the Magistrate, because he thought they might have considered their act justified, because the procession was illegal by virtue of some orders, which did not appear, and which might have been efficacious in point of law. Held that the thinking a thing legal which is not so can be no defence to a man who violates a rule of law; that there was no evidence that the procession was illegal; and that, if it were, the accused were bound to invoke the aid of the tribunals charged with the enforcement of the law. Innes, J., adds: "The assembly was unlawful, because its object was to enforce a supposed right by a show of criminal force. In pursuance of the common object, force was used, and a serious riot took place."—PRO., Jan. 8, 1873, 7 Mad. H. C. R App. xxxv [Holloway and Innes, JJ Jan. 8, 1873.]

IT cannot be said that a person intentionally joins an unlawful assembly, or continues in it, when it appears from the evidence that he went to the place where the members of the unlawful assembly were gathered to prevent mischief being done to his own property which he had a right to protect.—BIRJOO SINGH v. KHUB LALL, 19 W. R. 66. [Couch, C.J., and Glover, J. April 16, 1873.]

IN this case, in which the prisoners were convicted of being members of an unlawful assembly under s. 141 of the Penal Code, the Court held that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a conviction, there being nothing to show what was the specific unlawful object within the scope of cls. 3 and 4, of the persons composing the assembly.—IN THE MATTER OF KOYLASH CHUNDER DASS, 20 W. R. 78. [Phear and Morris, JJ Nov. 18, 1873.]

NO charge of being members of an unlawful assembly under s. 141, Penal Code, can be sustained where the intention of the parties was not to enforce a right or supposed right, but to maintain undisturbed the actual subsisting enjoyment of a right which was at that time being exercised.—SHUNKER SINGH v. BURMAH MAHTO, 23 W. R. 25 [Phear and Morris, JJ. Jan. 22, 1875.]

IF a number of persons, assembled for any lawful purpose, suddenly quarrel with an intruder without any previous intention or design, they do not commit "riot" in the legal sense of the word.—KHAJA NOORUL HOSSEIN alias KHAJAH WAHEED JAN v. FABRE-TONNERRE, 24 W. R. 26. Glover and Mitter, JJ. July 12, 1875.]

A, a joint-owner of a parcel of land, erected on it an edifice without the consent and against the will of B, another joint-owner. A dispute having arisen in consequence, the Magistrate held an inquiry, and made an order under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code, awarding to A exclusive possession of the part of the land on which the edifice had been erected. Held per Jackson, J., that such order was erroneous, as the matter was not one to which s. 530 could apply. B subsequently brought a suit in the Civil Court to establish his title to joint-possession of the whole parcel, and for a declaration that A was not entitled to erect any edifice thereon; and he further prayed that such edifice should be removed. B obtained a decree, whereupon his servants went on the land, and pulled it down. They were charged before the Deputy Magistrate with having committed mischief, and on this convicted and fined. Held per Jackson, J., that, as there had been no causing of wrongful loss, the accused had not been guilty of mischief. On the 8th October, the accused, who were the servants of B, found that the men in the employ of A were again putting up this erection, a nawbut-khana, and accordingly protested against its erection, pulled down the bamboos, and thrust aside the servants of A, throwing to the ground one man who was clinging to the bamboos. On the 9th October 1877, these servants were charged before the Magistrate with rioting, and, being called upon for their defence, named several witnesses, and summonses on the following morning were issued for their appearance: but they were not found. The accused then applied for further time for the appearance of the witnesses. This the Magistrate refused to grant, and convicted the accused on 12th October 1877. Held per Jackson, J., that, this being a warrant-case, it was the duty of the Magistrate to summon the witnesses that might be offered by the accused, and that he might, at his discretion, have adjourned the case. Held, further, per Jackson, J., that the meaning of s. 359 of the Criminal Procedure Code is, that, if, among the persons named by the accused as witnesses, the Magistrate considers that any witness is included for the purpose of vexation and delay, he is to exercise his judgment, and enquire whether such witness is material; but that the section is not intended to enable the Magistrate to inquire into what the defence of the accused person is to be, and to consider whether, on learning the nature of the defence, he is absolutely to abstain from summoning the whole of the witnesses cited by the accused; and further that, in the present case, there was not any purpose of vexation or delay, and that, by the refusal to grant further time, the accused had been probably prejudiced in their defence. Held further, per Jackson, J., that, as the accused were not on the land in question as members of an unlawful assembly, nor for any unlawful purpose, the conviction, as well as the procedure, was illegal. Held, per Cunningham, J., that the accused were merely exercising the remedy of abating a private nuisance, and were exercising a legal right of self-defence. Held further, per Cunningham, J., that the acts of the complainants in erecting the nawbut-khana amounted to mischief, and came within the purview of s. 425 of the Penal Code. Held, further, per Ainslie and McDonell, JJ., that the High Court, in the exercise of its powers of extraordinary jurisdiction, cannot, in criminal matters, interfere, unless all other remedies provided by law have been previously exhausted. Therefore, where parties who had been convicted of riot by a Magistrate, and who, having a right of appeal to the Sessions Court, instead of doing so, moved the High Court under cl. 15 of the Charter, the Court would not interfere until that remedy had been resorted to — DENONATH GHATTACK v. RAJCOOMAR SINGH, I. L. R., 3 Cal 573. [Jackson and Cunningham, JJ., Mar. 25—27, 1878.]

A PARTY of persons, consisting of some five peadas and a number of coolies sufficient for the work to be done, went to a spot on a river flowing through the lands of M for the purposes of either repairing or erecting a bund across it to cause the water to flow down a channel on the lands of their master T. The river at the time was almost dry, and the party did not go armed ready to fight or use force, and they did not, during the subsequent occurrence, use force. Having arrived at the spot about 10 A.M., they proceeded to work at the bund until the afternoon. At about 4 P.M., a body of men, consisting of about 1,200 in all, many of them armed with lathis, and headed by the prisoners, who were servants of M, which had been seen collecting together during the day, proceeded to the spot, and about 25 or 30 of them attacked T's men, some five of whom were more or less severely wounded with the lathis. The occurrence resulted in the conviction of some of M's servants for rioting under s. 147 of the Penal Code. M's people wholly denied any right on the part of T to construct or repair the bund, and had previously denied the existence of such right, and refused permission to T to exercise it. It was contended that the assembly of M's people was not an "unlawful assembly;" that the interference by T's people with the channel of the river justified them in coming to stop the work and the show and use of force in compelling them to do so. Held that the prisoners had been rightly convicted. Held, further, that as no right of private defence of property is conferred by a Penal Code, except as against the perpetrators of offences under the Penal Code, and that as, upon the facts of the case as found, no offence had been committed by T's people, their acts amounting merely to a civil trespass, and that, as there was no pressing or immediate necessity of a kind showing that there was not time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, no question as to the right of private defence arose in the case. It was further contended that M's people did not assemble to enforce a right, or supposed right, within the terms of s. 141 of the Penal Code, but to defend a right, and that such action did not make the assembly an unlawful one. Held that they were members of an assembly, the common object of which was, by show of criminal force, and by criminal force, if necessary, to enforce the right to keep the river channel clear by preventing the construction of the bund, and by demolishing it so far as it was constructed, and that the case came within s. 141, para. 4. Queen v. Mitto Sing (3 W. R. Cr. 41), Shunker Singh v. Burmah Mahto (23 W. R. Cr. 25), and Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lall (19 W. R. Cr. 66), referred to and commented on.—GANOURI LAL DAS v. ONE of two village-factions objected to the other passing in procession over a vacant piece of ground in the main street of the village. An injunction prohibiting the procession was obtained in the Court of the District Munsif on 20th March. On 11th May a procession was formed, and approached the ground in question. Forty-six members of the first-named faction were assembled there to prevent the procession by force, the police ordered them to disperse; this order having been neglected, the police prevailed on the other faction to abandon the procession. Held that the persons who did not disperse on being ordered to do so were guilty of the offence of being members of an unlawful assembly.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. TIRA KADU, I. L. R., 14 Mad. 126. [Muttusami Ayyar and Best, JJ. Oct. 3, 1890.]

IN a case where an Excise Sub-Inspector attemped to search a house for gurjat-ganga, a "foreign exciseable article," under the Excise Act (Ben. Act VII. of 1878), and resistance was offered, held that gurjat-ganga being a "foreign exciseable article" under s. 4 of the Act as amended by Ben. Act IV. of 1881, the excise officer had no legal authority to enter and search the house under s. 40 of the Act; he had authority only to enter and search for any "exciseable article" as defined in s. 4 of the Act: and that no offence either under s. 141 or s. 353 of the Penal Code was committed. Held also that s. 75 of the Act does not apply to a "foreign exciseable article."—JAGARNATH MANDHATA v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 24 Cal 324. [Ghose and Gordon, JJ. Jan. 19, 1897.]

WHEN a body of men are determined to vindicate their rights or supposed rights by unlawful force, and when they engage in a fight with men who, on the other hand, are equally determined to vindicate by unlawful force their rights or supposed rights, no question of self-defence arises. In the Code of Criminal Procedure there is no apparent distinction between the right of appeal against an acquittal and a right of appeal against a conviction. Queen-Empress v. Gayadin (I. L. R., 4 All 148) and Queen-Empress v. Gobardhan (I. L. R, 9 All. 528) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PRAG DAT, I. L. R., 20 All. 459. [Kershaw, C.J., and Knox, J. June 13. 1898.]

142. Whoever, being aware of facts which render any assembly an unlawful assembly, intentionally joins that assembly, or continues in it, is said to be a member of an unlawful assembly.

Being member of unlawful assembly.

A LARGE body of men belonging to one faction waylaid another body of men belonging to a second faction, and a fight ensued, in the course of which a member of the first-mentioned faction was wounded, and retired to the side of the road, taking no further active part in the affray. After his retirement a member of the second faction was killed. Held by Norman, J. (whose opinion prevailed), that the wounded man had ceased to be a member of the unlawful assembly when he retired wounded, and that he could not, under s. 149 of the Penal Code, be made liable for the subsequent murder. Held by E. Jackson, J., that he remained a member of the unlawful assembly. In delivering judgment, Norman, J., made the following important remarks: "The evidence shows that, on the retreat of the Kazis, and before the renewal of the combat in which Baber Ali Mira was killed, the prisoner Wahid Ali had separated himself from his faction, and sat down apart from them. He probably no longer had the same common object as the members of the unlawful assembly from which he had separated himself. It does not appear that he had continued to urge on the others. He was apparently solely occupied by his own suffering. He cannot be convicted under s. 149, unless he was a member of the unlawful assembly at the time of the committing the offence. We think the fair inference from the facts is that he had ceased to be so when the fatal wound was inflicted on Baber Ali Mira; and therefore that he cannot be convicted or punished for an act committed by a member of that assembly under s. 149. It is plain that he was no longer co-operating with the others, and he had not the power to prevent or check the violence of the others as he might have had if he continued with them." — QUEEN v. KABIL KAZI, 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 1. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. April 8, 1869.]

IT cannot be said that a person intentionally joins an unlawful assembly, or continues in it, when it appears from the evidence that he went to the place where the members of the unlawful assembly were gathered to prevent mischief being done to his own property, which he had a right to protect.—BIRJOO SINGH v. KHUB LALL, 19 W. R. 66. [Couch, C.J., and Glover, J. April 16, 1873.]

143. Whoever is a member of an unlawful assembly shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Any Mag. Cognizable. Summons. Bailable. Not comp.

Punishment.

THE common object of the assembly should always be mentioned in the charge.—4 W. R. Cr. L. 9, 10, Nos. 1137 and 1150 of 1865.

THERE cannot be a conviction both of "rioting" and of "being members of an illegal assembly." The greater charge includes the less, and to punish under both sections of the Penal Code would be cumulative and illegal. Were both original sentences legal, the appeal would lie to the Sessions Judge. —MEHLAN KHALIFA v. DWARKA NATH GOOPTO, 1 W R 7. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 17, 1864.]

AN assembly, lawful in its inception, may become unlawful by its acts. If force is used, the higher offence of rioting has been committed.—QUEEN v. KHEMER SINGH, 1 W. R. 18. [Kemp, J. Sep. 26, 1864.]

TO convict a prisoner of being a member of an unlawful assembly and of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, it must be shown that he had an illegal object in common with, and took part in the illegal act done by, the others.—FAIZ ALI alias IMDAD ALI, 1 W. IN an affray respecting land, one of the aggressive party was killed. The prisoners who were exercising the right of private defence of property, were acquitted by the jury of culpable homicide, but convicted of rioting. Held that the prisoners, not being legally guilty of culpable homicide, were not legally guilty of any other offence coupled with rioting, and, not being rioters, or members of an unlawful assembly, could claim the benefit of s. 104, Penal Code.—QUEEN v. MITTO SINGH, 3 W. HOUSE-TRESPASS and mischief not being separate offences, but being included in the graver offence of being members of an unlawful assembly armed with deadly weapons, no separate convictions and sentences were deemed to be requisite.—QUEEN v. SURROOP NAPIT, 3 W. HELD by the majority that where two members of an unlawful assembly use spears, and deliberately pierce another man through the chest and abdomen with the knowledge that death is likely to ensue, although without proof of any intention to cause death, all the members of the unlawful assembly are jointly guilty of murder.—QUEEN v. NAZOO FAKIR, 4 W. A SUBORDINATE Magistrate of the first class has no power, under s. 45 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to award any greater sentence of imprisonment in default of a payment of fine than six weeks in the case of persons convicted of being members of an unlawful assembly.—PHOOLMAN TEWARY v. SATRAM OJHA, 6 W. IN a case of riot, in which a man was killed, the whole of the members of the unlawful assembly, as well the victorious as the worsted, were held equally guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. MANA SINGH, 7 W. R 67. Kemp and Glover, JJ. May 7, 1867.]

IN order to convict of the offence of being members of an unlawful assembly, it must be shown that the accused were actuated by a common object, and that the acts done by them were of such a nature as to make them guilty under s. 141 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. DINOBUNDO RAI, 9 W. WHERE land in the possession of A was encroached on by the servants of B, who committed mischief on the land, and the servants of A assembled and resisted the encroachments, the High Court declined to interfere with the Magistrate's order convicting the servants of A of unlawful assembly, as there was no error in law in the order of the Magistrate, who found as a fact that the right of private defence of property had ceased under cl. 4, s. 105 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. RAJKRISTO DOSS, 12 W. WHERE the defendants, raiyats of portion of a zemindari sold in execution of a decree of the Civil Court, reaped and carried away their crops despite the purchaser's people, and refused to allow the purchaser's people to seal and mark grain which had been reaped, and the raiyats were assembled in such numbers, and so armed that nothing could be done against them, held by the High Court that the acts of the defendants did not amount to an offence under s. 141 of the Penal Code.—PRO., Aug. 10, 1869, 4 Mad. WHERE, of several persons constituting an unlawful assembly, some only are armed with sticks, and A, one of them, is not so armed, but picks up a stick and uses it, B (the master of A), who gave a general order to beat, is guilty of abetting the assault made by A.—QUEEN v. RASOOKOOLA, 12 W. THE act of the defendants in assembling and forcibly interrupting a procession was forbidden by cl. 4 of s. 141, although the defendants acted upon the ground that the procession was a nuisance or annoyance to them or their community.—PRO., Nov. 11, 1869, 5 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 4.

WHERE the evidence in a case failed to establish anything like an unlawful assembly, the conviction was reduced from rioting and being members of an unlawful assembly to one for affray, although grievous hurt from which death resulted was caused to one of the persons. The insufficiency of the punishment allowed by the law in cases of affray pointed out.—QUEEN v. PHOOLEE MISSER, 12 W. R. 72. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. Nov. 30, 1869.]

HELD that the owner or occupier of land on which an unlawful assembly is held cannot be convicted under s. 154 of the Penal Code, unless there is a finding that the riot was premeditated. Where two opposite factions commit a riot, it is irregular to treat both parties as constituting one unlawful assembly, and to try them together, inasmuch as they do not have "one common object" within the meaning of s. 141 of the Penal Code. The right of an accused party to cross-examine witnesses is limited to a right to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecutor or for the Crown called against him. If he wishes to avail himself of evidence which has been given, or which can be given by a witness called for another of the parties accused, he must call him as his own witness. —QUEEN v. SURKOOP CHUNDER PAUL, 12 W. R. 75. [Norman and Kemp, JJ. Dec 10, 1869.]

WHERE a number of persons, members of an unlawful assembly, went to abduct A, and one of them killed B in the attempt to abduct A, held that all the persons concerned in the attempt at abduction were guilty (looking to s. 149 of the Penal Code) of causing the death of B.—QUEEN v. GOLAM ARFIN, 13 W. WHERE a police-officer, duly appointed under Act V. of 1861, was engaged in the discharge of his duty as such police-officer at a time when an unlawful assembly took place, it was held that he was competent to apprehend any of the members of such unlawful assembly; and a person who rescued the party apprehended was convicted of rescuing from lawful custody within the meaning of s. 225 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. ASSAM SHURRUFF, 13 W. R. 75. [Phear and Mitter, JJ. May 17, 1870.]

PROCEDURE to be observed in the case of a charge under s. 154, Penal Code, against the owner of land on which an unlawful assembly is held, pointed out. A CUMULATIVE sentence under s 143 of the Penal Code (being a member of an unlawful assembly) and under s. 353 (using criminal force against a public servant) was upheld by the High Court in this case.—GOVIND CHUNDER ROY, 16 W. R. 60 Bayley and Paul, JJ. Nov. 25, 1871.]

THERE is no ground for the distinction between an unlawful assembly as a premeditated act and an affray as a sudden one, for, according to s. 141 of the Penal Code, an assembly which was not unlawful when it assembled, may subsequently become an unlawful assembly.—LOKENATH KAR, 18 W. IT cannot be said that a person intentionally joins an unlawful assembly, or continues in it, when it appears from the evidence that he went to the place where the members of the unlawful assembly were gathered, to prevent mischief being done to his own property, which he had a right to protect.—BIRJOO SINGH v. KHUB LALL, 19 W. HELD (Ainslie, J., dissenting) that s. 149 of the Penal Code is not intended to subject a member of an unlawful assembly to punishment for every offence which is committed by one of its members during the time they are engaged in the prosecution of the common object In order to bring a case within s 40, the act must be done with a view to accomplish the common object of the unlawful assembly, or it must be proved that the offence, though committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly, is one which the accused knew would be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object.—Per Jackson, J.—Any offence done by a member of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the particular one or more of the five objects mentioned in s 141, which is or are brought home to the unlawful assembly to which a prisoner belongs, is an offence within the meaning of the first part of s. 149. Where a certain number of persons, members of an unlawful assembly (party A), attacked another party (B), who were in occupation of land, with the view to drive them off the land by force, and one of the members in party A fired a gun at and killed one of the persons in party B, in consequence of a sudden and unexpected resistance which was offered by party B, it was held (Ainslie, J., dissenting), on a consideration of the evidence, that the persons composing party A, other than the person who fired the gun, could not be convicted of murder under s. 149, Penal Code. The conviction was altered under the circumstances to one of rioting armed with a deadly weapon under s. 148 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. SABID ALI, 20 W. R. 5; 11 B. L. R. 347. [Couch, C.J., and Jackson, Phear, Ainslie, and Pontifex, JJ. April 21, 1873.]

IN this case, in which the prisoners were convicted of being members of an unlawful assembly under s. 141 of the Penal Code, the Court held that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a conviction, there being nothing to show what was the specific unlawful object, within the scope of cls. 3 and 4, of the persons composing the assembly.—KOYLASH CHUNDER DASS, 20 W. R. 78. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Nov. 18, 1873.]

IN a case in which the accused were charged with unlawful assembly and trespass, the Magistrate acquitted the accused, but eventually ordered the parties to execute bonds, and furnish security, refusing to take further evidence, and relying on the evidence which had been given before him in the original case in the presence of the accused. Held that the proceedings were irregular. The order was accordingly set aside.—DILOO SINGH v. OOTIM SINGH, 22 W. R. 9. [Kemp and Birch, JJ. April 25, 1874.]

No charge of being members of an unlawful assembly under s. 141, Penal Code, can be sustained, where the intention of the parties was not to enforce a right or supposed right, but to maintain undisturbed the actual subsisting enjoyment of a right which was at that time being exercised.—SHUNKER SINGH (the Panchgachia party), Petitioners: BURMA MAHTO (the Amba party), Petitioners, 23 W. WHERE the officer in charge of a police-station required the officer in charge of another police-station to cause a search to be made in a house within the limits of his station, and such officer, on being required, deputed two officers subordinate to him to make the search without delivering to them the order in writing required by s 379 of Act X. of 1872, it was held that the persons resisting the search attempted could not be lawfully convicted under ss. 353 and 143 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. NARAIN, 7 N.-W. P. 209. [Turner, J. April 13, 1875.]

IN a case in which the accused was bound down to keep the peace, the Assistant Magistrate admitted as evidence the depositions of witnesses in certain cases in which the accused was tried on charges of being a member of an unlawful assembly and of rioting, and was acquitted. Held that the Assistant Magistrate ought not to have admitted this evidence.—QUEEN v. DINA BUNDHOO ROY, 24 W. WHERE a charge under the Penal Code, s. 342 (wrongful confinement), was substantiated against certain prisoners, the Joint-Magistrate was held not to have been justified in treating the case as one of unlawful assembly (s. 143), and disposing of it summarily under the Code of Criminal Procedure, s. 222.—HARAN SHEIKH v. RAMDHUN BISWAS, 24 W. R. 21. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. June 28, 1875.]

IF a number of persons, assembled for any lawful purpose, suddenly quarrel with an intruder without any previous intention or design, they do not commit "riot" in the legal sense of the word.—KHAJA NOORUL HOSSEIN alias KHAJAH WAHED JAN v. FABRE-TONNERRE, 24 W. R. 26. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. July 12, 1875.]

WHERE, after the object of an unlawful assembly had been accomplished, and the opposite party driven away, one of the members entered into an altercation with another, and wounded him with a fish-spear, it was held that the act was not one done with a view to accomplish the common object of the assembly, or one which the rest knew would be likely to be committed in the prosecution of that object.—IN THE MATTER OF BINOD, 24 W. R. 66. [Kemp and Glover, JJ Nov. 17, 1875.]

THE offence of rioting consists in the use of violence by an unlawful assembly, or by any member thereof, in the prosecution of the common object. But as in this case there were never five persons assembled together to constitute an unlawful assembly, and the intention to use force does not appear to have been carried out, no offence under the Penal Code is established against the accused.—IN THE MATTER OF RAMADEEN DOOBAY, 26 W. R. 6. [Markby and Mitter, JJ. Aug. 17, 1876.]

IF a body of men armed with lathis, and under the leadership of one who, to the knowledge of the rest, is armed with a gun, assemble for the purpose of forcibly carrying off another man's property, and if, in effecting that purpose, any one of the party, taking the gun, shoots and kills a person who is making a lawful resistance, the whole party may properly be convicted of murder under s. 149 of the Penal Code.—HARI SING v. EMPRESS, 3 C. L. R. 49. [Jackson, Mitter, and Maclean, JJ. June 4, 1878.]

TO constitute an offence under s. 157 of the Penal Code, it must be proved that the accused has hired, or engaged, or employed other persons for the purpose of an unlawful assembly, and it is not sufficient to show that some of the accused's servants have been taken from a district where men have a well-known character as lathials, and had been in his service some time before the riot was perpetrated. A non-resident partner or sharer, who has taken no active part in the management of the estate, cannot, like a resident sharer, be convicted under ss 154 and 155 of the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF RADHANATH CHOWDHRY, 7 C. L. R. 289. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Sep. 9, 1880.]

A DISTURBANCE having been created with reference to the possession of certain chur land, the Sessions Judge, on appeal, found that certain persons had unlawfully trespassed thereupon, and that the accused had been justified in resisting the trespassers by force. Inasmuch, however, as he considered the accused had exceeded their right of private defence of their property, he convicted them of rioting under s. 148 of the Penal Code. Held that, on the findings of the Judge, the conviction could not be supported, inasmuch as on such findings the persons convicted were not members of an unlawful assembly.—IN THE MATTER OF KALEE MUNDLE, 10 C. L. R. 278 [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Feb 21, 1882]

WHERE the object of only three persons was to draw a crowd and their action was such as was calculated to, and did, draw a crowd of fifty or sixty persons likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace. Held that the gathering constituted an assembly of five or more persons within the meaning of s. 151 of the Penal Code, and that a refusal to disperse after being lawfully commanded to disperse rendered every member of the gathering liable to conviction under the said section.—EMPRESS v. TUCKER, I. L. R., 7 Bom. 42. [Kemball and Pinhey, JJ. Sep. 28, 1882.]

ON the trial of certain persons charged with being members of an unlawful assembly, it was proved that there was a dispute of long standing between the accused and certain other parties regarding the possession of certain land; that neither of the parties was in undisturbed possession of the land; that the accused went to sow the land with indigo, accompanied by a body of men armed with lathis; that they were prepared to use force, if necessary, and that the lathials kept off the opposite party by brandishing their weapons while the land was sowed. Held that the accused were rightly convicted of being members of an unlawful assembly under s. 143 of the Penal Code. Sunker Singh v. Burmah Mahto (23 W. R. 25) distinguished.—IN THE MATTER OF PEARY MOHUN SIRCAR v. EMPRESS, I. L. R., 9 Cal. 639; 13 C. L. R. 80. [Wilson and Maclean, JJ. Mar. 1, 1883.]

A MEMBER of an unlawful assembly, some members of which have caused grievous hurt, cannot lawfully be punished for the offence of rioting as well as for the offence of causing grievous hurt.—EMPRESS v. RAM PARTAB, I. L. R., 6 All. 121. [Straight, J. Dec. 5, 1883.] Dissented from in Queen-Empress v. Dungar Singh, I L. R., 7 All. 29, infra.

FOUR persons were charged with being members of an unlawful assembly consisting of themselves and others, the common object of which assembly was resisting the execution of a legal process, namely, the arrest of a judgment-debtor by a Civil Court peon, who went with his warrant for his arrest accompanied by other persons, A and B, for the purpose of identifying him, and with using force or violence in prosecution of the common object, such force or violence consisting of an assault on the Civil Court peon and another by means of a dangerous weapon on A. The Deputy Magistrate convicted all the accused of offences under ss. 147 and 353 of the Penal Code, and sentenced them to six months' rigorous imprisonment under the former section, and two months' rigorous imprisonment under the latter. He further convicted one of the accused of an offence under s 324 in respect of the assault on A, and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment in respect of that offence, and directed that the sentences were to take effect one on the expiry of the other. Held that the offence of rioting was completed by the assault on A, and that the assault on the peon was a further offence under the first sub-section of s. 235 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held, further, that, even if A had not been assaulted, the conviction and sentences passed for rioting and the assault on the peon were legal, inasmuch as the acts of the accused taken separately, constituted offences under ss. 143 and 353 of the Penal Code, and, combined, an offence under s. 147; and under s. 235, sub-s. 3 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the accused might be charged with, and tried at one trial for, the offence under s. 147, and those under ss. 143 and 353, and therefore also separately convicted and sentenced for each such offence, provided the punishment did not exceed the limit imposed by s. 71 of the Penal Code as amended by s. 4 of Act. VIII. of 1882, which limit had not been exceeded in the present case.—IN THE MATTER OF CHANDRA KANT BHATTACHARJEE, CHANDRA KANT BHATTACHARJEE v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 12 Cal. 495. [Mitter and Beverley, JJ. Dec. 11, 1885.]

FISH in a public river cannot be said to be property in the possession of the person who may have the fishery-right, and the infringement of that right is not theft under s. 378 of the Penal Code. The accused were charged with unlawfully taking fish along with some eleven others in a public river, the right of fishing in which had been let out by the Government to the complainant; and the lower Court, amongst other offences, convicted them of theft, criminal misappropriation, mischief, criminal trespass, and unlawful assembly. Held that the conviction was wrong, and that no offence had been committed.—BHAGIRAM DOME v. ABAR DOME, I. L. R., 15 Cal. 388. [Norris and Ghose, JJ. Jan. 24, 1888.]

ONE of two village-factions objected to the other passing in procession over a vacant piece of ground in the main street of the village. An injunction prohibiting the procession was obtained in the Court of the District Munsif on 20th March. On 11th May a procession was formed, and approached the ground in question. Forty-six members of the first-named faction were assembled there to prevent the procession by force; the police ordered them to disperse; this order having been neglected, the police prevailed on the other faction to abandon the procession. Held that the persons who did not disperse on being ordered to do so were guilty of the offence of being members of an unlawful assembly.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. TIRA KADU, I. L. R., 14 Mad. 126. [Muttusami Ayyar and Best, JJ. Oct. 3, 1890.]

WHERE a District Magistrate issued a warrant for the arrest and production of a witness for the purpose of giving evidence at an investigation held by the police, and in attempting to execute such warrant, the police arrested the wrong person and were assaulted in the attempt, held that, apart from the fact that the attempt to arrest was made on the wrong person, a District Magistrate has no authority to issue a warrant for the production of a witness at an investigation by a police-officer, but only before his own Court under ss. 76, 81 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held also that, as the investigation was held by a police-officer under Ch. XIV. of the Criminal Procedure Code, the proper course was for the Sub-Inspector of Police to require the attendance of the witness under s. 160 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and on failure by her to comply with such order, prosecute her under s. 174 of the Penal Code. Held, further, that the accused were justified in their resistance, and that no offence either under s. 143 or s. 186 of the Penal Code was committed, and that they should be acquitted.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. JOGENDRA NATH MUKERJEE, I. L. R., 24 Cal. 320. [Ghose and Gordon, JJ. Jan. 19, 1897.]

CONVICTION of a person under s 143 of the Penal Code is not necessarily a ground for making an order against him under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In order to bring his acts within the terms of the latter section, there must either be an express finding to the effect that his acts involved a breach of the peace, or an evident intention of committing the same, or the evidence must be so clear as to satisfy the Court (without an express finding) that such was the case.—JIB LAL GIR v. JOGMOHAN GIR, I. L. R., 26 Cal. 570. [Prinsep and Stevens, JJ. Mar. 22, 1899.]

AN offence under s. 143 of the Penal Code is not one of the offences specified in s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which would justify an order directing a person or persons to furnish security to keep the peace. There may be findings in the case which would justify such an order if such findings can be brought within the terms of s. 106. Jib Lal Gir v. Jugmohun Gir (I. L. R., 26 Cal. 576) referred to. Where the accused were convicted under s. 143 of the Penal Code, and ordered under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code to furnish security to keep the peace, and it was alleged that the facts as proved showed that the accused came in a body, some of whom were armed with lathis, and some of whom used threats, and did other acts, showing an evident intention to commit breaches of the peace, held that there should have been an express finding to that effect, that if the accused or any of them acted in such a manner, they should have been convicted of criminal intimidation or other offence which would enable the Magistrate to bind them over to keep the peace; and that the order under s. 106 should be set aside.—SHEO BHAJAN SINGH v. MOSAWI, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 983. [Prinsep and Handley, JJ. June 5, 1900.]

HOUSE-TRESPASS and mischief not being separate offences, but being included in the graver offence of being members of an unlawful assembly armed with deadly weapons, no separate convictions and sentences were deemed to be requisite.—QUEEN v. SURKOOP NAPIT, 3 W. R. 54. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. July 15, 1865.]

IT is unnecessary to punish a prisoner under both s. 144 and s. 148 of the Penal Code, as the offence under s 144 is almost merged in the offence under s. 148. There is, however, nothing actually illegal in sentencing for both offences.—SREEKISSEN v. JUGLAL, 9 W. R., 5. [Kemp and Jackson, JJ. Jan. 13, 1868.]

SEPARATE sentences passed upon persons for the offences of rioting and grievous hurt are not legal, where it is found that such persons individually did not commit any act which amounted to voluntarily causing hurt, but were guilty of that offence under s. 149 of the Penal Code. Empress v. Ram Partab (I. L. R., 6 All. 121) approved. Loke Nath Sirkar v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 11 Cal. 349) overruled. — NILMONEY PODDAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 442. [Petheram, C.J., and Mitter, Prinsep, Wilson, and Tottenham, JJ. Mar. 21, 1889.]

Two persons were charged with being members of an unlawful assembly armed with deadly weapons for the purpose of committing dacoity. The facts proved were that a crowd of about 100 persons, including the accused, had assembled together, armed with bill-hooks and sticks, and that the crowd had dispersed at once on seeing the police. On these facts the Magistrate assumed that the intention of the members of the crowd was to use criminal force, and, having regard to the weapons with which they were armed, he convicted the accused under s. 144 of the Indian Penal Code. Held that the prosecution had failed to show that the common object of the crowd was such as would constitute it an unlawful assembly as defined by s. 141 of the Indian Penal Code, and that the accused were entitled to be acquitted.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PERUMUTHU TEVAN, I. L. R., 24 Mad. 124. [Benson and Moore, JJ. Sep. 14, 1900.]

Joining or continuing in unlawful assembly, knowing it has been commanded to disperse.

UNDER s. 127 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898) any Magistrate or officer in charge of a police-station may command any unlawful assembly, or any assembly of five or more persons likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace, to disperse; and it shall thereupon be the duty of the members of such assembly to disperse accordingly.

A SESSIONS JUDGE has no authority to interfere and direct a commitment in the case of a conviction for assault under s. 352, or of hurt under s. 323, of the Penal Code, both of them being offences triable by the Subordinate Court. When the result of a joint attack by several persons on one party is fracture of the arm of the party assaulted, the offence committed is grievous hurt, and not assault: and as the attack was made in furtherance of a common object, all are equally guilty of the same offence.—QUEEN v. TOHUL SING, 5 W. R. 12. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 16, 1866.]

WHERE a man is grievously wounded in a riot, the police are bound to act without taking into consideration who was the aggressing party. In the discharge of their duties, and in the absence of any proof that they exceeded their duty, the police were held entitled to the protection of the Court. —QUEEN v. DAMOO SINGH, 8 W. R. 36. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 8, 1867.]

A MEMBER of an unlawful assembly, some members of which have caused grievous hurt, cannot lawfully be punished for the offence of rioting as well as for the offence of causing grievous hurt.—EMPRESS v. RAM PROTAB, I. L. R., 6 All. 121. [Straight, J. Dec. 5, 1883.] Dissented from in Queen-Empress v. Dungar Singh, I. L. R., 7 All. 29, infra.

PROCEEDINGS in which certain villagers were accused of having committed a serious riot in order to stop a procession which they disapproved of, and believed had been rendered illegal as contrary to law. The rioters were acquitted by the Magistrate, because he thought they might have considered their act justified because the procession was illegal by virtue of some orders, which did not appear, and which might have been efficacious in point of law. Held that the thinking a thing legal which is not so can be no defence to a man who violates a rule of law; that there was no evidence that the procession was illegal; and that, if it were, the accused were bound to invoke the aid of the tribunals charged with the enforcement of the law. Innes, J., adds: "The assembly was unlawful, because its object was to enforce a supposed right by a show of criminal force. In pursuance of the common object, force was used, and a serious riot took place." — PRO., Jan. 8, 1873, 7 Mad. H. C. R. App. 35. [Holloway and Innes, JJ. Jan. 8, 1873.]

A LANDLORD, who had not tendered to his tenant such a pottah as the latter was bound to accept under the Madras Rent Recovery Act, distrained his cattle for arrears of rent, the assistance of the police having been procured for the purpose. The tenant, with the assistance of eleven other persons, forcibly obstructed the removal of the cattle, which had already been actually seized and driven for some yards. They were charged with the offence of rioting, and convicted. Held that the conviction was right.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMAYYA, I. L. R., 13 Mad. 148. [Collins, C.J., and Parker, J. Oct. 2, 25 1889.]

Punishment for rioting.

A HUSBAND, or those who aided him, cannot be convicted of kidnapping for taking away his own wife; but they are guilty of rioting if they carry out the husband's object of getting possession of his wife by force and violence and in the darkness of night.—QUEEN v. ASKUR, W. R. Gap. 1864, 12. [Steer and Seton-Karr, JJ. Feb. 22, 1864.]

THE prisoners, having been part of an assembly of more than five persons, whose common object, as apparent from their acts, was, by means of criminal force, to recover possession of their cattle seized for trespass (whether properly pounded or not), and who made use of such force and took away their cattle, were held guilty of rioting, and liable to conviction under s. 147 of the Penal Code, and not under s. 11, Act V. of 1857.—QUEEN v. BOKOO SHEIKH, W. R., Gap. 1864, 21. [Jackson, J. April 12, 1864.]

THERE cannot be a conviction both of "rioting" and of "being members of an illegal assembly." The greater charge includes the less, and to punish under both sections of the Penal Code would be cumulative and illegal. Were both original sentences legal the appeal would lie to the Sessions Judge.—MEELAN KHALIFA v. DWARKA NATH GOOPTO, 1 W. R. 7. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 17, 1864.]

IN an affray respecting land one of the aggressive party was killed. The prisoners, who were exercising the right of private defence of property, were acquitted by the jury of culpable homicide, but convicted of rioting. Held that the prisoners, not being legally guilty of culpable homicide, were not legally guilty of any other offence, coupled with rioting, and, not being rioters, or mem-

(g) to s 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898), which runs thus: "A. with six others, commits the offences of rioting, grievous hurt, and assaulting a public servant endeavouring in the discharge of his duty as such to suppress the riot. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under ss. 147, 325, and 152 of the Indian Penal Code.

DISPUTE between two parties (the Mullahs and Shikdars), in which the Shikdars attacked and killed one of the Mullahs when exercising the right of re-taking their own property, three of the Shikdars being also wounded. The Shikdars were convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and rioting. As to the Mullahs, Loch, J., was of opinion that they were guilty of voluntarily causing grievous hurt: while the majority of the Court held that they were entitled to the protection conferred by s. 101, Penal Code, on those who, while exercising the right of private defence, caused their assailants any harm other than death.—QUEEN v. TANOO SHIKDAR, 3 W. R. 47. [Loch, Kemp, and Seton-Karr, JJ. July 17, 1865.

HELD by the majority of the Court (Seton-Karr, J., dissenting) that an attack made in the morning by an unlawful armed assembly, with the object of rescuing two thieves who had been captured during the night, and in which murder was committed, was a premeditated attack for which all concerned were liable to conviction for riot attended with murder.—QUEEN v. BHUNJUN PAURAY, 4 W. R. 8. [Kemp, Seton-Karr, and Glover, JJ. Sep. 12, 1865.]

A DISMISSAL by one Court of a charge of riot against A may be a bar to A's trial by another Court on the same charge, but it does not extend to other persons not then before the Court which ordered the dismissal. The dismissal by one Court of the charge of riot instituted by the police is no bar to the trial by another Court of a charge of criminal trespass instituted by a third person, although the two charges may substantially refer to the same occurrences. There is no right of appeal, because the united sentences in three separate cases amount to more than a month's imprisonment.—QUEEN v. MORLY SHEIKH, 6 W. R. 51. [Seton-Karr and Pundit, JJ. Aug. 6, 1866.]

WHERE an affray took place, both parties turning out armed with deadly weapons, it cannot be said that there was any right of private defence, as either party well knew beforehand what was likely to happen. Where land was already sown with corn, an indigo-factory had no right to attempt forcibly to sow indigo in it, although it was indigo-contract land; and villagers had no right to oppose such forcible sowing by force inasmuch as the police-station was close by.—QUEEN v. JEOLALL, 3 Wyman's Rev., Civ., and Crim. Reporter, 21; 2 Mad. Jur. 168. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Feb. 18, 1867.]

WHERE persons join an unlawful assembly for the purpose of committing an assault, and, instead of preventing those armed from using their weapons, encourage them to do so, they are in the same position as those members of the unlawful assembly who struck the blows.—QUEEN v. DUSHRUTH ROY, 7 W. R. 58. [Glover, J. April 18, 1867.

IN a case of riot, in which a man was killed, the whole of the members of the unlawful assembly, as well the victorious as the worsted, were held equally guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. MANA SINGH, 7 W. R. 67. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. May 7, 1867.

WHERE a man is grievously wounded in a riot, the police are bound to act without taking into consideration who was the aggressing party. In the discharge of their duties, and in the absence of any proof that they exceeded their duty, the police were held entitled to the protection of the Court.—QUEEN v. DAMOO SINGH, 8 W. R. 36. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 8, 1867.]

THERE had been a riot and fight between two factions, and some members of one party (A) were charged with the murder of the leader of the other party (B), and some members of the other party (B) were charged with causing grievous hurt to the leader of party (A). Held that the members of each party should have been committed for trial separately, and that the Magistrate was wrong in committing the members of party (A) and of party (B) for trial all together upon joint charges as if they had had one common object.—QUEEN v. SHEIK BAZU, 8 W. R. 47; B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 750. [Peacock, C.J., and Loch, Bayley, Kemp, Seton-Karr, Phear, and Macpherson, JJ. July 27, 1867.

WHERE prisoners are charged both with rioting, being armed with deadly weapons, and with causing hurt by shooting, and their conviction of the latter offence rests solely on the fact of their belonging to a party by one of whom (not one of the prisoners) firearms were used, it is wrong to pass a cumulative sentence, and to punish the prisoners both for the rioting and for the causing hurt. The punishment should be for either one or other of those offences. A charge should be so framed as to refer to the section of the Penal Code under which the offence charged is punishable as required by ss. 234 and 237 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Where there is a riot and fighting between two factions, the members of each party should be committed for trial separately, and not all together.—QUEEN v. DURZOOLLA, 9 W. R. 33. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. Mar. 14, 1868.] See contra, Queen v. Callachand, 7 W. R. 60, infra.

A PARTY in possession of land is legally entitled to defend his possession against another party seeking to eject him by force. Therefore, where there was a charge against both parties of rioting under s. 147, and both were convicted and punished, the High Court quashed the conviction, holding that the party in possession was protected by s. 104, Penal Code.—QUEEN v. TOOLSEE SING, 2 B. L. R. Ap. Cr. 16; 10 W. R. 64. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Dec. 21, 1868.]

IN a trial arising out of an affray or faction-fight, the members of each faction should be tried separately. The statements of the members of each faction can then, if desired, be taken on solemn affirmation, and be made evidence against their opponents; but if they decline to give evidence on the ground of implicating themselves, they cannot be compelled to do so.—QUEEN v. MAHOMED HOSSEIN, 1 N.-W. P. 293. Pearson and Turner, JJ. April 2, 1869.

WHERE land in the possession of A was encroached on by the servants of B. who committed mischief on the land, and the servants of A assembled and resisted the encroachments, the High Court declined to interfere with the Magistrate's order convicting the servants of A of unlawful assembly, as there was no error in law in the order of the Magistrate, who found as a fact that the right of defence of private property had ceased under cl. 4, s. 105 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. RAJKRISTO DOSS, 12 W. R. 43. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Aug. 3, 1869.]

THE act of the defendants in assembling and forcibly interrupting a procession was forbidden by cl. 4 of s. 141, although the defendants acted upon the ground that the procession was a nuisance or annoyance to them or their community.—PRO., Nov. 11, 1869, 5 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 4.

WHERE the evidence in a case failed to establish anything like an unlawful assembly, the conviction was reduced from rioting and being members of an unlawful assembly to one for affray, although grievous hurt from which death resulted was caused to one of the persons. The insufficiency of the punishment allowed by the law in cases of affray pointed out.—QUEEN v. PHOOLEE MISSER, 12 W. R. 72. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. Nov. 30, 1869.]

WHERE two opposite factions commit a riot, it is irregular to treat both parties as constituting one unlawful assembly, and to try them together, inasmuch as they do not have "one common object" within the meaning of s. 141 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. SURROOP CHUNDER PAUL, 12 W. R. 75. [Norman and Kemp, JJ. Dec. 10, 1869.]

S. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not authorize a Magistrate summarily to direct a person to remove a wall erected on land alleged to belong to another person, in the absence of evidence showing that a riot or affray was likely to occur.—RADHAKISHORE v. GIRIDHAREE SAHEE, 13 W. R. 19. [Loch and Hobhouse, JJ. Feb. 7, 1870.]

PERSONS found guilty of rioting may, if the circumstances warrant it, be convicted of the several offences of rioting armed with deadly weapons, culpable homicide, and grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. HURGOBIND, 3 N.-W. WHERE the accused were convicted under s. 147 of the Penal Code of rioting, and also under s. 353 of using criminal force to a constable who went to arrest them, the High Court set aside the conviction under the former section.—IN THE MATTER OF NILRUTTON SEIN, 16 W. R 45 [Kemp and Ainslie, JJ. Sep. 9, 1871.]

AN accused person cannot be punished first on a charge for rioting, and afterwards on a charge for hurt, when the latter is included in the former. Per D. N. Mitter, J.—An Appellate Court is bound precisely in the same way as the Court of first instance to test evidence extrinsically as well as intrinsically. Per Ainslie, J.—A Magistrate, as an executive officer, is not bound to attend to a Judge's extra-judicial observation not warranted by law.—IN THE MATTER OF GOOMANEE, 17 W. R. 59. [Mitter and Ainslie, JJ. May 8, 1872.]

IN a case of very serious riot, the rioters were acquitted by the Magistrate, because he thought they might have considered their act justified because the procession was illegal by virtue of some orders, which did not appear, which might have been efficacious in point of law. Held that the thinking a thing legal which is not so can be no defence to a man who violates a rule of law; that there was no evidence that the procession was illegal; and that, if it were, the accused were bound to invoke the aid of the tribunals charged with the enforcement of the law.—PRO., Jan. 8, 1873, 7 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 35.

Two parties were convicted of rioting. One party consisted of not less than five persons, who were all found to have been assembled together in the fight which took place; and it was also found that they, as well as their opponents, came armed with sticks, prepared to fight, and did fight. Held that they were not improperly convicted of rioting, their common object being to assault their opponents. The other party only consisted of four persons. It was not found what object they had in common with the first party. The fight did not occur in a public place. Held that they were not properly convicted of rioting. Held, also, that, had the fight occurred in a public place, it might have been held that the common object of both parties was to commit an affray.—QUEEN v. MUZHUR HOSSEIN, 5 N.-W. P. 208. [Pearson, J. July 5, 1873.

UNDER Act V. of 1861, a police-officer is bound to communicate information to his superior officer regarding the commission of a riot affecting the public peace, and to make an entry thereof in the diary which he is required by s. 44 of that Act to keep, and the omission to give such information brings him within the purview of s. 177 of the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF SYED FUTTEH MAHOMED. 21 W. R. 30. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 17, 1874.]

WHERE the only evidence for the prosecution was that of witnesses whom the Judicial Commissioner considered unworthy of belief, it was held that the prisoners, who were charged with rioting, ought not to have been convicted on the statements of the opposite party, who were also charged with rioting, such statements not being evidence against the accused in this case.—QUEEN v. KHUKREE OORAM, 21 W. R. 48. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Mar. 11, 1874.]

IT is necessary, before persons can be convicted of rioting, &c., under s. 147 or s. 149, Penal Code, to ascertain clearly that they have taken such a share in the transaction as will bring them within the criminal charge; and it must appear on the evidence that they had a common object, which common object they were going to carry out by unlawful means.—QUEEN v. GHOLAM MAHOMED, 22 W. R. 17. [Markby and Mitter, JJ. May 26, 1874.]

WHERE a charge of rioting was tried summarily by the Magistrate as one of mischief and unlawful assembly, the Sessions Judge, relying on a case cited, submitted, at the request of the accused, that the summary order may be set aside, and the accused may be tried for rioting under ch. 17 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The High Court declined to interfere at the instance of the accused persons, and distinguished this from the case cited by the Sessions Judge, as the reference there was made by the Magistrate in the interests of public justice.—QUEEN v. ABOO SHEIK, 23 W. R. 19. [Phear and Ainslie, JJ. Jan. 13, 1875.]

IN a case in which the accused was bound down to keep the peace, the Assistant Magistrate admitted as evidence the depositions of witnesses in certain cases in which the accused was tried on charges of being a member of an unlawful assembly and of rioting, and was acquitted. Held that the Assistant Magistrate ought not to have admitted this evidence.—QUEEN v. DINA BUNDOO ROY, 24 W. R. 4. [Markby and Morris, JJ. May 10, 1875.]

IF a number of persons, assembled for any lawful purpose, suddenly quarrel with an intruder without any previous intention or design, they do not commit "riot" in the legal sense of the word.—KHAJAH NOORUL HOSSEIN alias WAHEED JAN v. FABRE-TONNERRE, 24 W. R. 26. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. July 12, 1875.]

THE offence of rioting consists in the use of violence by an unlawful assembly or by any member thereof in the prosecution of the common object. But as in this case there were never five persons assembled together to constitute an unlawful assembly, and the intention to use force does not appear to have been carried out, no offence under the Penal Code is established against the accused.—IN THE MATTER OF RAMADEEN DOOBAY, 26 W. R. 6. [Markby and Mitter, JJ. Aug. 17, 1876.]

WHERE both parties were armed and prepared to fight, it is immaterial who is the first to attack, unless it is shown that the party was acting within the legal limits of the right of private defence.—IN THE MATTER OF KALEE BEPAREE, 1 C. L. R. 521. [Jackson and Cunningham, JJ. Mar. 5, 1878.]

A, a joint-owner of a parcel of land, erected on it an edifice without the consent and against the will of B, another joint-owner. A dispute having arisen in consequence, the Magistrate held an inquiry, and made an order under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code, awarding to A exclusive possession of the part of the land on which the edifice had been erected. Held, per Jackson, J., that such order was erroneous, as the matter was not one to which s. 530 could apply. B subsequently brought a suit in the Civil Court to establish his title to joint-possession of the whole parcel, and for a declaration that A was not entitled to erect any edifice thereon: and he further prayed that such edifice should be removed. B obtained a decree, whereupon his servants went on the land, and pulled it down. They were charged before the Deputy Magistrate with having committed mischief, and on this convicted and fined. Held, per Jackson, J., that, as there had been no causing of wrongful loss, the accused had not been guilty of mischief. On the 8th October, the accused, who were the servants of B, found that the men in the employ of A were again putting up this erection, a nawbut-khana, and accordingly protested against its erection, pulled down the bamboos, and thrust aside the servants of A, throwing to the ground one man who was clinging to the bamboos. On the 9th October 1877, these servants were charged before the Magistrate with rioting, and, being called upon for their defence, named several witnesses, and summonses on the following morning were issued for their appearance; but they were not found. The accused then applied for further time for the appearance of the witnesses. This the Magistrate refused to grant, and convicted the accused on 12th October 1877. Held, per Jackson, J., that, this being a warrant case, it was the duty of the Magistrate to summon the witnesses that might be offered by the accused, and that he might, at his discretion, have adjourned the case. Held further, per Jackson, J., that the meaning of s. 359 of the Criminal Procedure Code is, that, if, among the persons named by the accused as witnesses, the Magistrate considers that any witness is included for the purpose of vexation and delay, he is to exercise his judgment, and enquire whether such witness is material; but that the section is not intended to enable the Magistrate to inquire into what the defence of the accused person is to be, and to consider whether, on learning the nature of the defence, he is absolutely to abstain from summoning the whole of the witnesses cited by the accused: and further that, in the present case, there was not any purpose of vexation or delay, and that, by the refusal to grant further time, the accused had been probably prejudiced in their defence. Held, further, per Jackson, J., that, as the accused were not on the land in question as members of an unlawful assembly, nor for any unlawful purpose, the conviction, as well as the procedure, was illegal Held per Cunningham, J., that the accused were merely exercising the remedy of abating a private nuisance, and were exercising a legal right of self-defence. Held, further, per Cunningham, J., that the acts of the complainants in erecting the nawbut-khana amounted to mischief, and came within the purview of s. 425 of the Penal Code. Held, further, per Ainslie and McDonell, JJ., that the High Court, in the exercise of its powers of extraordinary jurisdiction, cannot, in criminal matters, interfere, unless all other remedies provided by law have been previously exhausted. Therefore, where parties who had been convicted of riot by a Magistrate, and who, having a right of appeal to the Sessions Court, instead of doing so, moved the High Court under cl. 15 of the Charter, the Court would not interfere until that remedy had been resorted to.—DESONATH GHATTACK v. RAJCOOMAR SINGH, I. L. R., 3 Cal. 573. Jackson and Cunningham, JJ. Mar. 25—27, 1878.]

RIOTING and hurt in the course of such rioting are distinct offences, and each offence is separately punishable.—EMPRESS v RAM ADHIN, I. L. R., 2 All 139. [Pearson, J. Feb. 5, 13, 1879.]

MEMBERS of two opposing parties in a riot were, under two distinct committals, sent up for trial before the Sessions Judge and a jury. After the close of the case for the prosecution in one of these cases, the Sessions Judge, with the consent of the pleaders representing the accused, postponed the taking of the evidence for the defence, and proceeded to examine the witnesses for the prosecution in the counter-case before the same jury The Court then took the evidence of the witnesses for the defence in the first and in the counter-case in the order named, and after hearing the addresses of the various pleaders for the defence and the reply of the Government Pleader, proceeded to sum up the facts in both cases to the jury, who returned a verdict in respect of all the accused. Held that the procedure resorted to by the Judge was a practical violation of the salutary rule which necessitated the keeping of trials in such cases distinctly separate, and that its adoption having materially prejudiced the interest of the accused, the convictions should be set aside. Held further [Queen v. Shrik Basu (B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 750; 8 W. R 47) distinguished] that the defect in the procedure could not be cured by the consent of the pleaders for the defence to the arrangement suggested by the Court.—HOSSEIN BUKSH v EMPRESS, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 96. [Morris and Prinsep, JJ June 24, 1880.]

To constitute an offence under s. 157 of the Penal Code, it must be proved that the accused has hired, or engaged, or employed other persons for the purpose of an unlawful assembly, and it is not sufficient to show that some of the accused's servants have been taken from a district where men have a well-known character as lathials, and had been in his service some time before the riot was perpetrated. A non-resident partner or sharer, who has taken no active part in the management of the estate, cannot, like a resident sharer, be convicted under ss. 154 and 155 of the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF RADHANATH CHOWDHRY, 7 C. L. R. 289. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Sep. 9, 1880.]

WHERE persons are charged with rioting and also with causing hurt, although they may be tried as for one offence under s. 454 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is not illegal to try them for both offences separately.—IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF AMIRUDDIN; AMIRUDDIN v. FARID SARKAR, I. L. R., 8 Cal. 481. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Mar. 10, 1882.]

WHERE the accused had been convicted of riot under s. 148, and of grievous hurt under s. 325 of the Penal Code, the Sessions Judge on appeal held that the complainants had themselves been the aggressors, and that the accused had merely exercised the right of private defence; but inasmuch as they had not set up the plea of private defence, he considered it was not competent to him to set aside the conviction. Held that, on the finding of the Sessions Judge, the accused were entitled to an acquittal.—IN THE MATTER OF KALI CHURN MOOKERJEE, 11 C. L. R. 232. [Prinsep and O'Kinealy, JJ. May 22, 1882.]

A PLEA of right to possession is no answer to a charge of rioting by making a forcible entry on land cultivated by a trespasser who is in possession, and opposes the entry.—APPAVU v. QUEEN, I. L. R., 6 Mad. 245. [Innes, J. Dec. 12, 19, 1882.]

WHERE a riot occurred, and complaints were lodged by both parties, the witnesses for the prosecution were in each case in turn examined-in-chief, then also in turn cross-examined, and in like manner re-examined, and the Court thereupon discharged the accused in one case, and called upon the accused on the other to go into his defence. Held that the procedure adopted was improper, and that there should be a new trial. Empress v. Chandra Nath Sircar (I. L. R., 7 Cal. 65; 8 C. L. R. 352) followed. The provisions of s. 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code in no way affect the powers of the High Court as a Court of Revision vested in it by the High Courts Act.—IN THE MATTER OF CHAKOWRI LALL, 13 C. L. R. 275. [Prinsep, J. Aug. 13, 1883.]

A MEMBER of an unlawful assembly, some members of which have caused grievous hurt, cannot lawfully be punished for the offence of rioting as well as for the offence of causing grievous hurt.—EMPRESS v. RAM PARTAB, I. L. R., 6 All. 121. [Straight, J. Dec. 5, 1883.] Dissented from in Queen-Empress v. Dungar Singh, I. L. R., 7 All. 29, infra.

THE offences of rioting, of voluntarily causing hurt, and of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, each of the two latter offences being committed against a different person, are all distinct offences within the meaning of s. 35 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Under the first paragraph of s. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a person accused of rioting and of voluntarily causing grievous hurt may be charged with, and tried for, each offence at one trial, and, under s. 35, separate sentence may be passed in respect of each. Queen-Empress v. Ram Partab (I. L. R., 6 All. 121) dissented from.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DUNGAR SINGH, I. L. R., 7 All. 29. [Brodhurst, J. July 22, 1884.]

ON the 8th August 1884, a Magistrate of the second class began an inquiry in a case in which several persons were accused of rioting and voluntarily causing grievous hurt. On the 6th September, the powers of a Magistrate of the first class were conferred on the Magistrate by an order of Government, which was communicated to him on the 8th September. On the 9th September the case for the prosecution having closed, the Magistrate framed charges against each of the accused under ss. 323 and 325 of the Penal Code, recorded the statements of the accused and the evidence for the defence, and, on the 10th September, convicted the accused of all the charges, passing upon each of them, in respect of each charge, sentences which he could pass as a Magistrate of the first class, but could not have passed as a Magistrate of the second class. On appeal, the Sessions Judge, on the ground that the prisoners had committed the offence described in s. 148 of the Penal Code, held that the sentences passed by the Magistrate were illegal, as being inconsistent with the provisions of s. 71, paras. 2 and 4; and he accordingly reduced the sentences of imprisonment which the Magistrate had passed to the maximum of imprisonment which the Magistrate could have inflicted under s. 148. Held by the Full Bench (Petheram, C.J., and Brodhurst, J., dissenting) that the sentences passed by the Magistrate were legal. Per Oldfield, Mahmood, and Duthoit, JJ., that, with reference to the terms of s. 39 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate of the second class, who has begun a trial as such, and continued it in the same capacity up to the passing of sentence, and who, prior to passing sentence has been invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the first class, is competent to pass sentence in the case as a Magistrate of the first class. Per Oldfield and Duthoit, JJ., that the provisions of s. 71 of the Penal Code had no application to the case, inasmuch as the offences of causing grievous hurt and hurt formed no part of the offence of rioting. Per Petheram, C.J., that a case must be taken to be tried upon the day the trial commences, that, for all the purposes of the trial, the Magistrate in this case retained the status of a Magistrate of the second class; and that he was therefore not competent to pass sentence as a Magistrate of the first class. Also per Petheram, C.J., that the Judge in this case had no power to alter the charge, or to frame a new charge in any way. Per Brodhurst, J., that the sentences passed by the Magistrate were, as a whole, illegal; that, if he had convicted the accused under s. 148 of the Penal Code, his order would, under the circumstances, have been legal; that a Court of Appeal is not competent to alter the finding of a Magistrate, so as to convict an accused person of an offence which the Court, of which the order is in appeal, was not competent to try; and that a member of an unlawful assembly, some members of which have caused grievous hurt, can be legally punished for the offence of rioting as well as for the offence of causing grievous hurt. Empress v. Dungar Singh (I. L. R., 7 All. 29) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PERSHAD, I. L. R., 7 All. 414. [Petheram, C.J., and Oldfield, Brodhurst, Mahmood, and Duthoit, JJ. Jan. 17, 1885.]

THREE persons who were convicted (i) of riot under s. 147 of the Penal Code, (ii) of causing grievous hurt in the course of such riot, were respectively sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment under s. 147, and three months' rigorous imprisonment under s. 325. Held by Petheram, C.J., and Straight and Tyrrel, JJ., that, inasmuch as the evidence upon the record showed that the three prisoners had committed individual acts of violence with their own hands, which constituted distinct offences of causing grievous hurt or hurt separate from, and independent of, the offence of riot, which was already completed, and the fact of the riot was not an essential portion of the evidence necessary to establish their legal responsibility under s. 325 of the Penal Code, the separate sentences passed under ss. 147 and 325 were not legal. Queen-Empress v Ram Partab (I. L. R., 6 All. 121), distinguished. Per Brodhurst, J., that the evidence showed that only one of the three prisoners had caused grievous hurt with his own hands, and that the others could only be properly convicted of that offence under the provisions of s. 149 of the Penal Code, but that the separate sentences passed under ss. 147 and 325 were not illegal. Queen-Empress v. Dungar Singh (I. L. R., 7 All. 29), followed. Also per Brodhurst, J.: Ill. (g) of s. 325 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply merely to the case of persons who, in addition to the offence of rioting, have, with their own hands, committed the further offences of voluntarily causing grievous hurt and of assaulting a public servant when engaged in suppressing a riot; and the convictions referred to in the illustration relate especially to convictions obtained under the provisions of s. 149 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAM SARUP, I. L. R., 7 All. 757. [Petheram, C.J., and Straight, Brodhurst, and Tyrrell, JJ. May 12, 1885.]

FOUR persons were charged with being members of an unlawful assembly consisting of themselves and others, the common object of which assembly was resisting the execution of a legal process, namely, the arrest of a judgment-debtor by a Civil Court peon who went with a warrant for his arrest accompanied by other persons, A and B, for the purpose of identifying him, and with using force or violence in prosecution of the common object, such force or violence consisting of an assault on the Civil Court peon and another by means of a dangerous weapon on A. The Deputy Magistrate convicted all the accused of offences under ss. 147 and 353 of the Penal Code, and sentenced them to six months' rigorous imprisonment under the former section, and two months' rigorous imprisonment under the latter. He further convicted one of the accused of an offence under s. 324 in respect of the assault on A, and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment in respect of that offence, and directed that the sentences were to take effect one on the expiry of the other. Held that the offence of rioting was completed by the assault on A, and that the assault on the peon was a further offence under the first sub-section of s. 235 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held further that, even if A had not been assaulted, the conviction and sentences passed for rioting and the assault on the peon were legal, inasmuch as the acts of the accused, taken separately, constituted offences under ss. 143 and 353 of the Penal Code, and, combined, an offence under s. 147; and under s. 235, sub-s. 3, of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the accused might be charged with, and tried at one trial for, the offence under s. 147, and those under ss. 143 and 353; and therefore also separately convicted and sentenced for each such offence, provided the punishment did not exceed the limit imposed by s. 71 of the Penal Code as amended by

s. 4 of Act VIII. of 1882, which limit had not been exceeded in the present case.—IN THE MATTER OF CHANDRA KANT BHUTTACHARJEE; CHANDRA KANT BHUTTACHARJEE v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 12 Cal. 495. [Mitter and Beverley, JJ. Dec. 11, 1885.]

S. 149 of the Penal Code creates no offence, but was intended to make it clear that an accused person whose case falls within its terms cannot put forward the defence, that he did not with his own hand commit the offence committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly, or such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. In prosecution of the common object of an unlawful assembly, M with his own hand caused grievous hurt. M and other members of the assembly, as to whom it did not appear whether or not any of them personally used force or violence, were convicted of rioting under s. 147, and grievous hurt under s. 325 of the Penal Code, and were each sentenced to separate terms of imprisonment for each offence. The highest aggregate punishment, which was M's, was six years' rigorous imprisonment, being one year for rioting, and five years for causing grievous hurt. Held that, assuming s. 71 of the Penal Code to be applicable, the sentences were not illegal, as the combined periods of imprisonment did not, in the case of any prisoner, exceed the maximum punishment of seven years' rigorous imprisonment which could have been awarded for the offence punishable under s. 325. Held also that the riot could not, in any of the cases, be considered a part of the offence under s. 325, that s. 71 did not apply, and that the sentences were legal. Queen-Empress v. Ram Partab (I. L. R. 6 All. 121) dissented from. Queen-Empress v Dungar Singh (I. L. R., 7 All. 29), Queen-Empress v. Ram Sarup (I. L. R., 7 All. 767), Queen v. Rubbeeoollah (7 W. A, WITH six others, commits the offences of rioting, grievous hurt, and assaulting a public servant endeavouring, in the discharge of his duty as such, to suppress the riot. A may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under ss. 147, 325, and 152 of the Indian Penal Code.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), s. 235, illus. (g).

A PARTY of persons, consisting of some five peadas and a number of coolies sufficient for the work to be done, went to a spot on a river flowing through the lands of M for the purpose of either repairing or erecting a bund across it to cause the water to flow down a channel on the lands of their master T. The river at the time was almost dry, and the party did not go armed ready to fight or use force, and they did not, during the subsequent occurrence, use force. Having arrived at the spot about 10 A.M., they proceeded to work at the bund until the afternoon. At about 4 P.M. a body of men, consisting of about 1,200 in all, many of them armed with lathis, and headed by the prisoners, who were servants of M, which had been seen collecting together during the day, proceeded to the spot, and about 25 or 30 of them attacked T's men, some five of whom were more or less severely wounded with the lathis. The occurrence resulted in the conviction of some of M's servants for rioting under s. 147 of the Penal Code. M's people wholly denied any right on the part of T to construct or repair the bund, and had previously denied the existence of such right, and refused permission to T to exercise it. It was contended that the assembly of M's people was not an "unlawful assembly," that the interference by T's people with the channel of the river justified them in coming to stop the work and the show and use of force in compelling them to do so. Held that the prisoners had been rightly convicted. Held, further, that as no right of private defence of property is conferred by the Penal Code, except as against the perpetrators of offences under the Penal Code, and that as, upon the facts of the case as found, no offence had been committed by T's people, their acts amounting merely to a civil trespass, and that, as there was no pressing or immediate necessity of a kind showing that there was not time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, no question as to the right of private defence arose in the case. It was further contended that M's people did not assemble to enforce a right, or supposed right, within the terms of s. 141 of the Penal Code, but to defend a right, and that such action did not make the assembly an unlawful one. Held that they were members of an assembly the common object of which was, by show of criminal force, and by criminal force if necessary, to enforce the right to keep the river channel clear by preventing the construction of the bund, and by demolishing it so far as it was constructed, and that the case came within s 141, para. 4. Queen v. Mitto Sing (3 W. R. Cr. 41), Shunkur Singh v. Burmah Mahto (23 W. R. Cr. 25), and Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lall (19 W. R. Cr. 66), referred to and commented on.—GANOURI LAL DAS v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 206. [Pigot and Macpherson, JJ. Jan. 14, 1889.]

SEPARATE sentences passed upon persons for the offences of rioting and grievous hurt are not legal, where it is found that such persons individually did not commit any act which amounted to voluntarily causing hurt, but were guilty of that offence under s. 149 of the Penal Code. Empress v. Ram Partab (I. L. R., 6 All. 121) approved. Loke Nath Sarkar v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 11 Cal. 349) overruled. — NILMONEY PODDAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 442. [Petheram, C.J., and Mitter, Prinsep, Wilson, and Tottenham, JJ. Mar. 21, 1889.]

WHERE several Hindus acting in concert forcibly removed an ox and two cows from the possession of a Mahomedan, not for the purpose of causing "wrongful gain" to themselves, or "wrongful loss" to the owner of the cattle, but for the purpose of preventing the killing of the cows, held that they could not properly be convicted of dacoity, but only of riot.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAGHUNATH RAI, I. L. R., 15 All. 22. [Tyrrell, J. Aug. 6, 1892.]

WHEN a party is in possession of land for four or five days, though it may be in wrongful possession, another party, although claiming to be the rightful owner, is not entitled to go in force to turn him out, much less is he entitled to take armed men with him for that purpose. In an affray specific evidence as to the acts of each fighter cannot be expected, but only general evidence as to the accused taking part in it, and persons who, as in this case, punted the boats on which the fight took place, and in whose interests the fight on the boats took place, were held to be just as blameworthy as the men who struck the blows.—MOHER SHEIKH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 21 Cal. 392. [Trevelyan and Rampini, JJ. Aug. 28, 1893.]

WHERE certain accused persons were convicted of rioting, and it appeared that the charge did not specify any common object, and that neither the judgment of the Original Court nor that of the Sessions Judge in appeal found what was the common object which made the assembly of which the prisoners were members an unlawful one, held that these defects did not vitiate the proceedings, there being ample evidence on the record to prove what the common object of the assembly was, and to justify the conviction for the offence of which the lower Courts had found the accused guilty. Held, further, that, in such a case, a rule to show cause why the conviction should not be quashed under the provisions of s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure ought not to be granted, unless, on the materials which are before the Court when the rule is granted, it would be prepared to make the rule absolute if no cause be shown against it.—BASIRADDI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 21 Cal. 827. [Petheram, C.J., and Rampini, J. June 1, 1894.]

BEFORE a conviction can properly be maintained for the offence of rioting, it is necessary that there should be a clear finding as to the common object of the unlawful assembly, and also that the common object so found should have been stated in the charge, in order that the accused person might have an opportunity of meeting it. Where a Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury referred to two possible common objects of an unlawful assembly, one of which only had been set out in the charge-sheet, held that, inasmuch as it was impossible to say which of the two common objects had been accepted by the jury, and it might well have been that they had accepted the one which had not been charged, and which consequently the accused had not an opportunity of meeting, the conviction must be set aside. If one member of an unlawful assembly is armed with a deadly weapon, the other members cannot on that account be charged under s. 148 of the Penal Code. It is only the actual person who can be charged under that section. —SABIR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 276. [Trevelyan and Banerjee, JJ. Sep. 19, 1894.]

A WARRANT was issued by a Magistrate for the arrest of one Dalip under s. 114 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The warrant was sent to a certain thana to be executed. It was there, after being copied into a book kept for that purpose at the thana, made over to a particular constable for execution. When the constable to whom the warrant had been made over had left the thana, it was discovered that Dalip was in a village other than that in which he had been supposed to be. Thereupon the officer temporarily in charge of the thana made a copy from the book at the thana, endorsed on the back the names of one Nazir Husain and some other constables, and, having signed the endorsement, sent Nazir Husain and the others out with this paper to arrest Dalip. Nazir Husain and his companions arrested Dalip; but as they were returning with him in custody, some of Dalip's friends, aided by Dalip himself, attacked them, rescued Dalip, and caused hurt to the police. Held that the police-officers concerned in arresting Dalip, under the circumstances above described were not acting in the lawful discharge of their duty within the meaning of s. 332 of the Penal Code, so as to render the accused liable to conviction under that section; but inasmuch as they were acting in good faith under the colour of their office, s. 99 of the Penal Code applied, and Dalip and his associates might be properly convicted under ss. 147 and 323 of the Code. The words "in the discharge of his duty as such public servant" in the earlier portion of s. 332 of the Penal Code mean in the discharge of a duty imposed by law on such public servant in the particular case, and do not cover an act done by him in good faith under colour of his office. The Queen v. Roxburgh (12 Cox Cr. Ca. 8) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DALIP, I. L. R., 18 All. 246. [Edge, C.J., and Burkitt, J. Feb. 18, 1896.]

IN a case where the accused were convicted by a Deputy Magistrate of the offence of rioting under s. 147, and theft under s 379 of the Penal Code, and sentenced to four months for the first and two months for the latter offence, but on appeal the District Magistrate, considering the case to be one of theft rather than rioting, abandoned the sentence under s. 147, but upheld the conviction under s. 379 of the Penal Code, and sentenced them to six months' rigorous imprisonment. Held that what the District Magistrate had in effect done was to enhance the sentence under s. 379 of the Penal Code, which he had no power to do under s. 423, cl. THE accused, receiving information that the complainant's party were about to take forcible possession of a plot of land which was found by the Court to be in the possession of the accused, collected a large number of men, some of whom were armed, and went through the village to the land in question. While they were engaged in ploughing, the complainant's party came up, some of them being armed, and interfered with the ploughing. THE commitment of a case under s. 147 of the Penal Code to the Court of Session by a Deputy Magistrate is not necessarily illegal. Although the case is shown to be triable only by a Magistrate under the second schedule of the Criminal Procedure Code, there is nothing in s. 254 of the Criminal Procedure Code which prevents a Magistrate committing a case under s. 147 of the Penal Code to the Court of Session, provided he finds that the accused has committed an offence, which in his opinion cannot be adequately punished by him. The instructions contained in Circular No. 9 of 6th September 1869 are to be read subject to the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KAYEMULLAH MANDAL, I. L. A FIRST-CLASS Magistrate took a case on his file, and commenced a regular enquiry therein under ss. 147 and 324 of the Penal Code: but, after hearing evidence, and being of opinion that only an offence under s. 323 of the Penal Code had been made out, he proceeded to deal with the case summarily. Held that, inasmuch as the evidence adduced was not sufficient to justify a committal, but clearly disclosed an offence over which he had summary jurisdiction, the Magistrate was right in acting as he did. Such a course is different to disregarding part of a charge for the purpose of dealing with a case summarily. THE accused were convicted by a Magistrate of theft of mangoes and also of rioting, the common object of the unlawful assembly being the forcibly taking away of mangoes belonging to the complainant. On appeal the Sessions Judge not only found that the common object was not the taking of the mangoes, but that the dispute between the parties was as to certain land. He, however, dismissed the appeal, and confirmed the conviction. Held that, as the accused were convicted on a different finding of fact from that to which they were called upon to plead and to defend themselves at the trial, they were entitled to an acquittal.—RAHIMUDDI v. ASGAR ALI, I. N, S, AND G were appointed special constables under s. 17 of the Police Act. A Police Inspector accompanied by some police went to their village and informed them that they had been so appointed, and requested them to accompany him to the police-station of B, which they declined to do. The Inspector then had N arrested, whereupon N shook himself free, and N, S, and G with other persons, who had assembled, abused and threatened the police, and compelled them to withdraw from the village. N, S, and G were convicted under s. 19 of the Police Act, and they were also convicted with other persons under s. 353 read with s. 149 of the Penal Code. Held that the refusal of N, S, and G to accompany the Inspector constituted no offence under s. 19 of the Police Act, as the order was intended not for any purpose of the police duty, but simply that they might obtain the authority of their appointment and the necessary arms. Held, further, that the refusal of N to accompany the Inspector was not an offence, for which N could be arrested, and as the police when obstructed were not acting in lawful discharge of their duty, none of the persons concerned could be convicted of an offence under s 353 of the Penal Code, but they were guilty of rioting under s. 147 of that Code.—RAMAN SINGH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. HELD (Ainslie, J., dissenting) that s. 149 of the Penal Code is not intended to subject a member of an unlawful assembly to punishment for every offence which is committed by one of its members during the time they are engaged in the prosecution of the common object. In order to bring a case within s. 149, the act must be done with a view to accomplish the common object of the unlawful assembly, or it must be proved that the offence, though committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly, is one which the accused knew would be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. Per Jackson, J.—Any offence done by a member of an unlawful assembly, in prosecution of the particular one or more of the five objects mentioned in s. 141, which is or are brought home to the unlawful assembly to which a prisoner belongs, is an offence within the meaning of the first part of s. 149. Where a certain number of persons, members of an unlawful assembly (party A), attacked another party (B), who were in occupation of land, with the view to drive them off the land by force, and one of the members in party A fired a gun at and killed one of the persons in party B, in consequence of a sudden and unexpected resistance which was offered by party B, it was held (Ainslie, J., dissenting), on a consideration of the evidence, that the persons composing party A, other than the person who fired the gun, could not be convicted of murder under s. 149, Penal Code. The conviction was altered under the circumstances to one of rioting, armed with a deadly weapon, under s. 148 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. SABID ALI, 20 W. R. 5; 11 B. L. R. 347. [Couch, C.J., and Jackson, Phear, Ainslie, and Pontifex, JJ. April 21, 1873.]

NO Magistrate is entitled to split up an offence into its component parts for the purpose of giving himself summary jurisdiction. If a charge of an offence not triable summarily is laid and sworn to, the Magistrate must proceed with the case accordingly, unless he is at the outset in a position to show from the deposition of the complainant that the circumstances of aggravation are really mere exaggeration, and not to be believed. Therefore, a Magistrate, when he has before him a person charged with having been armed with a deadly weapon while a member of an unlawful assembly, is not at liberty to disregard that part of the charge which charges the prisoner with having been armed with a deadly weapon, and so to give himself jurisdiction to try the case summarily, and then, by inflicting a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding three months, to deprive the prisoner of his right of appeal.—EMPRESS v. GOLAM MAHOMED; EMPRESS v. ABDOOL KAREEM, I. L. R., 4 Cal. 18; 3 C. L. R. 81. [White and Prinsep, JJ. July 19, 1878.]

WHERE death results in a fight between two bodies of men deliberately fighting together, a greater proportion of the men composing both sides being armed with deadly weapons, and it being further apparent from the evidence that the man slain was an adult, and that no unfair advantage was taken by the one side or the other during the fight, the offence committed is culpable homicide, but does not amount to murder.—SHAMSHERE KHAN v. EMPRESS, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 154; 7 C. L. R. 158. [White and Field, JJ. July 31, 1880.]

A DISTURBANCE having been created with reference to the possession of certain chur land, the Sessions Judge, on appeal, found that certain persons had unlawfully trespassed thereupon, and that the accused had been justified in resisting the trespassers by force. Inasmuch, however, as he considered the accused had exceeded their right of private defence of their property, he convicted them of rioting under s. 148 of the Penal Code. Held that, on the findings of the Judge, the conviction could not be supported, inasmuch as, on such findings, the persons convicted were not members of an unlawful assembly.—IN THE MATTER OF KALEE MUNDLE, 10 C. L. R. 278. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Feb. 21, 1882.]

THE offences of rioting armed with a deadly weapon and voluntarily causing hurt with a dangerous weapon to two persons are distinct offences, and a person charged with such offences can be convicted and sentenced in respect of the rioting and of the hurt caused to each of the persons injured. A and B were charged with rioting armed with deadly weapons under s. 148 of the Penal Code; and they were also charged under s. 324, coupled with s. 149, with causing hurt by a dangerous weapon to X; and B was further charged under s. 324 with causing a like hurt to Y. A being also charged under s. 324, coupled with s. 149, in respect of the hurt caused by B to Y. A and B were convicted on all charges, and separate sentences, to take effect in succession, were awarded in respect of each offence charged. The offences under s. 324 were committed during the riot. Held that the several acts with regard to which the prisoners were charged did not fall within the provisons of s. 71 of the Penal Code, inasmuch as it was not found that the causing of the hurt was the force or violence which alone constituted the rioting, and that consequently, under s. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the several sentences passed were strictly legal.—LOKE NATH SARKAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 11 Cal. 349. [Tottenham and Ghose, JJ. Mar. 6, 1885.]

SEPARATE sentences passed upon persons for the offences of rioting and grievous hurt are not legal where it is found that such persons individually did not commit any act which amounted to voluntarily causing hurt, but were guilty of that offence under s. 149 of the Penal Code. Empress v. Ram Partab (I. L. R., 6 All. 121) approved: Loke Nath Sarkar v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 11 Cal. 349) overruled. — NILMONEY PODDAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 442. [Petheram, C.J., and Mitter, Prinsep, Wilson, and Tottenham, JJ. Mar. 21, 1889.]

EIGHT persons, who were charged with a number of others, were tried on various charges consisting of rioting armed with deadly weapons (s. 148, Penal Code), assaulting or obstructing a public servant when suppressing a riot (s. 152), and voluntarily causing hurt and grievous hurt to deter a public servant from his duty (ss. 332 and 333). The common object set out in the charge was "to resist the execution of a decree obtained by Suresh Chunder Deb against Shaik Ali Yar in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge of Alipore, dated 30th April 1891, and also by means of criminal force, or show of criminal force, to overawe the members of the police-force in the execution of their lawful powers as police-officers," and it was held that resistance to the police was one of the component parts of the offence of rioting charged. At the trial in the Court of Session all eight accused were convicted of the offence charged under s. 148, and each was sentenced to the maximum punishment allowed under that section, viz., three years' rigorous imprisonment. Seven out of the eight were convicted of offences under s. 152, and sentenced each to an additional term of two years' rigorous imprisonment for those offences. Two out of the seven accused were further convicted of offences under s. 332 of the Penal Code, the hurt therein charged being caused to police-officers engaged in suppressing the riot, and each sentenced to a further additional term of two years' rigorous imprisonment for that offence. The eighth accused, who was not convicted of an offence under s. 152, was convicted of an offence under s. 333, the grievous hurt being similarly caused to a police-officer, and for that offence was sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment in addition to the sentence of three years passed on him under s. 148. It was contended on appeal —(1) that the sentences passed under s. 152 in addition to those under s. 148 were illegal; (2) that separate sentences under s. 152 and ss. 332 and 333 were illegal; (3) that the cumulative sentences under s. 148 and ss. 332 and 333 were illegal, in so far as they exceeded the maximum sentence provided for either of the offences. Held, as regards (1), that as resistance to the police was one of the component parts of the offence of rioting, of which the accused were convicted and sentenced to the maximum punishment provided by s. 148, and having regard to the provisions of s. 71, the additional sentences under s. 152 were illegal. Held, further, that s. 152 contemplates an assault or obstruction to some particular public servant, and that as the charge against the accused as framed was merely to the effect that they assaulted and obstructed members of the police-force in the discharge of their duties, &c., the conviction under that section could not be upheld. Held, as regards (2), that separate sentences under s. 152 and ss. 332 and 333 were illegal, as the hurt inflicted on the police-officers was the violence used towards them which constituted the essence of the offence under s. 152. Held, as regards (3), that the separate sentences passed under s. 148 and ss.

332 and 333 were not illegal, there being nothing in s. 71 of the Penal Code which limits the amount of punishment that may be imposed for these offences.—FERASAT v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 19 Cal. 105. [Beverley and Ameer Ali, JJ. Nov. 9, 1891.]

THE question whether or not a lathi is a "deadly weapon" within the meaning of s. 148 of the Penal Code is a question of fact to be determined on the special circumstances of each case as it arises.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NATHU, I. L. R., 15 All. 19. [Edge, C.J., and Tyrrell, J. July 27, 1892.]

AN abetment in British India by a British subject of an offence committed in foreign territory is not an offence punishable under the Penal Code, and cannot, therefore, be tried by a Court in British India. Regina v. Elmstone (7 Bom. H. C. Rep. 89 Cr. Ca.) and Empress v. Moorga Chetty (I. L. R., 5 Mad. 338) followed. The accused, a Native Indian subject of Her Majesty, was committed to the Court of Session for abetting the commission of murder or of rioting under ss. 302 and 147 of the Penal Code. The alleged abetment consisted of words spoken in British territory by the accused, inciting certain Portuguese subjects to kill one Bhana if he attempted to remove the produce of certain lands situate in the Portuguese territory of Daman. A disturbance afterwards occurred at Daman in connection with this matter, in which one man was killed, and another wounded. Thereupon the Governor-General of Portuguese India moved the Government of Bombay to bring the accused to justice as the instigator of the murder. The Government of Bombay, being of opinion that s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was applicable to the case, passed a Resolution in the Political Department, directing the District Magistrate to take the necessary action in the matter. The District Magistrate thereupon committed the accused to the Court of Session on a charge of abetment of murder or of rioting. Held quashing the commitment, that the alleged abetment was not an offence punishable under the Penal Code, and that, therefore, the Sessions Court had no jurisdiction to try the accused. Held, also, that s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had no application to the present case, the alleged offence of abetment not having been committed outside British India.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GANPATRAO RAMCHANDRA, I. L. R., 19 Bom. 105. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. March 8, 1894.]

AN accused in a trial by jury is entitled to the verdict of the jury on questions of fact, and where a verdict is vitiated owing to misdirection by the Judge, the Appeal Court has no option but to set aside the verdict, and direct a re-trial. Were the appeal Court to go into the facts in such a case, it would be substituting the decision of the Judges of that Court for the verdict of the jury, who have the opportunity of seeing the demeanour of the witnesses and weighing the evidence with the assistance which this affords, whereas the Judges of the Appeal Court can only arrive at a decision on the perusal of the evidence. Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales, L. R. (1894) A. C. 57, referred to. S. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not warrant an Appeal Court, in a case where there has been misdirection in a charge to a jury, going into the evidence with a view to decide whether there is sufficient evidence to justify a conviction. Under s. 418 an appeal in a case tried by a jury lies on matters of law only, and the Appeal Court has no power to try the accused on matters of fact. The word "erroneous" in cl. (d) of s. 423 must not be read as "wrong on the facts," but must be read in connection with the words that follow as meaning that the verdict has been vitiated and rendered bad or defective by reason of a misdirection or a misunderstanding of the law. Fourteen accused were charged with rioting armed with deadly weapons, and with murder and causing grievous hurt during such riot. The common object alleged by the prosecution was to compel the payment of certain money by one of the persons of the opposite party. Some of the accused who admitted their presence at the scene of the occurrence stated that they had been attacked on account of an allegation being made that one of the opposite party had enticed away another's wife, and that they had merely acted in self-defence. The case was tried before a jury, and on the close of the case for the prosecution the Sessions Judge, considering that possibly the common object alleged by the prosecution might be considered not to have been proved, amended the charge, and added an alternative common object to it, viz., that the object of the assembly was to punish one of the opposite party for enticing away another's wife. There was no evidence on the record to prove the alternative common object, it being based solely on a portion of the statements of some of the accused; and the Sessions Judge put it to the jury that it was an inference that could possibly be drawn from the evidence, but it was for them to draw that inference or not. The jury convicted all the accused without specifying which common object they relied on, and were not asked, under s. 303 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, any questions for the purpose of ascertaining what their verdict was based on. Held that the Judge had misdirected the jury, and that the verdict of the jury leaving it uncertain what was the common object which actuated the accused, it

ment for every offence which is committed by one of its members during the time they are engaged in the prosecution of the common object. In order to bring a case within s. 149, the act must be done with a view to accomplish the common object of the unlawful assembly, or it must be proved that the offence, though committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly is one which the accused knew would be likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object. Per Jackson, J.—Any offence done by a member of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the particular one or more of the five objects mentioned in s. 141, which is or are brought home to the unlawful assembly to which a prisoner belongs, is an offence within the meaning of the first part of s. 149. Where a certain number of persons, members of an unlawful assembly (party A), attacked another party (B), who were in occupation of land, with the view to drive them off the land by force, and one of the members in party A fired a gun at, and killed, one of the persons in party B, in consequence of a sudden and unexpected resistance which was offered by party B, it was held (Ainslie, J., dissenting), on a consideration of the evidence, that the persons composing party A other than the person who fired the gun could not be convicted of murder under s. 149, Penal Code. The conviction was altered under the circumstances to one of rioting armed with a deadly weapon under s. 148 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. SABID ALI, 20 W. R. 5; 11 B. L. R. 347. [Couch, C.J., and Jackson, Phear, Ainslie, and Pontifex, JJ. April 21, 1873.]

IT is necessary, before persons can be convicted of rioting, &c., under s. 147 or s. 149, Penal Code, to ascertain clearly that they have taken such a share in the transaction as will bring them within the criminal charge; and it must appear on the evidence that they had a common object, which common object they were going to carry out by unlawful means.—QUEEN v. GHOLAM MAHOMED, 22 W. WHERE, after the object of an unlawful assembly had been accomplished, and the opposite party driven away, one of the members entered into an altercation with another, and wounded him with a fish-spear, it was held that the act was not one done with a view to accomplish the common object of the assembly, or one which the rest knew would be likely to be committed in the prosecution of that object.—IN THE MATTER OF BINOD, 24 W. WHERE a prisoner is constructively guilty of murder under s. 34 of the Penal Code, it is doubtful if he can be said to have committed the offence of murder within the meaning of s. 149, so as to make other prisoners, by a double construction, guilty of murder.—In re JHURBOO MAHTON, I. A MEMBER of an unlawful assembly, some members of which have caused grievous hurt, cannot lawfully be punished for the offence of rioting as well as for the offence of causing grievous hurt.—EMPRESS v. RAM PARTAB, I. L. R., 6 All. 121. [Straight, J. Dec. 5, 1883.]

THE offences of rioting armed with a deadly weapon and voluntarily causing hurt with a dangerous weapon to two persons are distinct offences, and a person charged with such offences can be convicted and sentenced in respect of the rioting and of the hurt caused to each of the persons injured. A and B were charged with rioting armed with deadly weapons under s. 148 of the Penal Code; and they were also charged under s. 324, coupled with s. 149, with causing hurt by dangerous weapons to X; and B was further charged under s. 324 with causing a like hurt to Y, A being also charged under s. 324, coupled with s. 149, in respect of the hurt caused by B to Y. A and B were convicted on all charges, and separate sentences, to take effect in succession, were awarded in respect of each offence charged. The offences under s. 324 were committed during the riot. Held that the several acts with regard to which the prisoners were charged did not fall within the provisions of s. 71 of the Penal Code, inasmuch as it was not found that the causing of the hurt was the force or violence which alone constituted the rioting, and that consequently, under s. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the several sentences passed were strictly legal.—LOKE NATH SARKAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 11 Cal. 349. [Tottenham and Ghose, JJ. March 6, 1885.]

S. 149 of the Penal Code creates no offence, but was intended to make it clear that an accused person whose case falls within its terms cannot put forward the defence that he did not, with his own hand, commit the offence committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly, or such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. In prosecution of the common object of an unlawful assembly, M, with his own hand, caused grievous hurt. M and other members of the assembly, as to whom it did not appear whether or not any of them personally used force or violence, were convicted of rioting under s. 147, and grievous hurt under s. 325 of the Penal Code, and were each sentenced to separate terms of imprisonment for each offence. The highest aggregate punishment, which was M's, was six years' rigorous imprisonment being one year for rioting, and five years for causing grievous hurt. Held that, assuming s. 71 of the Penal Code to be applicable, the sentences were not illegal, as the combined periods of imprisonment did not, in the case of any prisoner, exceed the maximum punishment of seven years' rigorous imprisonment which could have been awarded for the offence punishable under s. 325. Held, also, that the riot could not in any of the cases be considered a part of the offence under s. 325, that s. 71 did not apply, and that the sentences were legal. Queen-Empress v. Ram Partab (I. L. R., 6 All. 121) dissented from. Queen-Empress v Dungar Singh (I. L. R., 7 All. 29), Queen-Empress v. Ram Sarup (I. L. R., 7 All. 757), Queen v. Rubbeeoollah (7 W. R. 13), Loke Nath Sarkar v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 11 Cal 349), Queen-Empress v. Pershad (I. L. R., 7 All. 414), Chandra Kant Bhuttacharjee v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 12 Cal. 498), and Reg. v. Tukaya bin Tamana (I. L. R., 1 Bom. 214), referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BISHESHAR, I. L. R., 9 All. 645. [Edge, C.J., and Brodhurst, J. May 16, 1887.]

THE meaning of s. 149 is clearly explained by Alison in the following remarks: "It is no less worthy of notice that this holds only with such outrages as are the natural result of the common enterprise, and which all who engaged in it must have made up their minds to be indifferent to when they once concurred in its adoption. It will not hold, therefore, with separate and independent acts of violence as are not so much the object or natural and usual consequence of the undertaking as the result of an accidental and casual ebullition of wickedness on the part of some of the actors, which went much beyond the common purpose of the assembly. Thus, if a mob repair to a warehouse of grain with the intent to compel the dealer to sell at their own price, certainly all the measures calculated to constrain or intimidate his will are chargeable on all those present, as throwing stones, breaking open his doors, threatening or maltreating his own or his servant's person, or the like; but if, taking advantage of the opportunity thus afforded, some individuals break into the building and commit theft, or set it on fire, or murder the inmates, those ulterior and undesigned acts of violence can be stated only against the actual perpetrators."—Principles of the Law of Scotland, p. 524.

THE accused were charged before a Magistrate of the second class with causing grievous hurt, as members of an unlawful assembly, under ss. 149 and 325 of the Penal Code. The evidence showed that one of the accused had used an axe in causing the hurt. The Magistrate apparently ignored this fact, and he convicted the accused under s. 325 of the Code. The accused appealed. The District Magistrate who heard one appeal, and the First-class Magistrate who heard the rest of the appeals, were both of opinion that the offence committed by the accused was one of causing grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon within the meaning of s. 326 of the Penal Code, and as such beyond the jurisdiction of the Second-class Magistrate. But they did not think it proper, under the circumstances of the case, to quash the convictions. The Sessions Judge, on examining the record of the case, was of opinion that as the offence committed by the accused was not cognizable by the trying Magistrate, his proceedings were void ab initio under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He, therefore, referred the case to the High Court, and recommended that the convictions under s. 325 should be set aside. Held that the proceedings before the Second-class Magistrate were not void ab initio, as he had jurisdiction to try the accused for offences punishable under ss. 149 and 325 of the Penal Code with which they were originally charged. Held, also, that though it was the duty of the trying Magistrate, when the evidence disclosed a circumstance of aggravation, such as the use of a dangerous weapon which made the offence cognizable by a higher Court, to adopt the proper procedure to send the case to the higher Court, still it was not necessary to quash the proceedings, as the accused were not in any way prejudiced, and the sentences were not inadequate.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GUNDYA, I. L. R., 13 Bom. 502. [Jardine and Candy, JJ. Jan. 28, 1889.]

IN a case in which it was found that all the accused were guilty of rioting armed with deadly weapons, that the fight was premeditated and pre-arranged, a regular pitched battle or trial of strength between the two parties concerned in the riot, and that one of the accused, in the course of the riot and in prosecution of the common object of the assembly, killed, or attempted to kill, a man under such circumstances that his act amounted to an attempt to murder, the question arose whether that act could be said to bear a less grave character by reason of excep. 5 to s. 300 of the Penal Code. Per Curiam.—Held that, upon such finding, the case did not fall within the exception. Per Pigot, J. (Petheram, C.J., and Macpherson, J., concurring.)—The 5th exception to s. 300 should receive a strict and not a liberal construction; and in applying the exception, it should be considered with reference to the act consented to or authorized, and next with reference to the person or persons authorized, and as to each of those some degree of particularity at least should appear upon the facts proved before the exception can be said to apply. Shamshere Khan v. Empress (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 154) and Queen v. Kukier Mather (unreported) dissented from, so far as they decide that from such a finding as the above consent to take the risk of death is inferred. Per O'Kinealy, J.—Before excep. 5 can be applied, it must be found that the person killed with a full knowledge of the facts, determined to suffer death, or take the risk of death; and that this determination continued up to, and existed at, the moment of his death. Queen v. Kukier Mather (unreported) observed on. Per Ghose, J.—No general rule of law can be laid down in determining in cases of this description whether the person killed or wounded suffered death, or took the risk of death, with his own consent, it being a question of fact, and not of law, to be decided upon the circumstances of each case as it arises. Shamshere Khan v. Empress (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 154) and Queen v. Kukier Mather (unreported) observed on, and the propositions of law laid down therein concurred with.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NAYAMUDDIN, I. L. R., 18 Cal. 484. [Petheram, C.J., and Pigot, O'Kinealy, Macpherson, and Ghose, JJ. May 19, 1891.]

WHEN a prisoner is convicted of rioting and of hurt, and the conviction for hurt depends upon the application of s. 149 of the Penal Code, it is illegal to pass two sentences, one for riot, and one for hurt. But in such a case the two sentences would be legal, provided the total punishment does not exceed the maximum which the Court might pass for any one of the offences. When, however, the accused is guilty of rioting, and is also found to have himself caused the hurt, he may be punished both for rioting and for hurt. In such a case the total punishment can legally exceed the maximum which the Court might pass for any one of the offences. Queen-Empress v. Ram Sarup (I. L. R., 7 All. 757) approved.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BANA PUNJA, I. L. R., 17 Bom. 260. [Sargent, C.J., Parsons, and Telang, JJ. Dec. 19, 1892.]

BEFORE a conviction can properly be maintained for the offence of rioting, it is necessary that there should be a clear finding as to the common object of the unlawful assembly, and also that the common object so found should have been stated in the charge in order that the accused person might have an opportunity of meeting it. Where a Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury referred to two possible common objects of an unlawful assembly, one of which only had been set out in the charge-sheet: Held that, inasmuch as it was impossible to say which of the two common objects had been accepted by the jury, and it might well have been that they had accepted the one which had not been charged, and which consequently the accused had not an opportunity of meeting, the conviction must be set aside. If one member of an unlawful assembly is armed with a deadly weapon, the other members cannot on that account be charged under s. 148 of the Penal Code. It is only the actual person who can be charged under that section.—SABIR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 276. [Trevelyan and Banerjee, JJ. Sep. 19, 1894.]

NEITHER of the cases of Queen v. Sabed Ali (11 B. L. R., F. B., 347; 20 W. R. Cr. 5) and Hari Singh v. The Empress (3 C. L. R. 49) lays down any hard-and-fast rule as to the circumstances under which one member of an unlawful assembly can be deemed guilty of an offence committed by another under the provisions of s. 149 of the Penal Code, and every case must be decided on its own merits. In dealing with such cases, while, on the one hand, it is necessary for the protection of the accused that he should not, merely by reason of his association with others as members of an unlawful assembly, be held criminally liable for offences committed by his associates, which he himself neither intended, nor knew to be likely to be committed. On the other hand, it is equally necessary for the protection of the peace that members of an unlawful assembly should not lightly be let off from suffering the penalties for offences for which, though committed by others, the law has made them punishable by reason of their association with the actual offender with one common object. Those two cases respectively emphasize the necessity of keeping these considerations in view. Members of an unlawful assembly may have a community of object only up to a certain point, beyond which they may differ in their objects, and the knowledge possessed by each member of what is likely to be committed in prosecution of their common object will vary, not only according to the information at his command, but also according to the extent to which he shares the community of object, and as a consequence of this the effect of s. 149 may be different on different members of the same unlawful assembly.—JAHIRUDDIN v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 306. [Beverley and Banerjee, JJ. Dec. 21, 1894.]

The accused, receiving information that the complainant's party were about to take forcible possession of a plot of land which was found by the Court to be in the possession of the accused, collected a large number of men, some of whom were armed, and went through the village to the land in question. While they were engaged in ploughing, the complainant's party came up, some of them being armed, and interfered with the ploughing. A fight ensued, in the course of which one of the complainant's party was grievously wounded, and subsequently died, and two of the accused's party were hurt. Held that if the accused were rightfully in possession of the land, and found it necessary to protect themselves from aggression on the part of another body of men, they were justified in taking such precautions as they thought were required, and using such force or violence as was necessary to prevent the aggression. Held also that under such circumstances they could not rightly be held to be members of an unlawful assembly. Queen-Empress v. Narsang Pathakbai (I. L. R., 14 Bom 441), Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lall (19 W. R. Cr. 66), and Shunkur Singh v. Burmah Mahto (23 W. R. Cr. 25) followed. Ganouri Lal Dass v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 16 Cal. 206) distinguished.—PACHKAURI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 24 Cal. 686. [Ghose and Gordon, JJ. Mar. 16, 1897.]

N, S, AND G were appointed special constables under s 17 of the Police Act. A Police Inspector accompanied by some police went to their village and informed them that they had been so appointed, and requested them to accompany him to the police station of B, which they declined to do. The Inspector then had N arrested, whereupon N shook himself free, and N, S, and G with other persons, who had assembled, abused and threatened the police, and compelled them to withdraw from the village. N, S, and G were convicted under s. 19 of the Police Act, and they were also convicted with other persons under s. 353 read with s. 149 of the Penal Code. Held that the refusal of N, S, and G to accompany the Inspector constituted no offence under s. 19 of the Police Act, as the order was intended not for any purpose of the police duty but simply that they might obtain the authority of their appointment and the necessary arms. Held, further, that the refusal of N to accompany the Inspector was not an offence, for which N could be arrested, and as the police when obstructed were not acting in lawful discharge of their duty, none of the persons concerned could be convicted of an offence under s. 353 of the Penal Code, but they were guilty of rioting under s. 147 of that Code.—RAMAN SINGH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 28 Cal. 411. Prinsep and Handley, JJ. July 6, 1900.

Assaulting or obstructing public servant when suppressing riot, &c.

152. Whoever assaults or threatens to assault, or obstructs or attempts to obstruct, any public servant in the discharge of his duty as such public servant in endeavouring to disperse an unlawful assembly, or to suppress a riot or affray, or uses, or threatens or attempts to use, criminal force to such public servant, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

A, WITH SIX others, commits the offences of rioting, grievous hurt, and assaulting a public servant endeavouring, in the discharge of his duty as such, to suppress the riot. A may be separately charged with and convicted of, offences under ss. 147, 325, and 152 of the Indian Penal Code.—CRIM. PRO. CODE (Act V. of 1898), s. 235, illus. (g).

ILLUS. (g) of s. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply merely to the case of persons who, in addition to the offence of rioting, have, with their own hands, committed the further offences of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, and of assaulting a public servant when engaged in suppressing a riot; and the convictions referred to in the illustration relate specially to convictions obtained under the provisions of s. 149 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAM SARUP, I. L. R., 7 All. 757. Petheram, C. J., and Straight, Brodhurst, and Tyrrell, JJ. May 12, 1885.

EIGHT persons, who were charged with a number of others, were tried on various charges, consisting of rioting armed with deadly weapons (s. 148, Penal Code), assaulting or obstructing a public servant when suppressing a riot (s. 152), and voluntarily causing hurt and grievous hurt to deter a public servant from his duty (ss. 332 and 333). The common object set out in the charge was "to resist the execution of a decree obtained by Suresh Chunder Deb against Shaik Ali Yar in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge of Alipore, dated 30th April 1891, and also by means of criminal force, or show of criminal force, to overawe the members of the police-force in the execution of their lawful powers as police-officers;" and it was held that resistance to the police was one of the component parts of the offence of rioting charged. At the trial in the Court of Session all eight accused were convicted of the offence charged under s. 148, and each was sentenced to the maximum punishment allowed under that section, viz., three years' rigorous imprisonment. Seven out of the eight were convicted of offences under s. 152, and sentenced each to an additional term of two years' rigorous imprisonment for those offences. Two out of the seven accused were further convicted of offences under s. 332 of the Penal Code, the hurt therein charged being caused to police-officers engaged in suppressing the riot, and each sentenced to a further additional term of two years' rigorous imprisonment for that offence. The eighth accused, who was not convicted of an offence under s. 152, was convicted of an offence under s. 333, the grievous hurt being similarly caused to a police-officer, and for that offence was sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment in addition to the sentence of three years passed on him under s. 148. It was contended on appeal—(1) that the sentences passed under s. 152 in addition to those under s. 148 were illegal; (2) that separate sentences under s. 152 and ss. 332 and 333 were illegal; (3) that the cumulative sentences under s. 148 and ss. 332 and 333 were illegal, in so far as they exceeded the maximum sentence provided for either of the offences. Held as regards (1), that, as resistance to the police was one of the component parts of the offence of rioting of which the accused were convicted and sentenced to the maximum punishment provided by s. 148, and having regard to the provisions of s. 71, the additional sentences under s. 152 were illegal. Held, further, that s. 152 contemplates an assault or obstruction to some particular public servant, and that, as the charge against the accused as framed was merely to the effect that they assaulted and obstructed members of the police-force in the discharge of their duties, &c., the conviction under that section could not be upheld. Held as regards (2), that separate sentences under s. 152 and ss. 332 and 333 were illegal, as the hurt inflicted on the police-officers was the violence used towards them which constituted the essence of the offence under s. 152. Held, as regards (3) that the separate sentences passed under s. 148 and ss. 332 and 333 were not illegal, there being nothing in s. 71 of the Penal Code which limits the amount of punishment that may be imposed for these offences.—FERASAT v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 19 Cal. 105. [Beverley and Ameer Ali, JJ. Nov. 9, 1891.]

153. Whoever malignantly or wantonly, by doing anything which is illegal, gives provocation to any person, intending or knowing it to be likely that such provocation will cause the offence of rioting to be committed, shall, if the offence of rioting be committed in consequence of such provocation, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both; and if the offence of rioting be not committed, with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

IN August 1893, a riot took place in Bombay between Hindus and Mussalmans. The excitement caused by the riot had not entirely subsided, when the accused composed and published a poem, giving an account of the outbreak, and incidentally extolling certain classes of the Hindu community, namely, the Ghatis and Kamatis for the brave resistance which they had offered to the Mahomedan rioters. The poem extolled the Ghatis and Kamatis, and then followed these lines:—

> May God give glory to you, confer joy on you night and day.
> Fight again for your country's good.
> Brave, brave are the Kamatis
> Why fear for dying, brother, why fear for dying?
> Sooner or later, but only once a man has to die.

The poem was written in Gujarati, a language not ordinarily spoken by the Ghatis and Kamatis, or even by the Mahomedans. It did not appear that any copies of the work were distributed among the people who had taken part in the riot. Nor did any fresh riot take place subsequently to the publication of the work. The accused were prosecuted and convicted under ss. 117 and 153 of the Penal Code, on the ground that the lines quoted above, especially the words "Fight again," were a direct instigation to the Ghatis and Kamatis to renew the disturbances. Held that the meaning of the passages complained of was to be gathered from the whole poem. The general spirit of the poem was clearly in favour of peace and reconciliation. It consisted from beginning to end of a lamentation over the riots, and the destruction and death they had caused, and of repeated counsel to peace and harmony between Hindus and Mahomedans. And there was nothing to indicate that the author's intention was to instigate the Hindus or provoke the Mahomedans to renew the disturbances. The words, "Fight again," were, no doubt, objectionable, but it would not be a proper construction of the words to allow them to override the whole context of the work. The composition could not be regarded as an "illegal act," and its publication was not "malignant" or "wanton" within the meaning of s. 153 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KAHANJI, I. L. R., 18 Bom. 758. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. Dec. 11, 1893.]

154. Whenever any unlawful assembly or riot takes place, the owner or occupier of the land upon which such unlawful assembly is held, or such riot is committed, and any person having or claiming an interest in such land, shall be punishable with fine not exceeding one thousand rupees;

Owner or occupier of land on which an unlawful assembly is held.

if he or his agent or manager, knowing that such offence is being or has been committed, or having reason to believe it is likely to be committed, do not give the earliest notice thereof in his or their power to the principal officer at the nearest police-station, and do not, in the case of his or their having reason to believe that it was about to be committed, use all lawful means in his or their power to prevent it, and, in the event of its taking place, do not use all lawful means in his or their power to disperse or suppress the riot or unlawful assembly.

THE owner or occupier of land on which an unlawful assembly is held cannot be convicted under s. 154 of the Penal Code, unless there is a finding that the riot was premeditated.—QUEEN v. SURROOP CHUNDER PAUL, 12 W. R. 75. [Norman and Kemp, JJ. Dec. 10, 1869.]

THE following procedure should be observed in the case of a charge under s. 154 against the owner of land on which an unlawful assembly is held: The charge ought to be a clear and distinct charge of the offence specified in s. 154. After such charge, the prisoner should be called on to plead, and if his plea is 'not guilty,' then legal evidence for the prosecution should be gone into. The records of another case, would not, of themselves, be legal evidence itself for the conviction. This separate evidence in support of the charge under s. 154 being given, and a primâ-facie case being made out for the prosecution, the prisoner must then be allowed opportunity to rebut that evidence, after which judgment should be passed.—IN THE MATTER OF C. G. D. BETTS AND MAHOMED ISMAIL CHOWDHRY, 15 W. R. 6; 6 B. L. R. Ap. 83. [Bayley and Mitter, JJ. Jan. 21, 1871.]

IT is not necessary, in order to render the owner of land on which a riot takes place criminally liable, that he should be aware of the likelihood of such an occurrence. That his karinda should have taken an active part in the riot is sufficient to warrant the conviction of the owner under s. 154 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PAYAG SINGH, I. L. R., 12 All. 550. [Edge, C.J., and Brodhurst, J. June 20, 1890.]

THE accused was the sole proprietor of village A. A serious riot involving loss of life took place at village A, and the accused's naib instead of doing anything to prevent or suppress the riot accompanied the rioters and stood close by, while the riot was going on, after which he absconded. The accused who had no knowledge that a riot was likely to be committed was convicted under s. 154 of the Penal Code and fined. Held (Rampini and Pratt, JJ.), a landlord is liable under s. 154 of the Penal Code for the acts of the commission as well as omission not only of himself, but of his agent or manager. Knowledge on the part of the owner or occupier of the land, of the acts or intention of the agent is not an essential element of an offence, under s. 154 of the Penal Code, and he may be convicted under that section, though he may be in entire ignorance of the acts of his agent or manager. Rampini, J.—There seems no ground for holding that s. 154 is intended in order to punish the landlord, where his agent has not rendered himself liable to the criminal law, and when the agent has done so, then his liability is at an end On the contrary the provisions of the section impose on non-resident landholders and their agents, the duty of maintaining the public peace and preventing unlawful assembly and riots on their estates and render the former for any dereliction in the discharge of this duty. Queen-Empress v. Payag Singh (I. L. R., 12 All. 550) followed. The Queen v. Surroop Chunder Paul (12 W. R. 75), Torakant Das v Empress (4 C. W. N. 691), Queen-Empress v. Hurnath Roy (3 W. R. 54), In the Matter of Radha Nath Chowdhry (7 C. L. R. 289), referred to. Ameer Ali, J.—Owners of property are made responsible by law for the negligence of their agents or managers, but not for their criminal acts. A charge of neglect assumes that the agent is not directly concerned in the commission of the offence. If he is so concerned it ceases to be neglect, it is a crime. It would be straining the law to make the absent owner, who has himself no knowledge of the occurrence, liable for not giving information of a riot that has taken place, if his agent takes part in it, and, as a rioter actually taking part in it, does not, as a matter of course give notice of it.—KAZI ZEAMUDDIN AHMED v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 28 Cal. 504. [Ameer Ali, Rampini, and Pratt, JJ. May 18 and June 19, 1901.]

155. Whenever a riot is committed for the benefit or on behalf of any person who is the owner or occupier of any land respecting which such riot takes place, or who claims any interest in such land, or in the subject of any dispute which gave rise to the riot, or who has accepted or derived any benefit therefrom, Liability of person for whose benefit a riot is committed.

A ZEMINDAR ought not to be made liable under s. 155, Penal Code, for a sudden and unpremeditated riot which there was no reason to infer he could have anticipated, or thought likely to happen.—QUEEN v. HURNATH ROY, 3 W. R. 54. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. July 25, 1865.]

THE mere fact that a person is the owner or occupier of land, in respect of which, or upon which, a riot takes place, is not sufficient to raise a presumption against him. It must be positively proved that he or his agent or manager knew or had reason to believe that the riot would be committed, and, having that knowledge or belief, did not use all lawful means in his power to prevent, disperse, or suppress it.—QUEEN v. SURROOP CHUNDER PAUL, 12 W. R. 75. [Norman and Kemp, JJ. Dec. 10, 1869.]

TO constitute an offence under s. 157 of the Penal Code, it must be proved that the accused has hired, or engaged, or employed other persons for the purpose of an unlawful assembly; and it is not sufficient to show that some of the accused's servants have been taken from a district where men have a well-known character as lathials, and had been in his service some time before the riot was perpetrated. A non-resident partner or sharer who has taken no active part in the management of the estate cannot, like a resident sharer, be convicted under ss. 154 and 155 of the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF RADHANATH CHOWDHRY, 7 C. IN order to convict the manager of an indigo-factory under s. 156 of the Penal Code, it must be shown by legal evidence (1) that a riot was committed; (2) that the riot, if committed, was committed for the benefit of the accused; and (3) that the accused had reason to believe that a riot was likely to be committed.—BRAE v. Harbouring persons hired for an unlawful assembly.

To constitute an offence under s. 157 of the Penal Code, it must be proved that the accused has hired, or engaged, or employed other persons for the purpose of an unlawful assembly, and it is not sufficient to show that some of the accused's servants have been taken from a district where men have a well-known character as lathials, and had been in his service some time before the riot was perpetrated. Punishment for committing affray.

IN an affray respecting land, one party were the aggressors, and the other side (had the affair not ended fatally) would have been in the legal exercise of the right of defence of property, and would have been entitled to the benefit of s. 104 of the Penal Code. Held, that one year's imprisonment was sufficient punishment for the latter.—QUEEN v. SHUNKER SINGH, 1 W. R. 34 [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 5, 1864.]

A SENTENCE of rigorous imprisonment passed in a case of affray with homicide under Reg. VI. of 1828 quashed as illegal, and altered to one of imprisonment with labour.—QUEEN v. KOMARUDDY BHOOYA, 1 W. R. 47. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 21, 1864.]

IN a trial arising out of an affray or faction-fight, the members of each faction should be tried separately. The statements of the members of each faction can then, if desired, be taken on solemn affirmation, and be made evidence against their opponents; but if they decline to give evidence on the ground of implicating themselves, they cannot be compelled to do so.—QUEEN v. MAHOMED HOSSEIN, 1 N.-W. P. 293. [Pearson and Turner, JJ. April 2, 1869.]

WHERE certain parties, in the course of a sudden quarrel, committed an affray, resulting in grievous hurt and consequent death, it was held that, as there was no unlawful assembly there could not be a conviction for rioting but for affray only. The question whether any of the prisoners were guilty of culpable homicide was not considered by the Court.—QUEEN v. PHOOLLEE MISSER, 12 W. R. 72. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. Nov. 30, 1869.]

PRISONERS were convicted of having committed an offence punishable under s. 160 of the Penal Code, and were sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25 each, or in default to be rigorously imprisoned for 30 days, the full term of imprisonment under the section. Held by a majority of the High Court (Kindersley, J., dissenting) that, having regard to the provisions of s. 309 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872), the sentence was legal.—REG. v. MUHAMMAD SAIB, I. L. R., 1 Mad. 277. [Innes, Offg. C.J., and Kindersley, Busteed, and Tarrant, JJ. Sep. 4, 1877.] But see the following ruling:—

S. 33 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, does not authorize a Magistrate to pass a sentence, in default of payment, in excess of the term prescribed by s. 65 of the Penal Code. Reg. v. Muhammad Saib (I. L. R., 1 Mad. 277) was overruled in 1881.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VENKATESAGADU, I. L. R., 10 Mad. 165. [Collins, C.J., and Kernan, Muttusami Ayyar, Brandt, and Parker JJ. Jan. 18, 1887.]

OF OFFENCES BY OR RELATING TO PUBLIC SERVANTS.

161. Whoever, being or expecting to be a public servant, accepts or obtains, or agrees to accept or attempts to obtain, from any person, for himself or for any other person, any gratification whatever, other than legal remuneration, as a motive or reward for doing, or forbearing to do, any official act, or for showing, or forbearing to show, in the exercise of his official functions, favour or disfavour to any person, or for rendering, or attempting to render, any service or disservice to any person, with the Legislative or Executive Government of India, or with the Government of any Presidency, or with any Lieutenant-Governor, or with any public servant, as such, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Public servant taking gratification other than legal remuneration in respect of an official act.

Ct. of Ses., Presy. Mag., or Mag. of 1st class. Uncog. Summons. Bailable. Not comp.

Explanations.—"Expecting to be a public servant."—If a person not expecting to be in office obtains a gratification by deceiving others into a belief that he is about to be in office, and that he will then serve them, he may be guilty of cheating, but he is not guilty of the offence defined in this section.

"Gratification."—The word "gratification" is not restricted to pecuniary gratifications, or to gratifications estimable in money.

"Legal remuneration."—The words "legal remuneration" are not restricted to remuneration which a public servant can lawfully demand, but include all remuneration which he is permitted by the Government† which he serves to accept.

* As to authority for institution of prosecutions against certain public servants, see the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), s. 197.

All actions and prosecutions against any person, which may be lawfully brought for anything done or intended to be done under the provisions of Act V. of 1861, or under the general police-powers thereby given, shall be commenced after notice in writing of such action and of the cause thereof being given to the defendant, or to the District Superintendent, or an Assistant District Superintendent of the District in which the act was committed, one month at least before the commencement of the action (Act V of 1861), s. 47.

† In the definition of "legal remuneration" the word "Government" includes—

(1) a Court of Wards for the purposes of s. 12 (2) of the Central Provinces Government Wards Act (XVII. of 1885):

(2) the Senate of the Allahabad University for the purposes of s. 18 (1) of the Allahabad University Act (XVIII. of 1887):

(3) any employer of a railway-servant as such for the purposes of s. 137 (1) of the Indian Railways Act (IX. of 1890).

"A motive or reward for doing."—A person who receives a gratification as a motive for doing what he does not intend to do, or as a reward for doing what he has not done, comes within these words.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, a munsif, obtains from Z, a banker, a situation in Z's bank for A's brother, as a reward to A for deciding a cause in favour of Z. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(b.) A, holding the office of Resident at the Court of a subsidiary Power, accepts a lakh of rupees from the Minister of that Power. It does not appear that A accepted this sum as a motive or reward for doing or forbearing to do any particular official act, or for rendering or attempting to render any particular service to that Power with the British Government. But it does appear that A accepted the sum as a motive or reward for generally showing favour in the exercise of his official functions to that Power. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(c.) A, a public servant, induces Z erroneously to believe that A's influence with the Government has obtained a title for Z, and thus induces Z to give A money as a reward for this service. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

THE Law Commissioners remark: "The punishment of fine will, we think, be found very efficacious in cases of this description, if the Judges exercise the power given them as they ought to do, and compel the delinquent to deliver up the whole of his ill-gotten gain."

A OFFERS a bribe to B, a public servant, as a reward for showing A some favour in the exercise of B's official functions. B accepts the bribe. A has abetted the offence defined in s. 161.—Penal Code, s. 109, illus. (a).

CHARGE.—That you, being a public servant in the Department, directly accepted from [state the name], for another party [state the name], a gratification, other than legal remuneration, as a motive for forbearing to do an official act, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 161 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session [or High Court].—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), sch. v., form xxviii (i.).

WHEN any Judge, or any public servant not removeable from his office without the sanction of the Government of India or the Local Government, is accused as such Judge or public servant of any offence, no Court shall take cognizance of such offence, except with the previous sanction of the Government having power to order his removal, or of some officer empowered in this behalf by such Government, or of some Court or other authority to which such Judge or public servant is subordinate, and whose power to give such sanction has not been limited by such Government. Such Government may determine the person by whom, and the manner in which, the prosecution of such Judge or public servant is to be conducted and may specify the Court before which the trial is to be held.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), s. 197.

IT is not generally known that, where a person gives a bribe to a public servant at the latter's request, the giver commits no offence. The authors of the Code make the following important remarks on the subject: "One important question still remains to be considered. We are of opinion that we have provided sufficient punishment for the public servant who receives a bribe. But it may be doubted whether we have provided sufficient punishment for the person who offers it. The person who, without any demand, express or implied, on the part of a public servant, volunteers an offer of a bribe, and induces that public servant to accept it, will be punishable under the general rule contained in cl. 88 as an instigator. But the person who complies with a demand, however signified, on the part of a public servant, cannot be considered as guilty of instigating that public servant to receive a bribe. We do not consider such a person to be liable to any punishment, and, as this omission may possibly appear censurable to many persons, we are desirous to explain our reasons. In all states of society the receiving of a bribe is a bad action, and may properly be made punishable. But whether the giving of a bribe ought or ought not to be punished is a question which does not admit of a short and general answer. There are countries in which the giver of a bribe ought to be more severely punished than the receiver. There are countries, on the other hand, in which the giving of a bribe may be what it is not desirable to visit with any punishment. In a country situated like England, the giver of a bribe is generally far more deserving of punishment than the receiver. The giver is generally the tempter; the receiver is the tempted. The giver is generally rich, powerful, well educated; the receiver, needy and ignorant. The giver is under no apprehension of suffering any injury if he refuses to give. It is not by fear, but by ambition, that he is generally induced to part with his money. Such a person is a proper subject of punishment. But there are countries where the case is widely different—where men give bribes to Magistrates from exactly the same feeling which leads them to give their purses to robbers or to pay ransom to pirates—where men give bribes because no man can, without a bribe, obtain common justice. In such countries we think that the giving of bribes is not a proper subject of punishment. It would be as absurd, in such a state of society, to reproach the giver of a bribe with corrupting the virtue of public servants, as it would be to say that the traveller who delivers his money when a pistol is held to his breast corrupts the virtue of the highwayman. We would by no means be understood to say that India, under the British Government, is in a state answering to this last description. Still we fear it is undeniable that corruption does prevail to a great extent among the lower class of public functionaries; that the power which those functionaries possess renders them formidable to the body of the people; that in the great majority of cases the receiver of the bribe is really the tempter, and that the giver of the bribe is really acting in self-defence. Under these circumstances, we are strongly of opinion that it would be unjust and cruel to punish the giving of a bribe in any case in which it could not be proved that the giver had really by his instigations corrupted the virtue of a public servant who, unless temptation had been put in his way, would have acted uprightly.

UNDER the above section a charge should be so framed as to deal with separate motives in separate heads.—5 Rev., Jud., and Pol. Jour. 138.

THE prisoner was convicted by the Sessions Judge of the offence of accepting a gratification as police-patel under s. 161 of the Penal Code. The examination of the prisoner before the Magistrate was not taken down in the form of question and answer, as required by s. 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Per Curiam —"The examination under s. 205 to be admissible as evidence under s. 366 must be taken in the form of question and answer, and certified as required in s. 205. But if it be not taken, as in the present case, the Court can order the confession to be proved by the evidence of the writer of the examination or other person who was present. In this case, however, the evidence is sufficient without the inadmissible examination, and, under ss. 426 and 439, the admission of the examination as evidence does not invalidate the trial and conviction."—REG. v. VITHOJI VALAD ABBA, 2 Bom. H. C. R. 398. [Couch and Newton, JJ. Mar. 16, 1864.]

CASE of offering a bribe to a juryman. Although what passed between the prisoner and the juryman might not have amounted to an offer of a bribe to the latter, yet it was held to be so when taken in connection with what passed between the prisoner and the juryman's brother. — QUEEN v. BAWOOL CHUNDER BISWAS, 1 W. R. 36. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 7, 1864.]

THE motives under which an accused person is charged with having taken a sum of money other than a legal remuneration should not have been gathered together as one head of the charge. If it was necessary that they should be all charged owing to a doubt in the mind of the committing officer as to which would be proved or presumed, they should be formed into separate heads, but it would have been preferable had only one or two of these motives been selected.—4 W. R. Cr. L., 3, No. 904 of 1865.

THE taking of a gratification by a sarishtadar to influence the Principal Sadr Amin in his decisions is sufficient to a legal conviction, whether the sarishtadar did, or did not, influence, or try to influence, the Principal Sadr Amin. — QUEEN v. KALLEE CHURN SARISHTADAR, 3 W. R. 10. [Glover, J. May 11, 1865.]

THE evidence of the person who bribes is admissible against the person bribed. A person who accepts for himself, or for some other person, a gratification for inducing, by corrupt or illegal means, a public servant to forbear to do a certain official act, is punishable, not under s. 161, but under s. 162 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. OBHOY CHURN CHUCKERBUTTY, 3 W. R. 19. [Glover, J. May 30, 1865.]

AN indictment will not be invalidated in consequence of the charge not notifying the specific section under which it has to be prosecuted. Under s. 161 it is necessary to show that the offence, the instigation of which is the subject of the charge, has been committed.—QUEEN v. NATABAR NUNDY, 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 43. [Peacock, C.J., and Morgan and Macpherson, JJ. Jan. 22, 1866.]

WHERE a constable and others enter a house and apprehend certain persons as gamblers, and afterwards release them on payment of a sum of money by the latter, the offence committed is not house-trespass and extortion, but taking a bribe as regards the constable, and abetment of that offence as regards the others. — GOVT. v. MAHOMED HOSSEIN, 5 W. R. 49. [Norman and Campbell, JJ. Mar. 5, 1866.]

THE charge is incomplete inasmuch as the nature of the office held by the prisoners, so as to make them public servants should have been stated.—In re HURNATH TOLLAPATRO, 5 W. R. Cr. L. 8, April 9, 1866.

HELD that bribery and other offences punishable under the Penal Code with imprisonment exceeding six months are not triable under Ch. 15 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and cannot, therefore, be compromised under s. 271 of the latter Code.—On a letter No. 100, dated 29th May 1869, from the Officiating Sessions Judge of Jessore, to the Registrar of the High Court.—12 W. R. 59. [Peacock, C.J., and Bayley, Kemp, Macpherson, and Glover, JJ. Sep. 6, 1869.]

A PATWARI taking grain as a consideration for showing favour to the giver in the discharge of his functions as patwari should be convicted under s. 161 (and not s. 165) of the Penal Code. Under s. 253 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is imperative upon the Magistrate to summon the witnesses named by the prisoner.—QUEEN v. MUDSOODDEEN, 2 N.-W. P 148. [Spankie, J. April 20, 1870.]

THE Local Government, in sanctioning or directing (under s 167 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1861) a charge against a public servant of an offence as such public servant, has power to limit its sanction by giving directions as to the person by whom, and the manner in which, the prosecution is to be preferred and conducted, and a Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a charge against such public servant if preferred otherwise than in accordance with such directions. Semble: The Local Government has power in the like case to direct that the accused servant shall be tried before a specified tribunal, being one having jurisdiction in that behalf. Therefore, where the sanction directed that the accused public servant should be prosecuted upon such charges as Mr. C might be prepared to prefer against him, and there was nothing on the record to show, nor did it otherwise appear, that Mr. C had preferred any charge against, or taken any part in the prosecution of, the accused public servant, the High Court quashed the conviction of the accused as having been without jurisdiction.—REG. v. VINAYAK DIVAKAR, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 32. [Westropp, C.J., and Gibbs and West, JJ. June 14, 1871.]

A PEON of a Collector's Court, who received no fixed pay from the Government, but was remunerated by fees whenever employed to serve any process, and was placed on the register of supernumerary peons, had been ordered by the Magistrate to do duty on a particular day at the office of the special sub-registrar, where he was detected receiving an eight-anna piece from a person, and was prosecuted for receiving an illegal gratification as a public servant. Held that the peon was a public servant under the definition of cl. 9, s. 21. A person who in fact (though wrongly) discharges the duties of an office whereby he is to all appearance a public servant, may, as such, be tried for receiving an illegal gratification under s. 161.—QUEEN v. RAMKRISTO DOSS, 16 W. R. 27; 7 B. L. R. 446. [Ainslie and Paul, JJ. July 24, 1871.]

ON a conviction of taking illegal gratification, a simple order to refund the money taken is quite inadequate to the gravity of the offence. Although no appeal lay in such a case, yet the High Court, upon a reference, having power to interfere, quashed the conviction.—IN THE MATTER OF MUTTY LALL CHUTTOPADHYA, 16 W. R. 64. [Bayley and Kemp, JJ. Dec. 8, 1871.]

WHERE the accused was charged under s. 116, Penal Code, with having abetted the commission of an offence punishable under s. 161 of that Code, the person abetted having been a Civil Surgeon of a sadr station, it was held that the enhanced imprisonment prescribed by the latter part of s. 161 could not be awarded, as the Civil Surgeon was not a public servant within the words of the section, "whose duty it is to prevent the commission of such offence."—QUEEN v. RAMNATH SURMA BISWAS, 21 W. R. 9. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Nov 18, 1873.]

WHERE a police-officer who had been called on to answer to a charge of bribery, which was not sustained by the evidence, was found guilty of violation of duty under s. 29, Act V. of 1861, of which offence the trying officer found sufficient evidence in the course of the trial, held that an accused person called on to answer to a specific charge cannot be convicted on an entirely different charge, without previous notice of the offence imputed to him, and opportunity being afforded him of meeting the accusation under s. 23, Act V. of 1861. A police-officer is not bound to arrest a person against whom no proceedings have been directed if he believes that he has not sufficient grounds for apprehending him. —IN THE MATTER OF GRISH CHUNDER NUNDEE, 26 W. R. 8. [Morris and McDonell, JJ. Sep. 7, 1876.]

K, a police-officer, employed in a Criminal Court to read the diaries of cases investigated by the police, and to bring up in order each case for trial with the accused and witnesses, after a case of theft had been decided by the Court in which the persons accused were convicted, and a sum of money, the proceeds of the theft, had been made over by the order of the Court to the prosecutor in the case, asked for and received from the prosecutor a portion of such money, not as a motive or reward for any of the objects described in s. 161 of the Penal Code, but as "dasturi." Held that K was not, under these circumstances, punishable under s 161 of the Penal Code, but under s. 165 of that Code.—EMPRESS v. KAMPTA PRASAD, I. L. R., 1 All. 530. [Stuart, C.J., and Spankie, J. Dec 15, 1877.]

THE manager of a Court of Wards' estate paid into a Bank, carrying on the treasury business of the Government, a sum of money on behalf of Government. B, a poddar in the Bank, demanded and took a reward for his trouble in receiving the money. On B being prosecuted and charged under s 161 of the Penal Code, held, that although the money might have been paid on account of Government, it was on behalf of the Bank, and not on behalf of the Government, that the money was received by the accused, and that the poddar was a servant of the Bank only, and not a public servant within the meaning of cl. 9, s. 21, of the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF MODUN MOHUN, I. L. R., 4 Cal 376. [Ainslie and Broughton, JJ. Dec. 10, 1878.]

To ask for a bribe is an attempt to obtain one, and a bribe may be asked for as effectually in implicit as in explicit terms. Where, therefore, B, who was employed as a clerk in the Pension Department, in an interview with A, who was an applicant for a pension, after referring to his own influence in that department, and instancing two cases in which, by that influence, increased pensions had been obtained, proceeded to intimate that anything might be effected by "kar-rawai," and on the overture being rejected, concluded by declaring that A would rue and repent the rejection of it, held that the offence of attempting to obtain a bribe was consummated.—EMPRESS v. BALDEO SAHAI, I. L. R., 2 All. 253. [Pearson and Spankie, JJ. April 7, 1879.]

THE accused was charged with having received illegal gratifications from C and Co. on three specific occasions in 1876. In 1876, 1877, and 1878, C and Co. were doing business as Commissariat contractors, and the accused was the manager of the Commissariat Office. Held that evidence of similar but unconnected instances of receiving illegal gratifications from C and Co. in 1877 and 1878 was not admissible against him under ss. 5 to 13 of the Evidence Act. Held, per Garth, C.J. (Maclean J., concurring).—The evidence was not admissible under s. 14. Per Garth, C.J.—S. 14 applies to cases where a particular act is more or less criminal or culpable according to the state of mind or feeling of the person who does it, not to cases where the question of guilt or innocence depends upon actual facts, and not upon the state of a man's mind or feeling. Per Mitter, J.—If the receipt of the illegal gratifications mentioned in the charge be considered proved by other evidence, and if it were necessary to ascertain whether the accused received them as a motive for showing favour in the exercise of his official functions, the alleged transactions of 1877 and 1878 would be relevant under s. 14, but they would not be relevant to establish the fact of payments in 1876.—EMPRESS v. M. J. VANDOORY MOODELIAR, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 655, 8 C. L. R. 197. [Garth, C.J., and Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Jan. 22 and Feb 9, 1881.]

A COMPLAINT was filed by Ganesh Narayan Sathe in the Court of the District Magistrate of Poona against Balkrishna Govind Sindekar and five other mamlatdars, charging them with purchasing judicial offices through the instrumentality of one Hanmantrao jaghirdar, who was alleged to have had influence with Mr. A. T. Crawford, Revenue Commissioner, C D It was held that, as a general rule, any person having knowledge of the commission of an offence may set the law in motion by a complaint, even though he is not personally interested or affected by the offence The exceptions to this rule, of which ss 195 and 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code are examples, are exceptions created by statute. There is nothing in the Code showing an intention to confine prosecutions to the persons directly injured Where the offence charged is a "warrant" and not a "summons" case, a Magistrate ought to proceed with the inquiry or trial in spite of the withdrawal of the complainant, if he finds the elements of an offence on the facts set forth in the complaint. S. 248 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies only to a "summons" case. Semble: A complainant is not a witness punishable for refusal to answer under s 485 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or under s. 179 of the Penal Code.—In re GANESH NARAYAN SATHE, I. L. R., 13 Bom. 600. [Scott and Jardine, JJ. June 19, 1889.]

THE accused, who were classers employed in the Revenue Survey Department, were charged, under s 161 of the Penal Code, with taking bribes from the rayats of certain villages. The only evidence against the accused was that of persons who had either subscribed to the bribes, or collected subscription, or paid the money to the accused. They stated that they had offered the bribes, because the classers had threatened to raise the assessment, cut down the hedges, and erect new boundary-marks. As regards this evidence, the trying Magistrate remarked that, even if all the witnesses for the prosecution were treated as accomplices, it was open to him to convict on their uncorroborated testimony, as "there was inherent truth in their statements, and circumstances existed which negatived the presumption of a conspiracy, and evidenced signs of truthfulness." The Magistrate was also of opinion that there was a distinction between accomplices who volunteered to assist in the receipt of illegal gratifications, and those who assisted under compulsion. In the opinion of the Magistrate, the witnesses in the present case belonged to the latter class, and there was no reason to disbelieve their evidence. He, therefore, convicted the accused under s. 161 of the Penal Code, and sentenced them to rigorous imprisonment and fine. Held (Scott, J., dissenting), that the convictions were illegal, there being no evidence to corroborate the witnesses for the prosecution, all of whom were accomplices. Held also (Scott, J., dissenting), that there was such error in the consideration by the Magistrate of the evidence as to prejudice the accused, and such a failure of justice as to justify the Court in revision in setting aside the convictions. Per Curiam.—The limits of the application of the doctrine of necessity as an excuse for an act otherwise criminal are those prescribed in s. 94 of the Indian Penal Code. Therefore, witnesses, who, in order to avoid pecuniary injury or personal molestation, had offered or given bribes to a public servant, were abettors of the offence of taking an illegal gratification, and their evidence should be treated as that of accomplices. By the law both of India and England, the evidence of an accomplice is admissible, and a conviction is not illegal, because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice (s. 133 of the Evidence Act, I. of 1872). But the presumption that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless corroborated in material particulars, has become a rule of practice of almost universal application. Per Scott, J.—There may be, however, cases of an exceptional character in which the accomplice-evidence alone convinces a Judge; and if he acts on that conviction, with the character of the witnesses clearly present in his mind, a Revisional Court ought not to interfere in the absence of other circumstances showing a want of judicial discretion. Per Jardine, J.—The mere circumstance of a person being present on a lawful occasion does not raise a presumption of that person's complicity in an offence then committed so as to make s. 34 of the Penal Code applicable—Reg. v. Farler (8 C. and P. 106). Where the Magistrate on that ground did make that presumption against an accused person, and applied the provisions of s. 34, he committed an error in law, and the High Court, as a Court of Revision, might acquit the accused.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MAGANLAL AND MOTILAL, I. L. R., 14 Bom. 115. [Bayley, Scott, and Jardine, JJ., Sept. 24, 1889.]

AN order by the Board of Revenue, sanctioning the prosecution of a Deputy Tahsildar by the Collector of the District for "bribery or such of the charges set forth in the Deputy Collector's report as he thinks likely to stand investigation by a Criminal Court," is not a legal sanction within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 197, and a commitment on any of such charges should be quashed.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SAMAVIER, I. L. R., 16 Mad. 468. [Collins, C.J., and Parker, J. Mar. 8, 14, 1893.]

THE Mahars of a certain village having been suspended from their office for some months, a meeting of the villagers was held at the house of the Patel, at which the Patel was present to consider the question of their restoration to office, and an agreement was there come to that they should be restored on their paying a sum of Rs. 300 towards the repair of the village-temple. Held that the Patel, being a public servant, had committed an offence under s. 161 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860).—IMPERATRIX v. APPAJI, I. with any member of the Senate of the Allahabad University,"* or with any public servant as such, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

THE evidence of the person who bribes is admissible against the person bribed. A person who accepts, for himself or for some other person, a gratification for inducing, by corrupt or illegal means, a public servant to forbear to do a certain official act, is punishable, not under s. 161, but under s. 162 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. OBHOY CHURN CHUCKERBUTTY, 3 W. A CONVICTION, on a charge of attempting to receive a gratification for influencing a public servant in the exercise of his public functions, is illegal as disclosing no legal offence when it omits to state the person or persons for whom the gratification was obtained, or the public servant to be influenced in the exercise of his public functions. A Judge ought to explain to the jury the legal construction to be put on a document relied on by the prosecution.—QUEEN v. SETUL CHUNDER BAGCHEE, 3 W. R. 69. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. WHERE a complaint charged a person who was one of the public servants mentioned in s. 167 of the Criminal Procedure Code with committing acts which, if committed by a private individual, would have constituted the offence of extortion, it was held that it was not illegal to treat the charge as a charge of extortion, and to proceed with the trial without sanction for the prosecution — REG. v. PARSHRAM KESHAV, 7 Bom. In 1876, 1877, and 1878, C and Co. were doing business as Commissariat contractors, and the accused was the manager of the Commissariat Office. Held that evidence of similar but unconnected instances of receiving illegal gratifications from C and Co. in 1877 and 1878 was not admissible against him under ss. 5 to 13 of the Evidence Act. Held, per Garth, C.J. (Maclean, J., concurring). The evidence was not admissible under s. 14. Per Garth, C.J.—S. 14 applies to cases where a particular act is more or less criminal or culpable according to the state of mind or feeling of the person who does it, not to cases where the question of guilt or innocence depends upon actual facts, and not upon the state of a man's mind or feeling. Per Mitter, J.—If the receipt of the illegal gratifications mentioned in the charge be considered proved by other evidence, and if it were necessary to ascertain whether the accused received them as a motive for showing favour in the exercise of his official functions, the alleged transactions of 1877 and 1878 would be relevant under s. 14, but they would not be relevant to establish the fact of payments in 1876. — EMPRESS v. M. WHERE more than one offence is proved in respect of which the accused has been charged and tried, a conviction for each such offence must follow, whether s. 71 of the Penal Code applies to the case or not; and subject to the provisions of s. 71, a separate sentence must be passed in respect of each such conviction. Under s. 35 of the Criminal Procedure Code, sentences of imprisonment cannot be passed so as to run concurrently. In a trial for offences under ss. 170 and 383 of the Penal Code, committed in the same transaction, it appeared that but for personating a public servant, the accused would not have been in a position to commit the act of extortion complained of. Held that the first and second paragraphs of s. 71 of the Penal Code did not apply to the case; that the third paragraph also did not apply, because the words "constitute an offence" refer to the definitions of offences contained in the Code irrespective of the evidence whereby the acts complained of are proved; and personating a public servant as defined in s. 170 was not a constituent element of extortion as defined in s. 383; that in the present case the former offence was completed before the latter had begun; and that separate sentences for each offence were, therefore, not illegal.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. WAZIR JAN, I. 1. A BARRISTER, offended by the use of a strong expression on the part of a Judge while sitting in Court, sends an officer to the Judge's private residence upon a pacific errand to ask for an explanation. Held by nine Judges out of eleven, that the party sending the message and the party conveying it, are guilty of contempt of Court.—IN THE MATTER OF CHARLES PIFFARD, ESQ., B.A., AND EDMUND GEORGE FRANCIS, 1 Hydes' Rep. 79. 2. IT is "a contempt of the Court," and full of danger to the administration of justice, that a suitor, on any pretext whatever, should communicate with a Judge, either by letter, or in conversation, or in any manner whatsoever, otherwise than by public proceedings in open Court, respecting the merits of any case in which he is interested, and which is either pending in the Court of such Judge, or likely to come before him.—WILLIAM TAYLER v. RANEE ASMEDH KOONWAR, 4 W. A WARRANT addressed to a nazir by a Civil Court for the arrest of a defendant in execution of a decree is not a notice, summons, or order within the meaning of s. 172 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. ZAHOOR ALI KHAN, 4 N.-W. P. 97. [Spankie, J. June 26, 1872.

IT is illegal to punish a person under s. 172 for absconding to prevent the execution of a warrant issued against him, as a warrant is neither a summons nor a notice, but is addressed to the officer required to execute it, not to the person whose attendance is required. Such a case must be dealt with under the Criminal Procedure Code.—QUEEN v. AMIR JAN, 7 N.-W. P. 302 Spankie J May 28, 1875.

A COLLECTOR, who, in order to draw up a report for the information of Government, holds a departmental inquiry into the conduct of a tahsildar accused of extortion in the discharge of his executive duties, is authorized, under the provision of Mad. Act III of 1869, to issue summonses for the attendance of persons whose evidence may appear to him necessary for the investigation In order to prove the commission of an offence under s 172 of the Penal Code, the prosecutor must show that a summons, notice, or order has been issued, and that the accused knew, or had reason to believe, that it had been issued To abscond to avoid the service of process which has not issued is no offence under s 172 of the Penal Code Absconding does not necessarily imply change of place, but may be effected by concealment. If a person, having concealed himself before process issues, continues to do so after it has issued, he absconds.—SRINIVASA AYYANGAR v. REG., I. L. R., 4 Mad. 393. EXCEPT as provided in ss. 477, 480, and 485 (of Act V. of 1898), no Judge of a Criminal Court, or Magistrate, other than a Judge of a High Court, the Recorder of Rangoon, and the Presidency Magistrates, shall try any person for any offence referred to in s. 195 (of Act V. of 1898), when such offence is committed before himself or in contempt of his authority, or is brought under his notice as such Judge or Magistrate in the course of a judicial proceeding. Nothing in s. 576 or s. 482 (of Act V. of 1898) shall prevent a Magistrate, empowered to commit to the Court of Session or High Court, from himself committing any case to such Court, or shall prevent a Presidency Magistrate from himself disposing of any case instead of sending it for inquiry to another Magistrate.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V of 1898), s. 487.

S. 195 of the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898) lays down: "No Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under ss 172 to 188 (both inclusive) of the Penal Code, except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint, of the public servant concerned, or of some public servant to whom he is subordinate. . . . . The sanction referred to in this section may be expressed in general terms, and need not name the accused person, but it shall, so far as practicable, specify the Court or other place in which, and the occasion on which, the offence was committed. When sanction is given in respect of any offence referred to in this section, the Court taking cognizance of the case may frame a charge of any other offence so referred to which is disclosed by the facts."

or intentionally removes any such summons, notice, or order from any place to which it is lawfully affixed, or intentionally prevents the lawful making of any proclamation, under the authority of any public servant legally competent, as such public servant, to direct such proclamation to be made,

* As to authority for instituting prosecutions under ss. 172 to 188 (both inclusive), see the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), s. 195 (1) (a).

shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both;

or, if the summons, notice, order, or proclamation, is to attend in person or by agent, or to produce a document in a Court of Justice, with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

REFUSING to sign a summons by an accused person does not constitute the offence of intentionally preventing the service of a summons on himself under s. 173 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. KALVA BIN FAKIR, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 34. [Newton, Offg. C.J., and Tucker, J. April 15, 1868.]

A REFUSAL to receive a summons is not an offence under s. 173 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. PUNAMALIE, I. L. R., 5 Mad. 199. [Kernan and Kindersley, JJ. April 28, 1882.]

A MERE refusal to sign a receipt for a summons is not an offence under s. 173 or s. 180 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KRISHNA GOBINDA DAS, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 358. [Pigot and Rampini, JJ. Aug. 25, 1892.]

Non-attendance in obedience to an order from public servant.

174. Whoever, being legally bound to attend in person or by an agent at a certain place and time in obedience to a summons, notice, order, or proclamation proceeding from any public servant legally competent, as such public servant, to issue the same,

THERE is nothing in s. 219, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), which prevents an accused person who has forfeited his bail-bond by default of appearance from being proceeded against under s. 179 of the Penal Code, notwithstanding that his surety has paid the penalty mentioned in the recognizance. IN THE MATTER OF TAJVOMUDDU LAHOREE, 10 W. R. 4. [Phear and Hobhouse, JJ. June 2, 1861.]

S. 174 of the Penal Code does not apply to the case of a defendant escaping from custody under a warrant in execution of a decree of a Civil Court.—REG. v. SARDAR PATHU, 1 Bom. H. C. R. 38. [Newton and Tucker, JJ. Aug. 12, 1863.]

WHERE a person disobeyed a proclamation, it was held that he was punishable under s. 174.—QUEEN v. WOMESH CHUNDER GHOSE, 5 W. R. 71; 1 Wym. 61. [Peacock, C.J., and Norman and Campbell, JJ. April 18, 1866.]

THE proclamation issuable under s. 159, Act VIII. of 1859, cannot be legally affixed to the mal cutcherry of a defaulting witness. Before the provisions of that section can come into play, personal service of summons must be attempted. In the absence of process of legal service, the Magistrate's order of imprisonment for contempt, under s. 174 of the Penal Code and s. 168 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, was quashed.—QUEEN v. HURYNATH CHOWDHRY, 7 W. R. 58. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. April 27, 1867.]

MAGISTRATES may, under the Criminal Procedure Code, issue summons for service upon witnesses beyond the limits of their districts.—PRO., Aug. 18, 1866, 3 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 5.

A MAGISTRATE can take cognizance of an offence under s. 174, Penal Code, committed against his own Court. An order of forfeiture under s. 148, Code of Criminal Procedure, if substantially legal, cannot be disturbed for an immaterial error of procedure.—BAIJOO BAUL v. GUNGUN MISSER, 8 W. R. 61. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. Aug. 13, 1867.] Overruled by Queen v. Chandra Sekhar Roy, 5 B. L. R. 100; 13 W. R. 66, infra.

THE Chairman of Municipal Commissioners appointed under Act XXVI. of 1850, although a public servant, is not legally competent as such to issue an order for attendance before him. Held accordingly that disobedience of such an order was not an offence within s. 174 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. PURSHOTAM VALJI, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 33 [Newton, Offg. C.J., and Tucker, J. April 15, 1868.]

A CONVICTION under s. 174 of the Penal Code for "having intentionally omitted to attend the mahalkari's kachahri to give evidence in a revenue-case under ss. 26 and 29 of Reg. XVII. of 1827, though the summons issued was duly served upon the accused," was not illegal.—REG. v. NARAINAPPA COMTE, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 39. [Newton, Offg. C.J., and Tucker, J. May 20, 1868.]

A CONVICTION for non-attendance in obedience to an order from a public servant, under s. 174, Penal Code, cannot be bad, unless the person summoned was legally bound to attend, and refused or intentionally omitted to attend. A witness was summoned by a Judge of a Small Cause Court to attend on a certain day to give evidence in a certain case. Before that day, however, the case was adjourned, and the witness was not served with a fresh summons or notification of the adjournment. Not having attended when the case was heard, he was fined. Held that, not having been re-summoned, the witness was not bound to attend.—IN THE MATTER OF SREENATH GHOSE, 10 W. R. 33. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. Sep. 8, 1868.]

BEFORE a fine can be inflicted under s. 174, Penal Code, for non-attendance, it must be proved that such non-attendance was in the nature of a wilful disobedience.—QUEEN v. UNGUN LALL, 1 N.-W. P. 303. [Pearson and Turner, JJ. July 2, 1869.]

IN India it is not illegal to serve a summons, notice, or order on a Sunday.—4 Mad. Jur. 347, No. 1453, 1869.

THE defendant was arrested by warrant, and was released on bail to appear before the Magistrate on a specified day. The defendant appeared on that day, but the Magistrate being unable to take up the case, a verbal order was given to the defendant to appear on the following day. This he omitted to do, and was convicted under s. 174 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction was good.—PRO., Jan. 18, 1870, 5 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 15.

HELD, overruling Baijoo Baul v. Gungun Misser 18 W. R. 61, that a Magistrate cannot take cognizance of an offence under s. 174, Penal Code, committed against his own Court, but is bound, under s. 471 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to send the case for trial before another Magistrate. The only cases under the Criminal Procedure Code in which a Sessions Judge or Magistrate can try a case in which he is himself interested, pointed out.—QUEEN v. CHANDRA SEKHAR ROY, 13 W. R. 66; 5 B. L. R. 100. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. April 23, 1870.]

A MAGISTRATE cannot issue a warrant of arrest against a witness under s. 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure unless he is first satisfied that the witness has disobeyed a summons which was served on him. In order to make a person summoned as a witness liable under s. 174 of the Penal Code, the fact must be that he intentionally omitted to attend at the place or time mentioned in the summons, or that he wilfully departed from the place where he had attended before the time at which it was lawful for him to depart.—QUEEN v. SUTHERLAND; QUEEN v. NARAIN SINGH, 14 W. R. 20 [Phear and Dwarka nath Mitter, JJ. July 20, 1870.]

THE accused was convicted upon a charge that he, being summoned as a defendant in a case of trespass, left the Court without permission, and thereby disobeyed the summons. The Sub-Magistrate gave the accused a verbal order to appear when required, but the Magistrate did not adjourn the case to any particular day. Held that the conviction was bad —PRO., Dec. 22, 1870. 6 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 10.

Queen v. Chandra Sekhar Roy (13 W. R. 66; 5 B. L. R. 100), ruling that a Court before which an offence is committed under ch. 10 of the Penal Code cannot try the case itself, followed, notwithstanding the argument of the Sessions Judge in this case that that ruling should apply only to certain cases under ch. 10.—CHUTOORBHOOJ BHARTHEE v. MR. MACNAGHTEN, 15 W. R. 2. [Bayley and Mitter, JJ. Jan. 18, 1871.]

A MAHALKARI invested with the powers of a Second-class Subordinate Magistrate cannot issue a summons under s. 8 of Act XI. of 1843, nor can a person be convicted under s. 174 of the Penal Code for having disobeyed such a summons so issued.—REG. v. VENKAJI BHASKAR, 8 Bom H. C. R. 19. [Lloyd and Kemball, JJ. April 13, 1871.]

ACCUSED was summoned as a witness in a case to be heard on 27th May The summons was not served personally on accused, but affixed to the door of his house. On the appointed date the case was not taken up, but was adjourned by public proclamation until June 5th. On this latter date accused failed to attend. For this he was convicted of an offence under s. 174 of the Penal Code. There was no evidence that the summons had been brought to the knowledge of the accused so as to require him to attend on the first occasion. Held that, on the ground of there being no evidence of the commission of an offence, the conviction must be quashed. The adjournment of a trial by public proclamation is irregular and objectionable.—PRO., Aug. 1 1871, 6 Mad. H C. R. Ap. 29.

A MAGISTRATE, while travelling in his district, tried a case partly at a place, and then fixed Sunday next at noon for further trial of the case, to be held in another village. On the Sunday the witnesses for the defence came to the village, but at 3 P. M. instead of noon. The Magistrate, after waiting an hour beyond the time fixed, moved to the next village, and subsequently sentenced the defaulting witnesses, under s. 174 of the Penal Code, to one month's simple imprisonment. The High Court on reference quashed the conviction.—QUEEN v. HARGOBIND DATTA SIŔKAR, 8 B. L. R. Ap. 12. [Jackson and Mookerjee, JJ. Aug. 14, 1871.]

A SUB-MAGISTRATE convicted certain persons, under s. 174 of the Penal Code, of disobedience to summonses issued by him as tahsildar. Held that the convictions under the first part of s. 174 were sustainable. Mad. Act III. of 1869 gives a tahsildar power to issue summonses.—PRO., Nov. 30, 1871, 6 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 44.

A WARRANT issued under s. 76 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should be sealed, and should describe the person to be apprehended under it with reasonable particularity, so that there may be no difficulty in establishing his identity, and should be subscribed with the name and full official title of the Magistrate issuing it. Where a warrant was defective in all the above particulars, the prisoner apprehended under it was released by the High Court.—In re JAMES HASTINGS, 9 Bom. H. C. R. 154. [Sargent, J. Jan. 20, 1872.]

A CONVICTION under s. 174 of the Penal Code for disobeying a verbal order of a Village Magistrate is good.—PRO., Feb. 20, 1872, 7 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 3.

BEFORE convicting a person under s. 174 of the Penal Code, it is necessary to prove that he had notice to appear at a certain time and place, and that he did not do so.—IN THE MATTER OF SHIB PERSHAD CHUCKERBUTTY, 17 W. R. 38. [Bayley and Markby, JJ. Mar. 9, 1872.]

ACCUSED was convicted, under s. 174 of the Penal Code, of disobedience to a summons addressed to him as defendant in a suit brought before the Collector under Reg. VI of 1831. The summons did not specify the place at which his attendance was required. Held that on this ground the conviction was illegal.—PRO., Dec. 20, 1872, 7 Mad. H. C. R. Ap 14.

COMPLAINANT a batta-peon, arrested defendant on a warrant, and asked him to follow him. Defendant promised to do so, went into his house on the pretext of fetching a turban, and absconded. Held that a conviction under s. 174 of the Penal Code was illegal.—PRO., Jan. 5, 1875. 7 Mad. H. C. R. Ap 43.

A COLLECTOR who, in order to draw up a report for the information of Government, holds a departmental inquiry into the conduct of a tahsildar accused of extortion in the discharge of his executive duties, is authorized, under the provision of Mad. Act III. of 1869, to issue summonses for the attendance of persons whose evidence may appear to him necessary for the investigation. In order to prove the commission of an offence under s. 172 of the Penal Code, the prosecutor must show that a summons, notice, or order has been issued, and that the accused knew, or had reason to believe, that it had been issued. To abscond to avoid the service of process which has not issued is no offence under s. 172 of the Penal Code. Absconding does not necessarily imply change of place, but may be effected by concealment. If a person, having concealed himself before process issues, continues to do so after it had issued, he absconds.—SRINIVASA AYYANGAR v. REG., I. L. R., 4 Mad. 393. [Turner, C.J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J. Dec. 2, 1881.]

A SUMMONS should be clear and specific in its terms as to the title of the Court, the place at which, the day, and the time of the day, when the attendance of the person summoned is required, and it should go on to say that such person is not to leave the Court without leave, and, if the case in which he has been summoned is adjourned, without ascertaining the date to which it is adjourned. Where a summons did not mention the place at which, or the time of the day when, the attendance of the person summoned was required, held that such person could not lawfully be punished under s. 174 of the Penal Code for non-attendance in obedience to such summons.—EMPRESS v. RAM SARAN, I. L. R., 5 All. 7. [Straight, J. July 7, 1882.]

A SUMMONS issued by a tahsildar to a village-karnam to appear and give information required for the preparation of census, jamabandi, and dual accounts, is not within the purview of Mad. Act III. of 1869, and disobedience of such a summons is not an offence under s. 174 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. VANAM SUBRAMANYAM, 1 L. R., 5 Mad. 377. [Muttusami Ayyar and Tarrant, JJ. Aug. 5, 1882.] Overruled by Queen-Empress v. Subbana, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 197, infra.

THE provisions of s. 174 of the Penal Code are not in conflict with the special provisions of ss. 15 and 16 of Reg. IV. of 1816 (Mad.). In ordinary cases disobedience to the summons of a village-munsif should be dealt with under the Regulation. But if a charge is laid under the Penal Code, the Criminal Court must deal with it.—QUEEN v. RAMACHANDRAPPA, I. L. R., 6 Mad. 249 [Turner, C.J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J. Jan. 25 1883.]

UNDER Mad. Act III of 1869, Collectors and their subordinate officers may issue a summons for the purpose of any inquiry, however general, which they are empowered to make for the purpose of administration.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SUBBANA, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 197. [Turner, C.J., and Kernan, Kindersley, and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. Sep. 28, 1883.] Overrules Queen v. Vanam Subramanyam, I. L. R., 5 Mad. 377, supra.

S. 160 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which authorizes a police-officer making an investigation under ch. 5 of the Code to require the attendance before himself of any person (within certain limits) who appears to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case, does not empower such officer to require the attendance of an accused person to answer the complaint made against him.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SAMINADA, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 274. [Turner, C.J., and Kernan, Kindersley, and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. Nov. 15, 1883.]

A MAN who, in obedience to a summons to appear and answer a criminal charge, attends a Magistrate's Court, but, finding the Magistrate not present at the time mentioned in the summons, departs without waiting for a reasonable time, is guilty of an offence under s. 174 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KISAN BAPU, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 93. [Nanabhai Haridas and Wedderburn, JJ. Aug. 18, 1885.]

ANY police-officer making an investigation under ch. xiv. of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Information to Police, and their Powers to Investigate) may, by order in writing, require the attendance before himself of any person being within the limits of his own or any adjoining station who, from the information given or otherwise, appears to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case: and such person shall attend as so required.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), s. 160.

WHERE a summons to a witness, issued under Act III. of 1869 (Madras), was shown to a person and taken back. Held that the summons had not been served.—In re KUPPAN, I. L. R., 11 Mad. 137. [Muttusami Ayyar and Parkar, JJ. Sep. 27, 1887.]

A REVENUE-OFFICER sent a yadast to a Third-class Magistrate, charging a certain person with having disobeyed a summons issued by the revenue-officer. The Third-class Magistrate thereupon tried and convicted the accused under s. 174 of the Penal Code. The District Magistrate referred the case on the ground that the conviction was bad under s. 530 (k) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held that as the yadast amounted to a complaint within the meaning of s. 4, although the complainant was not examined on oath as required by s. 200, the conviction was not illegal.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MONU, I. L. R., 11 Mad. 443. [Muttusami Ayyar and Parker, JJ. July 18, 1888.]

THE accused, who were parties to a petition pending in a District Court, were summoned by a tahsildar to give evidence on an inquiry by him as to whether or not the petitioner was a pauper. They omitted to attend on the summons, and were charged, in respect of such non-attendance, under s. 174

of the Penal Code, and were convicted. Held that the conviction was bad, the tahsildar not being authorized to issue the summons under Act III. of 1869 (Madras).—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VARATHAPPA CHETTI, I. L. R., 12 Mad. 297. [Collins, C.J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J. Mar. 7, 26, 1889.]

IT is not an offence under the Penal Code, s. 174, to disobey a summons issued by a British Magistrate directing the person summoned to appear before him at a place outside British territory.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PARANGA, I. L. R., 16 Mad. 463. [Muttusami Ayyar and Shephard, JJ. Mar. 29, 1893.]

THE offence contemplated by s. 174, Penal Code, is an omission to appear at a particular time and at a particular place before a specified public functionary. Where, therefore, the public servant was absent on the date fixed in a summons, held that the person summoned could not be convicted under this section, though he failed to attend, having the intention to disobey the summons.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KRISHTAPPA, I. L. R., 20 Mad 31. [Subramania Ayyar and Boddam, JJ. Oct. 16, 1896.]

IN a summons case, on the day fixed for trial, an appearance was made on behalf of an accused person by his mukhtar who asked the Magistrate under s. 205 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused. The Magistrate, however, regarding the non-attendance of the accused as a contempt of Court, called upon him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under s. 174 of the Penal Code for non-attendance on service of summons. Held, that the accused did make an appearance, though not a personal appearance, on service of summons; but that he did not personally attend should not, under the circumstances, have been regarded as an offence under s. 174 of the Penal Code.—DURGA DAS RAKHIT v. UMESH CHUNDRA SEN, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 985. [Prinsep and Handley, JJ. June 15, 1900.]

A, being legally bound to produce a document before a Zillah Court, intentionally omits to produce the same. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

WHEN any Civil, Criminal, or Revenue Court is of opinion that there is ground for inquiring into any offence referred to in s. 195, and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, such Court, after making any preliminary inquiry that may be necessary, may send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the first-class, and may send the accused in custody, or take sufficient security for his appearance before such Magistrate; and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence on such inquiry or trial. Such Magistrate shall thereupon proceed according to law, and if upon complaint made and recorded under s. 200, and may, if he is authorized under s. 192 to transfer cases, transfer the inquiry or trial to some other competent Magistrate.—Crim. WHEN any such offence as is described in s. 175, 178, 179, 180, or 228 of the Indian Penal Code, is committed in the view or presence of any Civil, Criminal, or Revenue Court, the Court may cause the offender, whether he is a European British subject or not, to be detained in custody; and at any

A COURT other than the High Court, etc., can try persons for offences committed before itself only in cases to which s. 477, 480, or 485, is applicable; and none of these sections is applicable when the accused is charged under s. 175 of the Penal Code —QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SESHAYYA, I. IN this section the word "offence" has the same meaning when the thing punishable under the special or local law is punishable under such law with imprisonment for a term of six months or upwards, whether with or without fine.—S. 40, Penal Code.

EVERY person, whether within or without the presidency-towns, aware of the commission of, or of the intention of any other person to commit, any offence punishable under the following sections of the Indian Penal Code (namely), 121, 121A, 122, 123, 124, 124A, 125, 126, 130, "143, 144, 145, 147, 148," 302, 303, 304, 382, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 402, 435, 436, 449, 450, 456, 457, 458, 459, and 460, shall, in the absence of reasonable excuse, the burden of proving which shall lie upon the person so aware, forthwith give information to the nearest Magistrate or police-officer of such commission or intention. For the purposes of this section the term "offence" includes any act committed at any place out of British India which would constitute an offence if committed in British India.—Crim. (d) the occurrence, in or near such village, of any sudden or unnatural death, or of any death under suspicious circumstances;

(e) the commission of, or intention to commit, at any place out of British India near such village, any act which, if committed in British India, would be an offence punishable under any of the following sections of the Indian Penal Code, namely, 302, 304, 382, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 402, 435, 436, 449, 450, 457, 458, 459, and 460;

(f) any matter likely to affect the maintenance of order or the prevention of crime, or the safety of person or property, respecting which the District Magistrate, by general or special order made with the previous sanction of the Local Government, has directed him to communicate information.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), s. 45.

A PRISONER cannot be punished under s. 118, as there was no omission of an act which he was bound to perform which facilitated the commission of an offence: but he should be convicted under s 176, Penal Code, as he was bound to report under s. 138, Act XXV. of 1861, after he was informed of the robbery.—GOVT. v. KESREE, 1 Agra H. C. R. 37. [Turner, J., and Spankie, Offg. J. Dec 21, 1866.]

THE refusal of a person to join in a dacoity does not imply a knowledge on his part of the commission of that offence, or render him liable to punishment under s. 176 of the Penal Code, for intentional omission to give notice or information for the purpose of preventing the commission of an offence.—QUEEN v. LAHAI MUNDAL, 7 W. R. 29. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Feb 5, 1867.]

THE karnam of a village is not bound to report the commission of offences other than those specified in s. 138 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The village-munsif is bound to report the commission of all offences committed in his village to such person and in such manner as may be most likely to be effectual for the apprehension of the offenders. —PRO., Mar. 12, 1867: 3 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 30.

A CHARGE should distinctly set forth the particular offence in respect of which the accused either omitted to give information, or gave information which he knew to be false, and it should appear precisely what his duty was in the matter.—QUEEN v. MOOSUBROO, 8 W. R. 37. [Jackson and Hobson, JJ. July 8, 1867.]

S. 176 of the Penal Code applies to persons upon whom an obligation is imposed by law to furnish certain information to public servants, and the penalty which the law provides is intended to apply to parties who commit an intentional breach of such obligation.—IN THE MATTER OF PHOOL CHAND BROJOBASSER, 16 W. R. 35. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 29, 1871.]

INTENTIONAL omission is the gist of the offence of a zemindar omitting to give information regarding an offence.—IN THE MATTER OF LUCHMUN PERSHAD GORGO, 18 W. R. 22. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. June 24, 1872.]

THE duty imposed by Act X. of 1872, s 90, upon village-headman, &c., of giving information as to the occurrence of any sudden or unnatural death, is intended to apply only when such occurrence takes place at or near the village of which he is headman, or in which he owns or occupies land, &c. Residence in a dwelling-house belonging to another is not occupation of land within the meaning of the section. The liability of the resident agent of an owner, under the section, arises when the owner is not resident, and has no personal knowledge of the fact required to be reported: where the owner has such knowledge, the liability attaches to him.—IN THE MATTER OF MUDHOOSOODUN CHUCKERBUTTY, 23 W. R. 60. [Jackson and McDonell JJ. April 8, 1875.]

THE provisions of s. 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not be put in force against one who has omitted to give information to the police of an offence having been committed in cases where the police have actually obtained such information from other sources.—IN THE MATTER OF SASHI BHUSAN CHUCKRABUTTY, EMPRESS v. SASHI BHUSAN CHUCKRABUTTY, I. L. R. 4 Cal 623. [Ainslie and Broughton, JJ. Dec. 17, 1878.] Relied on in Queen-Empress v. Gopal Singh, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 316, infra.

K WAS convicted under s. 176 of the Penal Code of having intentionally omitted to inform the police of the presence of V., a proclaimed offender, at a certain village. It was presumed by the Court that V was a proclaimed offender, because it was proved that the property of V had been attached under the provisions of s. 88 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882. Held that the prosecutor was bound to prove the fact of proclamation. A person legally bound to give information to the police of the presence of a proclaimed offender at a certain place ought not to be prosecuted for omitting to give such information where the police are already aware of the fact.—In re PANDYA, I. L. R., 7 Mad 436. [Brandt, J. April 2, 1884.]

HELD (per Prinsep and Macpherson, JJ.).—It is not necessary, in order to support a conviction under s. 176 of the Penal Code against a person falling within the provisions of s. 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code for not giving information of an occurrence falling under cl. (d) of that section, to show that the death actually occurred on his land, when the circumstances disclosed show that a body has been found under circumstances denoting that the death was sudden, unnatural, or suspicious, the finding of the body being a fact from which a Court might reasonably infer, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the death took place there. Held (per Mitter, J.).—It is necessary, to secure a conviction in the latter case, to prove that the death took place or occurred in the village or on the land of the accused, and the finding of a body there does not of itself afford that proof.—MATUKI MISSRR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 11 Cal. 619. [Mitter, Macpherson, and Prinsep, JJ. May 13, 1885.]

UNDER s. 45 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, every owner or occupier of land is bound to report the occurrence therein of any sudden death. The head of a Nayar family was convicted and fined, under s. 176 of the Penal Code, for not reporting a sudden death in the family-house. Held (following former decisions of the Court) that the conviction was illegal, because s. 45 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to the owner of a house.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ACHUTHA, I. L. R., 12 Mad. 92. [Collins, C.J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J. Oct. 22, 1888.]

WHERE one of several persons bound to give information to the police under s. 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code gave such information as to the commission of a murder, in consequence of which a police-officer arrived in the village shortly after the occurrence, held that the fact that other persons who might possibly also be bound to give that information had omitted to do so was no ground for their prosecution and conviction of an offence under s. 176 of the Penal Code. In the Matter of the Petition of Sashi Bhusan Chuckrabutty (I. L. R., 4 Cal. 623) relied on.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GOPAL SINGH, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 316. [Pigot and Rampini, JJ. Aug. 24, 1892.]

(a.) A, a landholder, knowing of the commission of a murder within the limits of his estate, wilfully misinforms the Magistrate of the district that the death has occurred by accident in consequence of the bite of a snake. A is guilty of the offence defined in this section.

(b.) A, a village-watchman, knowing that a considerable body of strangers has passed through his village in order to commit a dacoity in the house of Z, a wealthy merchant residing in a neighbouring place, and being bound, under cl. 5, s. 7, Reg. III., 1821,‡ of the Bengal Code, to give early and punctual information of the above fact to the officer of the nearest police-station, wilfully misinforms the police-officer that a body of suspicious characters passed through the village with a view to commit dacoity in a certain distant place in a different direction. Here A is guilty of the offence defined in the latter part of this section.

* In s. 177, the word offence has the same meaning when the thing punishable under the special or local law as defined in ss. 41 and 42 is punishable under such law with imprisonment for a term of six months or upwards, whether with or without fine.—See s. 40, supra.

As to authority for instituting prosecutions under s 177, see the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), s. 195 (1) (a)

† As to meaning of "offence" and "offender," see s. 177, explanation, infra.

‡ Ben. Reg. III. of 1821 has been repealed by Act XVII. of 1862. See now s. 45 of the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898).

*Explanation.—In section 176 and in this section the word "offence" includes any act committed at any place out of British India, which, if committed in British India, would be punishable under any of the following sections, namely, 302, 304, 382, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 402, 435, 436, 449, 450, 457, 458, 459, and 460; and the word "offender" includes any person who is alleged to have been guilty of any such act.

IN this section the word "offence" has the same meaning when the thing punishable under the special or local law is punishable under such law with imprisonment for a term of six months or upwards, whether with or without fine.—S. 40, Penal Code.

To sustain a conviction under s. 177, it is not necessary to prove a fraudulent intention. It is quite sufficient if it is shown (1) that the accused was legally bound to furnish information, and (2) that he furnished as true what he either knew or believed to be false.—Weir, pp. 48-50.

VILLAGE-OFFICERS in Madras are not legally bound to furnish information on every matter connected with their duties.—Weir, p. 49.

ONE Yesu gave accused four annas to purchase a stamp for him (Yesu). The accused, on being asked his name by the stamp-collector, said, "Yesu," instead of giving his own name. Held that this amounted to the offence of giving false information under s. 177, and not to the offence of cheating by personation.—REG. v. RAGHOJI BIN KANOJI, 3 Bom. H. C. R. 42. [Couch, C.J., and Newton, J. Mar. 6, 1867.]

S. 177 of the Penal Code does not apply to the case of any person who is examined by a police-officer making a false statement, but to cases where, by law, landholders or village-watchmen are bound to give information, and to other analogous cases of the same description.—QUEEN v. LUCKHEE SINGH, 12 W. R. 23 [Jackson and Mitter, JJ. July 5, 1869.]

AN omission to give information that a crime has been committed does not, under s. 107 of the Penal Code, amount to abetment, unless such omission involves a breach of a legal obligation. A private individual is not bound by any law to give information of any offence which he has seen committed.—QUEEN v. KHADIM SHEIKH, 4 B. L. R. A. Cr. 7. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov. 23, 1869.] But see s. 44 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898).

CERTAIN vaccinators were charged with furnishing false returns to their official superior. The Magistrate found as a fact that the returns furnished were false, but acquitted the defendants on the ground that they were not "legally bound" to furnish information within the meaning of s. 177 of the Penal Code. Held that s. 177 embraces every case in which a subordinate may seek to impose false information upon his superior. The defendants in the present case were public servants, and part of the duties which they undertook was to make true returns to their official superior. To make false returns was therefore an offence.—PRO., Dec. 21, 1871, 6 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 48.

UNDER Act V. of 1861, a police-officer is bound to communicate information to his superior officer regarding the commission of a riot affecting the public peace, and to make an entry thereof in the diary which he is required by s. 44 of that Act to keep, and the omission to give such information brings him within the purview of s. 177 of the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF SYED FUTTEH MAHOMED, 21 W. R. 30. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 17, 1874.]

TO make a false entry in a diary kept by a Government servant, and sent to his official superior in pursuance of a departmental order, is an offence within the meaning of s. 177 of the Penal Code.—VIRASAMI MUDALI v. REG., I. L. R., 4 Mad. 144. [Kindersley and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. Sept. 9, 1881.]

A PERSON attempted to obtain his recruitment in the police of a district by giving certain information which he knew to be false to the District Superintendent of Police. Held that such person had not thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 177 or s. 188 of the Penal Code, or the offence of attempting to "cheat," within the meaning of s. 415 of that Code.—EMPRESS v. DWARKA PRASAD, I. L. R., 6 All. 97. [Tyrrell, J. Sep. 25, 1883.]

THE information which, under the second branch of s. 177 of the Penal Code, a person is legally bound to give "for the purpose of preventing the commission of the offence," relates not to the commission of offences generally, but to the commission of some particular offence. P, a constable, was employed to make his rounds by night, and call at the houses of the notorious bad characters on his beat who were under police-supervision, and to ascertain whether they were indoors or not. On one occasion, having made his rounds, he falsely stated to his superior officer, as to some of these people, that they had been inside their houses, when, as a matter of fact, they had not. Upon these facts the Deputy Magistrate was of opinion that "the information which the accused was required to give, and which he falsely furnished, was information required for the purpose of preventing the commission of an offence, and therefore the offence made out fell under the second part of s. 177 of the Penal Code." He accordingly sentenced the accused to be rigorously imprisoned for six months. On appeal the Sessions Judge declined to interfere. An application was, therefore, made to the High Court on behalf of the accused and a rule obtained. The judgment of the Court (Wilson and Tottenham, JJ.) was as follows: Wilson, J.—The accused in this case was charged and convicted under s. 177 of the Penal Code. This section contains two branches. The first branch of it runs thus: "Whoever, being legally bound to furnish information on any subject to any public servant, as such, furnishes, as true, information on the subject which he knows or has reason to believe to be false, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both." This deals with the simple case of a person who, being bound to furnish true information to a public servant, furnishes false information to him, and, under this part of the section, the maximum punishment is six months' simple imprisonment with or without fine. The second branch of the section is expressed thus: "Or if the information which he is legally bound to give respects the commission of an offence, or is required for the purpose of preventing the commission of an offence, or in order to the apprehension of an offender, with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both." The facts found against the accused were these. He was a constable, and was employed on what is described as round-duties—that is to say, it was his duty to make his rounds by night, and to call at the houses of the notorious bad characters on his beat who were under police-supervision, and to ascertain whether they were indoors or not. And on one occasion, having made his rounds, he falsely stated, as to some of these people, that they had been inside their houses, when, as a matter of fact, they had not. Now, that was information which he was bound to furnish to a public servant, that is to say, to his superiors, and it is found that he wilfully made a false statement; therefore his offence comes under the first part of the section. But he has been convicted under the second part of it on the ground that the information was required for the purpose of preventing the commission of an offence. I think that must mean, not for the purpose of preventing the commission of offences generally, or rendering the commission of them more difficult, but for the purpose of preventing the commission of some particular offence. That being so, the case does not come within the second part of that section. It follows, therefore, that the sentence which was passed was one which ought not to have been passed. The prisoner was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment, whereas the maximum punishment to which he could have been sentenced was six months' simple imprisonment. It appears that he has already undergone three months' rigorous imprisonment, which he ought not to have been subjected to, and therefore the justice of the case requires that the three months' rigorous imprisonment which he has undergone should be taken as equivalent to the term of simple imprisonment, to which alone he could have been legally sentenced. He will, therefore, now be released from imprisonment, the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment which was passed upon him, being reduced to one of simple imprisonment from the date of the conviction to the present date. — IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF PANATULLA. PANATULLA v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 15 Cal. 386. [Wilson and Tottenham, JJ. Dec. 21, 1887.]

A MAGISTRATE issued processes for the attendance of the accused on the complaint of the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector for having given false information within the terms of s. 177 of the Penal Code and s. 10 of the Land Acquisition Act in certain written statements that they had made to the Collector. The complaint was that the written statements were false. The documents, however, contained more than one statement of fact. Neither in the complaint made by the Deputy Collector nor in his examination by the Magistrate, was any reference made to any particular statement made by either of the accused as being a false statement, nor had the Deputy Collector put in the written statements, upon which he desired to proceed either with his written complaint or at the time of his examination by the Magistrate. Held that the complaint was bad and the case should not be allowed to proceed in its present form. The Magistrate was bound to require from the complainant the written statements on which the proceedings were founded, and also to ascertain from him the particular statement or statements on which the accusation was made.—DURGA DAS RAKHIT v. UMESH CHANDRA SEN, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 985. [Prinsep and Handley, JJ. June 15, 1900.]

Under s. 12 of the Oaths Act (X. of 1873), if the party or witness refuses to make the oath or solemn affirmation referred to in s. 8 of the said Act, he shall not be compelled to make it, but the Court shall record, as part of the proceedings, the nature of the oath or affirmation proposed, the facts that he was asked whether he would make it, and that he refused it, together with any reason which he may assign for his refusal.

Held that a police-officer at a police-station, who, being as such officer bound to enter all reports brought to him of cognizable or non-cognizable offences in the station-diary, refused to enter a report made to him concerning the commission of an offence, and entered instead in the diary a totally different and false report as that which was made to him, had thereby committed the offence punishable under s. 177 of the Penal Code. — QUEEN-EMPRESS v. A COMPLAINT was filed by Ganesh Narayan Sathe, in the Court of the District Magistrate of Poona, against Balkrishna Govind Sindekar and five other mamlatdars, charging them with purchasing judicial offices through the instrumentality of one Hanmantrao Jaghirdar, who was alleged to have had influence with Mr. A. T. Crawford, Revenue Commissioner, C. D. It was held that, as a general rule, any person having knowledge of the commission of an offence may set the law in motion by a complaint, even though he is not personally interested or affected by the offence. The exceptions to this rule, of which ss. 195 and 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code are examples, are exceptions created by statute. There is nothing in the Code showing an intention to confine prosecutions to the persons directly injured. Where the offence charged is a "warrant" and not a "summons" case, a Magistrate ought to proceed with the inquiry or trial in spite of the withdrawal of the complainant, if he finds the elements of an offence on the facts set forth in the complaint. S. 248 of the Code of Criminal Procedure applies only to a "summons" case. Semble.—A complainant is not a witness punishable for refusal to answer under s. 485 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, or under s. 179 of the Penal Code.—In re GANESH NARAYAN SATHE, I. S. 181 applies to cases in which the proceedings are not of a judicial character, such as proceedings before a Commissioner of Income-tax. A person is not legally bound to state the truth where the officer who administers the oath is trying a case wholly beyond his jurisdiction. — In re ANDY CHETTY, 2 Mad. H. C. R. 438 [Frere and Innes, JJ. Aug. 12, 1865.]

S. 181 of the Penal Code appears to refer to matters which do not come under the definition of judicial proceedings; and, although the wording of the section, is apparently large enough to admit false statements of every description, its action is restricted as regards those made under certain circumstances by the succeeding section 193. Were it not so, the Magistrate of a District acting under s. 181 might try all cases of perjury himself instead of committing them, as he is, no doubt, bound to do, to the Sessions.—QUEEN v. BULORAM, 7 W. R. (104) 68. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. May 20, 1867.]

THE making of a false return of service of summons is an offence punishable, not under s. 181, but under s. 193, of the Penal Code, and is cognizable by the Court of Session alone.—QUEEN v. SHAMA CHURN ROY, 8 W. R. 27. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. June 25, 1867.] But see 4 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 18. infra.

A CONVICTION under s. 181, Penal Code, is good, though the offence falls within s. 193. But a sentence under s. 181, which awards no term of imprisonment, is illegal. —PRO., Nov. 14, 1868, 4 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 18. But see Queen v. Shama Churn Roy, 8 W. R. 27, supra.

WHERE a false statement is made in a stage of a judicial proceeding before a Magistrate, he ought not to convict under s. 181, but commit to the Sessions under s. 193. A conviction under s. 181 for making a false statement in a stage of a judicial proceeding was held to be illegal.—QUEEN v. NUSSEROODDEEN SHAZWAL, 11 W. R. 24. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. Mar. 25, 1869.]

WHEN an offence under s. 193 of the Penal Code is established, a conviction under s. 181 is illegal. When the accused made, on solemn affirmation, a statement before an Income-tax Commissioner, which statement the accused knew, or had reason to believe, to be incorrect, it was held that such statement amounted to the offence of giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding under s. 193 of the Penal Code, and was, therefore, not cognizable by a Full-power Magistrate, as it could not be treated as constituting an offence triable under s. 181 of the Penal Code (making a false statement to a public servant).—REG. v. DAYALJI ENDARJI, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 21. [Lloyd and Kemball, JJ. April 25, 1871.]

S. 51, ch. 6 of Act I. of 1879, enacts that, "subject to such rules as may be made by the Governor-General in Council as to the evidence which the Collector may require, allowance shall be made by the Collector for impressed stamps spoiled in the cases hereinafter mentioned," &c. According to a rule made with reference to that section, "the Collector may require every person claiming a refund under ch. 6 of the said Act, or his duly authorized agent, to make an oral deposition on oath," &c. Held, therefore, that the Collector himself is the officer, and no other, to whom power is given by law to make inquiries into applications for allowances for spoiled stamps, to take evidence on oath in reference thereto, and to grant or refuse such applications, and he cannot delegate his authority in the matter. Held, therefore, where a person had applied for a refund under ch. 6 of Act I. of 1879, and the Collector made over the application for inquiry to a Deputy Collector, that the Deputy Collector was not entitled to put the witnesses produced by the applicant on their oaths, and consequently, in reference to the statements of such witnesses, no charge under s. 181 or s. 193 of the Penal Code was sustainable.—EMPRESS v. NIAZ ALI, I. L. R., 5 All. 17. [Stuart, C.J., and Straight, J. July 24, 1882.]

WHERE three persons, of whom one was a pleader, were tried together and convicted under s. 181 of the Penal Code of having made false statements on solemn affirmation about the same matter in the course of an inquiry into the conduct of the pleader under the provisions of the Legal Practitioners Act, held that the conviction of the pleader was bad, as his statement was improperly taken from him on solemn affirmation. Held also that the trial of the three prisoners together was a grave error of procedure vitiating the trial. Held further that an inquiry under the Legal Practitioners Act being a judicial proceeding, false statements on solemn affirmation made by the witnesses therein should be charged and tried separately under s. 193 of the Penal Code.—SUBBA v. QUEEN, I. L. R., 6 Mad. 252. [Innes and Kernan, JJ. Feb. 25, 1883.]

IN a petition of appeal from a conviction, the appellant falsely stated that the convicting Magistrate declined to summon his witnesses. The Magistrate to whom the appeal was preferred called upon the appellant to verify the allegations in the petition of appeal on solemn affirmation, and he did so. Held that the appellant had not committed an offence under s. 181 or 182 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SUBBAYYA, I. L. R., 12 Mad 451. [Collins, C.J., and Parker, J. July 11, 17, 1889.]

Held that a person seeking by an application in revision to get rid of a conviction standing against him is incapable of tendering his own affidavit in support of such application, and consequently that, if he did not tender such an affidavit, he could not be prosecuted for false statements which might be contained therein. *Queen-Empress v. WHERE a person gives false information under the Madras Salt Act, he renders himself liable to a charge under s. 182 of the Penal Code.—Mad. Act I. of 1882, s. 24.

Ss. 182 and 211 of the Penal Code distinguished. The latter has been held to apply to a case of false charge in which the accused in the present case had appeared before the police, and charged the new complainant with having caused the death of the accused's child by poisoning.—RAFFEE MAHOMED v. ABBAS KHAN, 8 W. R. 67. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. Sept. 3, 1867.]

A PERSON against whom information has been falsely given with a view to his injury has a right to bring a civil action for damages with or without the consent of the public servant against whom the offence was committed, but he cannot bring a criminal charge under s. 182 or any other section of ch. 10 of the Penal Code without the permission of such public servant, the law looking upon the conduct of the person who gives the false information as an offence, not against the individual charged, but against the public servant to whom the false information was given. To constitute an offence under s. 182, Penal Code, the information given must be information which the informer knew or believed to be false, and it must be proved that he gave it with such knowledge. Thus, where A, out of malice to B, gives C, a public servant, false information intended to injure B, B cannot prosecute A criminally under s. 182 without C's consent. — MOULVY ABDOOL LUTEEF, 9 W. R. 31; 5 Wym. 37. [Loch and Hobhouse, JJ. Mar. 10, 1868.] See Queen v. Hurree Ram, 3 N.-W. P. 194, infra.

WHERE a Deputy Magistrate instituted proceedings against a complainant and his witnesses for preferring a false charge of theft before him, it was held that he could not merely rely on the decision in the theft-case, but was bound to prove the falsity of the complaint of theft in the presence of the accused.—QUEEN v. RAM DASS BOISTUB, 11 W. R. 35. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. April 6, 1869.]

STATEMENTS made by a prisoner for the purposes of his defence cannot be held to be "information given to a public servant" within the meaning of s. 182 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. DARIA KHAN, 2 N.-W. P. 128. [Turner, Offg. C.J., and Spankie, J. April 2, 1870.]

IN a case in which a false charge was brought, a Magistrate gave the accused, A, permission under s. 195, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, to prosecute the complainant, B, of an offence under s. 211, Penal Code. The Magistrate tried the complaint of A as a complaint under s. 211, but he subsequently framed a charge against B under s. 182, Penal Code, and punished him under that section. Held, with reference to s. 195, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, that the offences under ss. 182 and 211, Penal Code, being offences under ch. 14 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, the Magistrate was wrong in framing the charge under s. 182 without obtaining the previous sanction of the Criminal Court which heard the previous complaint of B.—RAJ KUMAR v. KIRTI OJHA, 13 W. R. 67; 7 B. L. R. 29. [Loch and Hobhouse, JJ. April 30, 1870.]

UNDER the above section the gist of the offence consists in the offender's intention in giving the false information. The offence is the contempt of the lawful authority of the public servant by moving him to use his authority wrongfully. It is against the public servant that it is committed, and it is complete directly the false information is given irrespectively of the results which may actually follow the action that may be taken upon it. The specific injury that may result to the person in respect of whom the information is given is a distinct matter. And so it was held that no ground for a complaint of giving false information to a public servant under this section exists on the part of any one but the public servant against whom the offence was committed.—QUEEN v. HURREE RAM, 3 N.-W. P. 194. [Turnbull, J. July 29, 1871.] See In re Moulvy Abdool Luteef, 9 W. R. 31, supra.

WHERE a person was accused under s. 182 of the Penal Code with having given false information to a head-constable, it was held that the provisions of s. 168 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had been sufficiently complied with, inasmuch as the Lower Appellate Court stated in its judgment that "the case had been forwarded under s. 182 by the officer in charge of the District Superintendent's office," the District Superintendent being the official superior of the head-constable.—QUEEN v. GRISH CHUNDER SIRCAR, 19 W. R. 33. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. Feb. 17, 1873.] Follows Queen v. Ramgolam Singh, 11 W. R. 22. But see the requirements of the corresponding section of the present law (s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882), infra.

A DEPUTY MAGISTRATE has no power to question an order made by his superior, sanctioning a prosecution under ss. 182 and 211 of the Penal Code. Whether such sanction has been rightly or wrongly given is a question for the accused to raise before a competent Court.—EMPRESS v. IRAD ALLY, I. L. R., 4 Cal. 869; 4 C. L. R. 413. [Ainslie and Broughton, JJ. April 3, 1879.

AN offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code includes an offence under s. 182; it is therefore open to a Magistrate to proceed under either section, although, in cases of a more serious nature, it may be that the proper course is to proceed under s. 211.—BHOKTERAM v. HEERA KOLITA, I. L. R., 5 Cal. 184. [Ainslie and Broughton, JJ. April 26, 1879.

WHERE a person has instituted a charge found to be false by the police, a Magistrate except under exceptional circumstances, is not justified, merely on a perusal of a police-report, which has found a charge made to be false, in prosecuting the person by whom such charge was preferred, summarily under s. 182 of the Penal Code, but should proceed under s. 211. When a charge is pronounced false by the police, no proceedings should be taken by a Magistrate suo motu, until a reasonable interval has shown that the complainant accepts the results of the investigation.—IN THE MATTER OF RUSSICK LALL MULLICK, 7 C. L. R. 382. [Garth, C.J., and Maclean, J. Nov. 17, 1880.

S. 182 does not apply where the public servant misinformed is only competent to pass (and passes on) the information, and the power to be exercised by him cannot tend to any direct or immediate prejudice of the person against whom the information is levelled.—Queen v. Periannan and Queen v. Naraina, I. L. R., 4 Mad. 241. The following is a full report of these two cases: "The facts in these cases, which were referred by the District Magistrate of Salem for the orders of the High Court, on the ground that the proceedings therein were illegal, are sufficiently set out, for the purpose of this report, in the judgment of the Court (Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ.) Judgment: The material facts in this case are as follow: Complaint was made to the Village-Magistrate that certain persons were beaten, and that jewels, exceeding Rs. 10 in value, were taken from the persons beaten. The Village-Magistrate reported the matter at the police-station, and the station-officer, after inquiry, referred the cases as false to the Sub-Magistrate of Vaniyambadi. In doing so he asked for sanction to prosecute the complainants under s. 182 (giving false information to a public servant with intent to cause him to use his lawful power to the injury of another person). The Sub-Magistrate accorded sanction, and subsequently himself tried, convicted, and punished the accused for an offence under s 182. The District Magistrate submits that the proceedings are illegal, on the grounds (1) that the Village-Magistrate to whom the information was given had no power in the case, (2) that the Sub-Magistrate had no power to give sanction, as he was not the public servant to whom the information was given. We are unable to concur in the opinion of the District Magistrate. Two questions appear to us to arise on the case, 1st, is s. 182 applicable to the circumstances? and, 2nd, was anything further required than what was done to render the prosecution legal? We think the words 'to use his lawful power' in s. 182 refer to some power to be exercised by the officer misinformed, which shall tend to some direct and immediate prejudice of the person against whom the information is levelled. They do not, we think, apply to such prejudice as might eventually arise in consequence of certain harmless intermediate steps to be taken by the misinformed officer, such as were taken in the present case, where all that the misinformed officer did or could do was to pass on the information. As to the other question, we think all was done that was necessary. The public servant himself complained, which is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the section (467, Criminal Procedure Code, corresponding with s. 195, Act X. of 1882); and if it were not so, the Village-Magistrate may be said to be subordinate to the Second-class Magistrate, and the sanction of the Second-class Magistrate would be sufficient. We shall not therefore interfere."—QUEEN v. PERIANNAN and QUEEN v. NARAINA, I. L. R., 4 Mad. 241. [Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. Nov. 14, 18, 1881.]

M FALSELY informed the Collector of a district that certain zemindars had usurped possession of certain land belonging to Government, with the intent "to give trouble to such zemindars, and waste the time of the public authorities." Held that, inasmuch as such information was no more than an expression of a private person's belief, that the Collector might, if he chose, sustain a civil suit with success against such zemindars, and as, had the Collector agreed with the informant, the result would not have been that he would have used his lawful power as a Collector or as a Magistrate to the injury or annoyance of such zemindars, or that he would have done anything he ought not to have done, M had not committed an offence under s. 182 of the Penal Code.—EMPRESS v. MADHO, I. L. R., 4 All. 498. [Tyrrell, J. June 21, 1882.]

K MADE a report at a police-station, accusing R of a certain offence. The police having reported to the Magistrate having jurisdiction in the matter that, in their opinion, the offence was not established, the Magistrate ordered the case to be "shelved." K then preferred a complaint to the Magistrate, again accusing R of the offence. The Magistrate rejected the complaint with reference to the police-report. Subsequently R, with the sanction of the police-authorities, instituted criminal proceedings against K, under s. 182 of the Penal Code, in respect of the report which he had made at the police-station, and K was convicted under that section. Held that, before proceeding against K, the Magistrate should have fully investigated and sifted his complaint for himself, and should not have abrogated the functions imposed on him by law because the police had reported against the entertainment of the case. The views expressed in Govt. v. Karimdad (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 496), concurred in. Held, also, that K's conviction under s. 182 of the Penal Code was illegal, as the Magistrate had no power to entertain a complaint under that section at the instance of R, the application of s. 182 and the institution of prosecutions under it being limited to the public servant against whom the offence has been committed, or to his official superior as mentioned in s. 467 of Act X. of 1872 (or s. 195 of Act X. of 1882), and it not being intended that those provisions should be enforced at the instance of private persons. Moreover, if K's complaint was false, his offence was against R, and not against the public servant to whom the complaint was made, and fell within s. 211 of the Penal Code. Ordered that the complaint made by K should be investigated.—EMPRESS v. RADHA KISHAN, I. L. R., 5 All. 36. [Straight, J. July 5, 1882.] Overruled by Empress v. Jugal Kishore, I. L. R., 8 All. 382, infra. Dissented from in Poonit Singh v. Madho Bhot, I. L. R., 13 Cal. 270, infra.

WHERE a person specifically complains that another man has committed an offence, and does so falsely with the object of causing injury to that person, he is guilty of making a false charge of an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and not under s. 182.—EMPRESS v. ARJUN, I. L. R., 7 Bom. 184. [West and Pinhey, JJ. Nov. 2, 1882.]

J COMPLAINED to the police that she had been raped by R. The police having reported the charge to be false, criminal proceedings were instituted against her under s. 182 of the Penal Code. In the meantime, J made a complaint in Court, again charging R with rape. This complaint was not disposed of, but the proceedings against her, under s. 182 of the Penal Code, were continued, and she was eventually convicted under that section. Held (setting aside the conviction, and directing that J's complaint should be disposed of) that such complaint should have been disposed of before proceedings were taken against her under s. 182.—EMPRESS v. JUMNI, I. L. R., 5 All. 387. [Oldfield, J. Mar. 9, 1883.]

THE accused was charged, in the alternative, by the trying Magistrate as follows: 'I, W. W. Drew, Magistrate, first class, hereby charge you, Ramji Sajabarao, as follows: 'That you, on or about the 13th day of October 1882, at Nandarpada, stated that you had seen Vishnu Vaman and Mahadu Lakshman carrying teakwood from Gohe Forest to Narayan Ramchandra, range-forest-officer, and on 14th February 1885 you stated on oath before the First-class Magistrate at Pen, at the trial of these persons, that you did not see where they had brought the wood from, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 182 or s. 193 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860), and within my cognizance; and I hereby direct that you, Ramji Sajabarao, be tried by the said Court on the same charge.'" At the trial the accused asserted the truth of the former of these two statements, and denied having made the other. The Magistrate was unable to find which of them was false, and convicted the accused, in the alternative, either under s. 182 or s. 193 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860). Held that the charge was bad in law, being an alternative charge in a form forbidden by s. 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), which directs that, for every distinct offence of which any person is charged, there shall be a separate charge. Nor could the accused be tried upon a charge framed in the alternative as in the form given in Sch. V.-XXVIII. (4) of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882). For, upon the facts alleged, there was no way of charging him with one distinct offence on the ground of self-contradiction. He could not successfully be charged, under s. 193 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860), on contradictory statements, because he only made one deposition in which there were no discrepancies; and, similarly, he could not be charged under s 182 of the Penal Code, for he only once gave information to a public servant. Held, also, that, having regard to ss. 225, 232, and 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), the accused, convicted upon such a charge, must be held to have been misled in his defence, and his conviction and sentence reversed. In charges founded upon supposed contradictory statements, every presumption in favour of the possible reconciliation of the statements must be made. Under s. 172 of the Forest Act (VII. of 1878), a forest-officer is a public servant within the meaning of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860). Any information given to him with the intent mentioned in s. 182 of the Penal Code is punishable under that section, whether that information is volunteered by the informant, or is given in answer to questions put to him by that officer.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMJI SAJABARAO, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 124. Nanabhai Haridas and Wedderburn, JJ. Sep 7, 1885.

A PROSECUTION under s. 182 of the Penal Code may be instituted by a private person, provided that he first obtains the sanction of the public officer to whom the false information was given, or of his official superior. Queen v. Radha Kishan (I. L. R., 5 All. 30) overruled. Where a specific false charge is made, the proper section for proceedings to be adopted under is s. 211 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. JUGAL KISHORE, I. L. R., 8 All. 382. [Straight, Offg. C.J. May 28, 1886.]

AN information was given to a police-officer in the course of which two persons were named in whose houses stolen property belonging to a certain individual would be discovered. On complaint the information was found to be false, and the accused was convicted and punished for two offences under s. 182 as affecting two different persons. Held that, although the information related to two different persons, the accused could be charged with having made only one false statement, and punished for one offence under s. 182. S. 195, Criminal Procedure Code, clearly shows that a complaint directly made by a public servant mentioned therein is quite as sufficient as his sanction. Empress of India v. Radha Kishan (I. L. R., 5 All. 36) dissented from.—POONIT SINGH v. MADHO BHOT, I. L. R., 13 Cal. 270. [Mitter and Grant, JJ. July 22, 1886.]

S. 182 of the Penal Code must be read as an entire section, and, when so read, it applies to those cases in which the police are induced, upon information supplied to them, to do or omit to do something which might affect some third person, and which they would not have done had they known the truth of the matter laid before them. The facts of the case appear in the following judgment, which is reproduced in full: "Petheram, C.J.—We think that this rule must be made absolute to set aside the conviction. The facts of the case are that a person went on one occasion and informed the police that he had been robbed in the street of a shawl, but in the statement which he made to the police he did not indicate any particular person, or describe any person in such a way as by any possibility could be supposed to implicate any one as the person who committed the robbery. All he said was that he was robbed by a person whom he did not see. So that in the statement that he made he did not say anything to cast suspicion on any one in particular. Under these circumstances, there was no offence within the meaning of s. 182 of the Penal Code. That section provides that, if any person gives any information to a public servant with the intention of inducing him to put his powers in force to the injury or annoyance of any person, or to do or omit anything which such public servant would not have done or omitted to do if the true state of facts respecting which such information was given had been known to him, he shall be punished in a certain way there specified. As it seems to us, that section must be read as a whole, and, taken as a whole, we think it applies to those cases in which the police are induced, upon the information supplied to them, to do or omit to do something which might affect some third person, and which they would not have done if they had known the true state of things. Upon the information which was given to these police-constables, all that they could be justified in doing was to examine the informant as to what had happened to him, and then make such inquiries as the result of that examination might render desirable; but they would have no right to interfere with any one, or search any one's house' because there were no circumstances brought to their knowledge by the information which this man gave which entitled them to suppose that any particular individual was guilty of any offence. Under the circumstances, the most that the statement of the accused amounts to is that it was untrue, and was made for the purpose of hoaxing the police. No doubt, that is a very wrong thing for any man to do. In the first place, it is wrong to tell lies, and in the second place, it is extremely wrong to take up the time of Government servants by putting them to useless inquiries under circumstances of this kind; but I do not think myself that such conduct comes within the meaning of this section, or amounts to anything more than a hoax, for which no punishment is provided by the Code. Under these circumstances, we cannot make a crime when it is not made one by the Code, or provide a punishment for it. The rule will therefore be made absolute to set aside the conviction; the prisoner will be discharged.—IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF GOLAM AHMED KAZI, I. L. R, 14 Cal. 314. Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J. Feb. 19, 1887. [The new section is broad enough to cover the above case.—ED.] Dissented from in Queen-Empress v. Budh Sen, I. L. R., 13 All. 351, infra.

UNDER s. 182 of the Penal Code the giving of false information to a public servant is penal, when either of two consequences is intended to be caused, or is known to be likely to be caused, by the false information, the first being the causing the public servant "to use the lawful power of such public servant to the injury or annoyance of any person;" the second being the causing the public servant "to do or omit anything which such public servant ought not to do or omit, if the true state of facts respecting which such information is given were known to him." To constitute an offence under the latter part of the section, it is not necessary to show that the act done would be to the injury or annoyance of any third person. A personated B at an examination, called the Vernacular Sixth Standard Examination. A passed the examination, and obtained a certificate from the educational authorities in B's name. B thereupon applied to the Assistant Collector to have his name entered in the list of candidates for service in the Revenue Department. He attached to this application the certificate issued in his name, as it was a rule of Government that only those who had passed the Sixth Standard Examination were eligible for employment in the Revenue Department. On receipt of this application the Assistant Collector ordered B's name to be entered on the list of candidates. Held that B was guilty of the offence of giving false information to a public servant within the meaning of the latter part of s. 182 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GANESH KHANDERAO AND GANESH DAULAT, I. L. R., 13 Bom. 506. [Jardine and Candy, JJ. Jan. 29, 1889.]

WHEN Subordinate Courts grant sanction to prosecute under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is incumbent on them so to frame the proceedings before them as to enable the High Court to satisfy itself from the record, whether the application for sanction has been properly granted or not. A Magistrate, in disposing of a charge of theft, delivered the following judgment: "The charge of theft of doors and windows is not proved at all against the accused. They are acquitted." There was no further record of the proceedings Immediately on the judgment being delivered, the pleader appearing for the accused applied for sanction to prosecute the complainant under ss. 182 and 211 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate refused to hear the application then, on the ground that it was not the proper time fixed by him to hear applications. The attorney for the complainant, who had expressed his willingness to have the application heard and disposed of there and then, intimated that he was prepared to show cause why sanction should not be granted, and asked that notice of any future application might be given to the complainant. The accused renewed the application the following day without notice to, and in the absence of, the complainant or his attorney, and the Magistrate granted the sanction asked for. On an application to the High Court to revoke the sanction, held that the Magistrate did not exercise a proper discretion under the circumstances in neglecting to give the complainant notice of the application, and an opportunity of being heard. Held, further, that the mere fact of the charge laid by the complainant not having been proved, was not in itself sufficient ground for granting sanction to prosecute him under ss. 182 and 211 of the Penal Code, and as, beyond the judgment of the Magistrate, there was nothing on the record to show that there were sufficient grounds for granting the sanction, it should be revoked.—KEDAR NATH DAS v. MOHESH CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 661. [Prinsep and Hill, JJ. May 13, 1889.]

IN a petition of appeal from a conviction, the appellant falsely stated that the convicting Magistrate declined to summon his witnesses. The Magistrate to whom the appeal was preferred called upon the appellant to verify the allegations in the petition of appeal on solemn affirmation, and he did so. Held that the appellant had not committed an offence under s. 181 or 182 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SUBBAYYA, I. L. R., 12 Mad. 451. [Collins, C.J., and Parker, J. July 11, 17, 1889.]

IN order to constitute the offence defined in s. 182 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that the public servant to whom false information is given should be induced to do anything, or to omit to do anything, in consequence of such information. The gist of the offence is not what action may or may not be taken by the public servant to whom false information is given; but the intention or knowledge (to be inferred from his conduct) of the person supplying such information. In the Matter of Golam Ahmed Kazi (I. L. R., 14 Cal. 314) dissented from.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BUDH SEN, I. L. R., 13 All. 351. [Edge, C.J., and Straight, J. April 4, 1891.]

WHERE a Deputy Commissioner issued a sanction to prosecute the accused upon an express application made on behalf of a certain person against whom a charge of torture had been made, and which he found, for reasons stated in his judgment, to be false, held taking the order to have been one made under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that it was a proper sanction, inasmuch as it was given to a contemplated prosecution by a definite person. Semble, on the supposition that the order was one under s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that it was not necessary for the validity of an order under that section that there should be any evidence on the record contradicting the case which was thought to be false, or that there should be a preliminary inquiry. Although it may sometimes well be that a preliminary inquiry ought to be held, the adoption of a rigid rule to that effect is neither rendered imperative by the law, nor is it desirable. In the Matter of Mutty Lall Ghose (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 308), The Queen v. Baijoo Lall (I. L. R., 1 Cal. 450), and Khepu Nath Sikdar v. Girish Chunder Mukerjee (I. L. R., 16 Cal. 370), referred to and distinguished.—BAPERAM SURMA v. GOURI NATH DUTT, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 474. [Pigot and Hill, JJ. Nov. 2, 1892.]

THE proceeding under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, by which an order granting or refusing to grant sanction to prosecute may be set aside, is a proceeding in revision, and not by way of appeal.—MEHDI HASAN v. TOTA RAM, I. L. R., 15 All. 61. [Knox, J. Nov. 19, 1892.]

A HEAD ASSISTANT MAGISTRATE sanctioned a prosecution under the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 195, on the charge of preferring a false complaint, and forwarded his proceedings to the Deputy Magistrate of another division of the district, who ordinarily had no jurisdiction to try offences committed in the division under the Head Assistant Magistrate. Held that the Deputy Magistrate had jurisdiction to try the charge.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NAGAPPA, I. L. R., 16 Mad. 461. [Shephard and Best, JJ. Mar. 28, 1893.]

WHERE, as the result of a police-investigation, it appears that a complaint made to the police of the commission of an offence punishable under the Penal Code is false, it is not necessary that the complainant should be given any further opportunity of establishing the truth of his allegations before his prosecution under s. 182 of the Penal Code is ordered. — QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAGHU TIWARI, I. L. R., 15 All. 336. [Edge, C.J., and Aikman, J. May 16, 1893.]

WHERE one Judge exercising the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court, in reversal of an order of a first-class Magistrate, had granted sanction under the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 195, for a prosecution under the Penal Code, s. 182, an appeal was preferred from his judgment under the Letters Patent, s. 15. Held that no appeal lay, that section of the Letters Patent being inapplicable in cases of criminal jurisdiction.—SRINIVASA AYYANGAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 17 Mad. 105. [Collins, C.J., and Shephard, J. Oct. 5, 1893.]

ON the 5th May 1894, C applied in writing, under the provisions of s. 133 of Act III. of 1884, to a municipality for a license to be granted to him in respect of two carriages and six ponies, and filled up and signed the usual statement required by the section. The sum payable in respect of the license was received, and the license asked for by C was granted to him, and at the same time the statement was sent to an overseer of the municipality for verification. On the 7th May the overseer reported that C had in his possession eight ponies and one horse. On the 8th May the chairman of the municipality passed an order directing C to be prosecuted for making a false statement in the schedule to his statement regarding the number of animals in respect of which he applied for the license. On the 9th May, C presented a petition asking that the tax on the three animals might be received, and stating that he did not think he was liable to take out a license for them, as they were old and diseased, and unfit for work. On the 13th May the chairman passed an order on this application that he had no power to interfere, as the prosecution of C had already been ordered. Meanwhile, on the 9th May, a paper was sent to the Magistrate headed "List of municipal cases under Act III. of 1884," in which C appeared as charged with an offence under s. 199 of the Penal Code for "filing a false statement, that is to say, putting down in the schedule six ponies only instead of eight ponies and one horse." On the 12th May the Deputy Magistrate directed a summons to issue to C, returnable on the 23rd. On the 18th May the District Magistrate passed an order to the effect that the municipality could not institute a prosecution under the Penal Code, but that the Deputy Magistrate had power to do so, and that he should consider the provisions of ss. 182 and 417, read with s. 511, of the Penal Code, as applicable to the facts of the case. On the 19th May the summons was issued, and the case was heard on the 23rd and 24th May and 19th June, on which date formal charges under ss. 199, 182, and 417-511, of the Penal Code were framed. Thereafter the hearing proceeded till the 16th July, when, on an application to the High Court, the proceedings were stayed, and a rule issued to show cause why they should not be quashed. It was contended at the hearing of the rule that the High Court should not interfere at that stage of the proceedings under its revisional jurisdiction. Held that the High Court has power to interfere at any stage of a case, and that, when it is brought to its notice that a person has been subjected, as in this case, for over two months, to the harassment of an illegal prosecution, it is its bounden duty to interfere. Held, further, that it was quite clear that the municipality had no power to institute the proceedings, and that, having regard to the provisions of s. 191 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it did not appear that the Deputy Magistrate, having no private complainant before him, had power, of his own motion, to institute them; but that, whether he had such power or not, the admitted facts of the case did not in law constitute any of the offences with which C was charged, and that the whole proceedings must be quashed. The Municipal Act is intended to be complete in itself as regards offences committed against the Municipal Commissioners, and there is no indication of any intention to render a delinquent also liable to punishment under the Penal Code. There is no penalty in the Act attached to the omission to make a return under s. 133, and no words in the Act constituting the making a false return a penal offence; and, as there are no such words in the Act as are necessary to make the provisions of the Penal Code applicable, the Court has no power to import them. The Municipal Commissioners in such a case have the remedy provided by the Act itself.—CHANDI PERSHAD v. ABDUR RAHMAN, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 131. [Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J. Aug. 13, 1897.]

S. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898) runs as follows:—

195. (1) No Court shall take cognizance—

(a) of any offence punishable under sections 172 to 188 (both inclusive) of the Indian Penal Code,* except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint of the public servant concerned, or of some public servant to whom he is subordinate;

(b) of any offence punishable under sections 193, 194, 195, 196, 199, 200, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, or 228 of the same Code,* when such offence is committed in, or in relation to any proceeding in any Court, except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint, of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate;

(c) of any offence described in section 463, or punishable under sections 471, 475, or 476 of the same Code,* when such offence has been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding, except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint, of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate.

(2) In clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1), the term "Court" means a Civil, Revenue, or Criminal Court, but does not include a Registrar or Sub-Registrar under the Indian Registration Act, 1877.†

(3) The provisions of sub-section (1) with reference to the offences named therein apply also to the abetment of such offences, and attempts to commit them.

(4) The sanction referred to in this section may be expressed in general terms, and need not name the accused person, but it shall, so far as practicable, specify the Court or other place in which, and the occasion on which, the offence was committed.

(5) When sanction is given in respect of any offence referred to in this section, the Court taking cognizance of the case may frame a charge of any other offence so referred to which is disclosed by the facts.

(6) Any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate; and no sanction shall remain in force for more than six months from the date on which it was given, provided that the High Court may, for good cause shown, extend the time.

* Act XLV. of 1860.
† Act III. of 1877.

(7) For the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie, that is to say,—

(a) where such appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate;

(b) where such appeals lie to a Civil and also to a Revenue Court, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Civil or Revenue Court according to the nature of the case in connection with which the offence is alleged to have been committed;

(c) where no appeal lies, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the principal Court of original jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such first-mentioned Court is situate.

183. Whoever offers any resistance to the taking of any property by the lawful authority of any public servant, knowing or having reason to believe that he is such public servant shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Resistance to the taking of property by lawful authority of public servant.

AN officer subordinate to an officer in charge of a police-station, who was deputed by the latter to make an inquiry under s. 135 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, attempted, without a search-warrant, to enter a house in search of property alleged to have been stolen, and was obstructed and resisted. Held (applying s. 99 of the Penal Code) that, even though the police-officer was not strictly justified in searching the house without a warrant, the person obstructing and resisting could not set up the illegality of the officer's proceeding as a justification of his obstruction, as it was not shown that that officer was acting otherwise than in good faith and without malice. A Magistrate acting judicially should not import into the case before him his previous knowledge of the character of the accused, but should determine his guilt or innocence upon the evidence given in the case.—REG. v. VYANKATRAV SHRINIVAS, 7 Bom. H. C. R. 50. [Gibbs and Melvill, JJ. June 15, 1870.]

Held, on the facts of the case, that a party (A) who objected to accompany a constable who had been directed to produce him before the Court, and also seized the constable by the arm, and resisted his carrying away a pony which A was charged with having misappropriated, was guilty of separate offences under ss. 353 and 183 of the Penal Code, and the infliction of separate sentences for each offence was not prevented by s. 71 of that Code.—QUEEN v. JOYAH MOHUN CHUNDER, 14 W. R. 19. [Loch and Hobhouse, JJ. July 16, 1870.]

IF a bailiff break the doors of a third person in order to execute a decree against a judgment-debtor, he is a trespasser if it turn out that the person or goods of the debtor are not in the house, and, under such circumstances, the owner of the house does not, by obstructing the bailiff, render himself punishable under s. 183 or s. 186 of the Penal Code. The accused was convicted, under s. 183, Penal Code, of obstructing a bailiff, who broke open the doors of the accused (a third party) to execute a decree against a judgment-debtor. The Bombay High Court, in quashing the conviction, made the following observations: "Now, in the present case, there is no evidence whatever that there were any goods of the debtor in the house of the accused Gazi; and, in the absence of such evidence, the presumption must be in her favour that there were no such goods. As there was no such property in the house, Gazi did not offer any resistance to the taking of any property by the lawful authority of a public servant, which is the offence of which she has been convicted under s. 183. Nor could she be convicted under what would appear to be a more appropriate section, namely, s 186, for voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public function; for the bailiff would have been exceeding his functions if he had done that which Gazi prevented him from doing."—REG. v. GAZI KOM ABA DORE, 7 Bom. H. C. R. 83. [Gibbs and Melvill, JJ. July 28, 1870.] But see cl. 1 of s. 99 of the Penal Code, which says that "there is no right of private defence against an act done by a public servant acting in good faith under colour of his office, though that act may not be strictly justifiable by law."

THE pay of G, a servant of a Railway Company, fell due on the 1st April. On the 31st March the Civil Court granted a prohibitory order under Act VIII. of 1859, attaching G's pay, and the order was served on the Auditor of the Company on the 1st April. The Auditor returned the order, having endorsed on it that it was dated March 31st, and G's pay was not due till the 1st April. The order was again served on the 1st April, and the Auditor again returned it with the remark that, since the first service, the pay due to G had been made over to him. The Auditor was convicted under s. 183 for resisting the taking of property by the lawful authority of a public servant. Held that the conviction was bad under s. 183, and could not be sustained under s. 188, as on the 31st March there was no debt due to G on which the prohibitory order could operate, and the Auditor was therefore, not bound to obey such an order.—LIGHTFOOT v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 9 of 1874.

A PERSON was convicted under s. 183 of the Penal Code for offering resistance to the attachment of property by a public servant. The offence was committed on the 4th of February 1883, but the warrant under which the public servant acted was returnable on or before the previous day. Held that the conviction was bad.—ANAND LALL BERA v. EMPRESS ON THE PROSECUTION OF AZIM PEON, I. A MERE oral statement by a person claiming to be the owner of certain articles attached by a bailiff in execution of a decree, to the effect that he would not allow the bailiff to take away the articles unless he entered them as his property, does not amount to an offence under s. 183 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. HUSAIN, I. A DISTRICT JUDGE ordered that the house of the defendant in a suit pending before him be searched and certain property brought to the Court, and appointed a commissioner to carry out this order. The commissioner went to the house, but the defendant shut the doors, and would not admit him. A crowd collected, and the commissioner felt it would be unsafe to proceed to carry out the order by force, and was unable to do so otherwise. The defendant was prosecuted and sentenced under the Penal Code, s. 186. Held that the facts disclosed no offence under that section.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SOMMANNA, I. L. R., 15 Mad. 221. A DECREE having been passed against the assets of a deceased debtor, execution was taken out, and the officer of Court proceeded to seize certain goods. The accused successfully resisted the seizure, asserting that the goods seized were his own. He was thereupon charged with having committed an offence under s. 183 of the Penal Code, but he was acquitted for want of proof by the prosecution that the goods were assets of the deceased. Held that the acquittal was wrong, and should be set aside.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. TIRUCHITTAMBALA PATHAN, I. overruling Reg. v. Chunder Kant Chuckerbutty (9 W. R. 63), where it was held that the Civil Court, and not the Magistrate, had jurisdiction to fine for resisting a process of a Civil Court. The case of Reg. v. Bhagai Dufadar has been followed in that of Mani Chandra Das (2 B. L. R., A. C. J., 188), in which a Judge of a Small Cause Court in the Mofussil, found a judgment-debtor guilty of resisting an officer of the Court in attaching property in satisfaction of the decree, and fined him; but the High Court held that the Judge had acted without jurisdiction; he ought to have sent the judgment-debtor before the Magistrate.

IN a suit filed in a Mamlatdar's Court under Bom. Act III. of 1876, the plaintiff obtained a decree against the accused for possession of a certain piece of land When the Mamlatdar proceeded to execute the decree, he found that there was no land corresponding to the boundaries set forth in the plaint, and that the parties were joint owners and in joint-occupation of the land in dispute. Finding himself unable to execute the decree, the Mamlatdar referred the matter to the Collector for advice. The Collector, on looking into the papers of the case, ordered a surveyor to execute the decree by dividing the land in dispute and putting the decree-holder in possession of his share. The surveyor, in attempting to execute the decree, was obstructed by the accused, who was thereupon tried and convicted of the offence of voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions under s. 186 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860). Held (reversing the conviction) that, as the Collector had no legal authority to issue the order to the surveyor in execution of the Mamlatdar's decree, the surveyor, acting under that order, was not discharging a public function, and the act of the accused was not an offence against s. 186 of the Penal Code. Held, further, that the Collector's order was so entirely ultra vires as to leave no room for the operation of either the first or the second clause of s. 99 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. [Wilkinson and Subrahmanya Ayyar, JJ. Jan. 25, 28, 1892.]

WHERE a Civil Court peon was sent by a Munsif to attach certain property, and on the peon reporting that he had been obstructed in making the attachment, the Munsif sent the case to the Deputy Magistrate for investigation and trial, and the Deputy Magistrate summarily tried the accused under s. 186 of the Penal Code, dismissed the case, and awarded compensation of Rs. 20 to the accused, held that the award of compensation was illegal: the peon, though nominally the informant in the case, was not the real complainant, nor could the proceedings properly be said to have been instituted before the Deputy Magistrate on his information.—BHARUT CHUNDER NATH v. JABED ALI BISWAS, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 481. [Pigot and Hill, JJ. Sep. 19, 1892.]

THE public functions contemplated by s. 186 of the Penal Code mean legal or legitimately authorized public functions, and were not intended to cover any act that a public functionary might choose to take upon himself to perform. A Batwara amin, in proceeding to measure certain lands in the course of proceedings connected with the partition of an estate under Ben. Act VIII. of 1876, was obstructed by certain persons who claimed the lands, and objected to their being measured. The lands were stated in the report of the amin to be the common land of estate No. 546 and of certain other estates. The persons who obstructed him were not co-sharers in that estate, and contended that the land sought to be measured had been divided amongst the maliks of the different estates, and different portions of it had been held separately by them. The persons so obstructing the amin were charged with an offence under s. 186 of the Penal Code, the Deputy Collector in charge of the batwaraproceedings being of opinion that s. 112 of the Act applied, and that the amin was entitled to measure the land. The accused were convicted. Held that s. 112 is limited to cases where the community of interest in the land in dispute between the proprietors of the estate under partition as a body, and the proprietors of other estates, is admitted. When this is not admitted, the provisions of s. 116 apply. Held, further, that, as there was no evidence to show that such community of interest was admitted, the accused were entitled to the benefit of the doubt, and to have the case treated as one under s. 116; and that, as the procedure laid down in that section had not been followed, the amin had no power to measure the lands, and could not be said to be a public servant acting in discharge of his public functions, and that the conviction must consequently be set aside.—LILLA SINGH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 286. [Banerjee and Sale, JJ. Oct. 17, 1894.]

THE petitioner was convicted, under s. 186 of the Penal Code, of obstructing a Civil Court peon, who was attaching his property in execution of a decree; the warrant of attachment was addressed to the nazir of the Court, who delegated its execution to a peon by an endorsement of the peon's name. Held, the nazir had authority thus to delegate the execution of the warrant to the peon. The words "to be executed" in s. 251 of the Code of Civil Procedure would seem to imply that it was not intended that the "proper officer" should himself execute all warrants sent to him. And there is nothing in the Code which indicates in any way that warrants, being either warrants of arrest or of attachment, or for distress and sale, are to be executed by the "proper officer" in any manner different from the service of summonses. The Court Fees Act (VII. of 1870) distinctly contemplates that the peons are to be employed, not only for the service of summonses, notices, or orders, but also for the execution of other processes, such as warrants of arrest, or of attachment and distress. Though the authority may well be conferred in more clear and explicit terms than are expressed by a mere endorsement by the nazir of the peon's name, still it is impossible to say that that is not sufficient evidence of the delegation.—DHARAM CHAND LAL v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 596. [Norris and Beverley, JJ. Mar. 6, 1895.] Followed in Sheo Progash Tewari v. Bhoop Narain Prosad Pathak, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 759, infra.

A NAZIR has authority to delegate the execution of warrants of arrest. Dharam Chand Lal v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 22 Cal. 596) followed. A peon acting under such delegation is a public servant within the meaning of the definition in s. 21, cl. 4, of the Penal Code. Quære.—Whether the escape of a prisoner from arrest is an obstruction of a public servant within the meaning of s. 186 of the Penal Code.—SHEO PROGASH TEWARI v. BHOOP NARAIN PROSAD PATHAK, I. A PUBLIC servant executing a warrant of arrest which is not signed by the Magistrate as required by s. 75 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but only bears his initials, and the substance of which is not notified to the person to be arrested as required by s. 80 of the Code, cannot be said to be acting in the discharge of his public functions in a manner authorized by law. A person obstructing him cannot be convicted under s. 186 of the Penal Code.—ABDUL GAFUR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 23 Cal. 896. [O'Kinealy and Banerjee, JJ. May 22, 1896.]

BEFORE a person can be convicted of wilfully obstructing or impeding a railway servant in the discharge of his duties, within the meaning of s. 121 of the Railway Act (IX. of 1890), or of voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions, within the meaning of s. 186 of the Indian Penal Code, it must be shown that the obstruction or resistance was offered to a railway or public servant in the discharge of his duties or public function as authorized by law. The mere fact of a public servant or a railway servant believing that he was acting in the discharge of his duties will not be sufficient to make resistance or obstruction to him, amount to an offence.—BARODA KANTO PRAMANICK, In re, 1 C. W. N. 74. [O'Kinealy and Banerjee, JJ. July 16, 1896.]

WHERE a District Magistrate issued a warrant for the arrest and production of a witness for the purpose of giving evidence at an investigation held by the police, and in attempting to execute such warrant the police arrested the wrong person, and were assaulted in the attempt, held that, apart from the fact that the attempt to arrest was made on the wrong person, a District Magistrate has no authority to issue a warrant for the production of a witness at an investigation by a police-officer, but only before his own Court under ss. 76, 81, of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held, also, that as the investigation was held by a police-officer under Chapter XIV. of the Criminal Procedure Code, the proper course was for the Sub-Inspector of Police to require the attendance of the witness under s. 160 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and on failure by her to comply with such order, prosecute her under s. 174 of the Penal Code. Held, further, that the accused were justified in their resistance, and that no offence either under s. 143 or s. 186 of the Penal Code was committed, and that they should be acquitted.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. JOGENDRA NATH MUKERJEE, I. L. R., 24 Cal. 320. [Ghose and Gordon, JJ. Jan. 19, 1897.]

A NOTICE of demand of a house-tax under the Local Boards Act (Mad. Act V. of 1884) was affixed to the house. The owner, who was a potter and cultivator by occupation, was in the village at the time. He did not pay the tax. A warrant of distress was issued, the house-register not having been completely filled up, and a bucket and spade belonging to the defaulter were attached. The defaulter successfully resisted the distraint. Held that the provisions of the Act had been sufficiently complied with as regards the preliminary steps for making the demand and the service of notice, and the fact that the spade and the bucket were protected from attachment under s. 94 did not justify the resistance, and accordingly that the defaulter was guilty of offences under Penal Code, ss. 186 and 353.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. POOMALAI UDAYAN, I. L. R., 21 Mad. 296. [Subramania Ayyar and Davies, JJ. Jan. 26, 1898.]

The petitioner was convicted under s. 186 of the Indian Penal Code of voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions. The officer obstructed was a surveyor employed by the Collector in the khas mehal department, and the functions in which he was obstructed were making a survey of a certain portion of a water-course which was in dispute. Held that the Collector, acting in the management of a khas mehal, the property of the Government, is as much the Government within the meaning of s. 17 of the Indian Penal Code as when he is exercising any other of the duties of his official position. Held, further, that the surveyor in the present case was a public servant, and that the duty upon which he was engaged when he was obstructed was a public duty.—BAJOO SING v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 26 Cal. 158. [Stevens and Pratt, JJ. Nov. 2, 1898.]

AN arrest by a police-officer without notifying the substance of the warrant to the person against whom the warrant is issued, as required by s. 80 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is not a lawful arrest; and resistance to such an arrest is not an offence under s. 225B of the Penal Code.—SATISH CHANDRA RAI v. JODU NANDAN SING, I. AN omission or neglect by a zemindar, when called upon under s. 21 of Reg. The accused was not shown to be one of the persons contemplated by the first three paragraphs of s. 78 of the Forest Act (VII. of 1878), nor was the purpose for which he was called upon to give his assistance, one of the purposes mentioned in cls. (a) to (d) of the section. He was, therefore, not legally bound to assist the forest-guard.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BABAJI, I. L. R., 22 Bom. 769. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. Jan. 28, 1897.]

S. 188 of the Penal Code should be read with ss. 133 to 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898). Ss. 133 and 144 run as follow:—

Whenever a District Magistrate, a Subdivisional Magistrate, or, when empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, a Magistrate of the first class, considers, on receiving a report or other information, and on taking such evidence (if any) as he thinks fit, that any unlawful obstruction or nuisance should be removed from any way, river, or channel which is, or may be, lawfully used by the public, or from any public place, or that any tank, well, or excavation adjacent to any such way or public place should be fenced in such a manner as to prevent danger arising to the public, such Magistrate may make a conditional order requiring the person causing such obstruction or nuisance, or carrying on such trade or occupation, or keeping any such goods or merchandise, or owning, possessing, or controlling such building, substance, tank, well, or excavation, within a time to be fixed in the order, to remove such obstruction or nuisance; or to alter the disposal of such substance; or to fence such tank well, or excavation, as the case may be; or to appear before himself or some other Magistrate of the first or second class, at a time and place to be fixed by the order, and move to have the order set aside, or modified in manner hereinafter provided.

No order duly made by a Magistrate under this section shall be called in question in any Civil Court.

Explanation.—A 'public place' includes also property belonging to the State, camping grounds, and grounds left unoccupied for sanitary and recreative purposes.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), s. 133.

In cases where in the opinion of the District Magistrate, a Chief Presidency Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate, or of any other Magistrate specially empowered by the Local Government or a Chief Presidency Magistrate, or the District Magistrate to act under the section, immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable, such Magistrate may, by a written order, stating the material facts of the case, and served in manner provided by s. 134 of Act V. of 1898, direct any person to abstain from a certain act, or to take certain order with certain property in his possession or under his management, if such Magistrate considers that such direction is likely to prevent, or tends to prevent, obstruction, annoyance, or injury, or risk of obstruction, annoyance, or injury, to any persons lawfully employed, or danger to human life, health, or safety, or a disturbance of the public tranquillity, or a riot, or an affray. An order under this section may, in cases of emergency, or in cases where the circumstances do not admit of the serving, in due time, of a notice upon the person against whom the order is directed, be passed ex parte. An order under this section may be directed to a particular individual, or to the public generally, when frequenting or visiting a particular place. Any Magistrate may rescind or alter any order made under this section by himself or any Magistrate subordinate to him, or by his predecessor in office. No order under this section shall remain in force for more than two months from the making thereof, unless, in cases of danger to human life, health, or safety, or a likelihood of a riot or an affray, the Local Government, by notification in the official Gazette, otherwise directs.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), s. 144.

THE following extract, taken from the Report of the Indian Law Commissioners, fully explains the reason for the enactment of s. 188 of the Penal Code: "We have, to the best of our ability, framed laws against acts which ought to be repressed at all times and places, or at times and places which it is in our power to define. But there are acts which at one time and place are perfectly innocent and which at another time or place are proper subjects for punishment; nor is it always possible for the Legislature to say at what time or at what place such acts ought to be punishable. Thus, it may happen that, a religious procession, which is in itself perfectly legal, and which, while it passes through many quarters of a town, is perfectly harmless, cannot, without great risk of tumult and outrage, be suffered to turn down a particular street inhabited by persons who hold the ceremony in abhorrence, and whose passions are excited by being forced to witness it. Again there are many Hindu rites which in Hindu temples and religious assemblies the law tolerates, but which could not with propriety be exhibited in a place where English gentlemen and ladies are in the habit of frequenting for purposes of exercise. Again, at a particular season, hydrophobia may be common among dogs at a particular place, and it may be highly advisable that all people at that place should keep their dogs strictly confined. Again, there may be a particular place in a town which the people are in the habit of using as a receptacle for filth, in general, this practice may do no harm, but an unhealthy season may arrive when it may be dangerous to the health of the population; and, under such circumstances, it is evidently desirable that no person should be allowed to add to the nuisance. It is evident that it is utterly impossible for the Legislature to mark out the route of all religious processions in India, to specify all the public walks frequented by English ladies and gentlemen, to foresee in what months and in what places hydrophobia will be common among dogs, or when a particular dunghill may become dangerous to the health of a town. It is equally evident that it would be unjust to punish a person who cannot be proved to have acted with bad intentions for doing to-day what yesterday was a perfectly innocent act, or for doing in one street what it would be perfectly innocent to do in another street, without giving him some notice. What we propose, therefore, is to empower the local authorities to forbid acts which these authorities consider as dangerous to the public tranquillity, health, safety, or convenience; and to make it an offence in a person to do anything which that person knows to be so forbidden, and which may endanger the public tranquillity, health, safety, or convenience. It will be observed that we do not give to the local authorities the power of arbitrarily making anything an offence. For, unless the Court before which the person who disobeys the order is tried shall be of opinion that he has done something tending to endanger the public tranquillity, health, safety, or convenience, he will be liable to no punishment. The effect of the order of the local authority will merely be to deprive the person who knowingly disobeys the order of the plea that he had no bad intentions. He will not be permitted to allege that, if he has caused harm or risk of harm, it was without his knowledge."

BEFORE a person can be legally punished for refusal to remove and reconstruct roof-drains, evidence ought to be taken whether the party has disobeyed the Magistrate's order, and that such disobedience has produced, or is likely to produce harm.—QUEEN v. SHABUCKRAM BUKOOLEE, 2 W. R. 32. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Feb. 8. 1865.]

THE mere non-service personally of a notice to remove a nuisance is not a sufficient ground for the Court, under s. 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), corresponding with s. 222 of the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882), to set aside the Magistrate's order when it appears that the parties did not take the objection before the Magistrate, and that they, in fact, admitted knowledge of the existence of the notice, and sought to excuse their failure to obey it.—HOCHAN v. ELLIOT, 5 W. R. 4. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. Jan. 15, 1866.]

A MAGISTRATE cannot, under s. 62, Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861), corresponding with s. 144, new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882), in general terms, forbid two parties to use any musical instrument in the neighbourhood of each other's house, though he may forbid their doing so for the purpose of mutual annoyance.—IN THE MATTER OF RAM CHUNDER GEER GOSSAIN, 6 W. R. 40. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. July 9, 1866.]

HELD that an Assistant Magistrate, as he comes with the definition of the term "any Magistrate," was competent to pass an order under s 62 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861), which contemplates circumstances under which an immediate order is urgently required, and in this respect differs from s. 188 of the Penal Code.—GOVT. v. MAHOMED BUKSH, 1 Agra H C. A SENTENCE of rigorous imprisonment passed by a Magistrate, F. P., under s. 188 of the Penal Code, for disobedience to an order duly promulgated by a public servant, altered to one of simple imprisonment, as the Magistrate's finding did not show that the case came within the latter part of the section, in which case alone the infliction of rigorous imprisonment was authorized.—REG. v. RATANRAO BIN MAHADEVRAO CHAVAN, 3 Bom. H. C. R. 32. [Couch, C.J., and Newton and Warden, JJ. Oct. 3, 1866.]

HELD that the Magistrate, as President of a Municipal Committee, has no power to issue an order forbidding, as a nuisance, an act not included in the rules passed under Act XXVI. of 1850.—GOVT. v. SHAM SOONDER, 1 Agra H. C. R. 34. [Turner, J., and Spankie, Offg. J. Dec. 12, 1866.]

A MINOR, whose property was under the Court of Wards, having been fined by the Magistrate for disobedience by his servants of a lawful order duly promulgated with reference to such property, the order of the Magistrate was reversed, on the ground that the offence was not committed by the minor in person, and that the prosecution was misdirected.—CROWN v. SIRDAR DYAL SINGH, Panj. Rec., No. 84 of 1866.

THE accused was fined by the Magistrate for not having closed a drain in pursuance of the verbal order of the Magistrate. Held that the Magistrate should have proceeded under ch. 20 of Act XXV. of 1861, inasmuch as the nuisance was not one from which immediate danger was apprehended, and not under s. 62, which empowers the Magistrate to put an immediate determination to the continuance thereof. A written order not having been given, the procedure was faulty and therefore quashed. Only Magistrates of a district or division can act under ch. 20, s. 308.—GOVT. v. CHOONEE LALL, 2 Agra H. C. R. 1. [Turner, J., and Spankie, Offg. J. Jan. 16, 1867.]

CONVICTIONS and sentences for disobeying an order duly promulgated by a public servant reversed, as the mamlatdar, who stated that he proceeded under Bom. IT is not a lawful order to direct a man not to leave his home without informing the lambardar of the village or the police (Crown v. Boolahee, Panj. Rec., No. 12 of 1868), or without a ticket-of-leave, or the permission of the police.—CROWN v. HURNAM SINGH, Panj. Rec. No. 45 of 1867.

CONVICTION and sentence for disobeying an order made by a mamlatdar, under Bom. Act V. of 1864, directing the accused to keep a gateway open, reversed, as the mamlatdar was not empowered under that Act to make the order.—REG. v. KHANDOGI BIN TANAJI, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 21. [Couch, C.J., and Newton, J. Mar. 10 1868.]

A CONVICTION under s. 188 of the Penal Code for disobedience of an order duly promulgated by a public servant will not stand where the evidence fails to show that the disobedience caused, or tended to cause, obstruction, annoyance, or injury, or risk of obstruction, annoyance, or injury, to any person lawfully employed, or that it caused, or tended to cause, danger to human life, health, or safety, or caused, or tended to cause, a riot or affray.—PRO., Mar. 16, 1868, 4 Mad. H. C. R., Ap. 5.

IN a case of public nuisance under s. 290 of the Penal Code, it must be proved that injury, danger, or annoyance has been caused either in regard to the enjoyment of property, or the exercise of a public right on the part of a portion of the community or of any particular class of people. The fact that there is a special law to meet a particular offence (in this case cattle-trespass) does not prevent the punishment of the offenders under the Penal Code, if an offence which could have been rightly punished under the Penal Code was established.—ONOORAM v. LAMESSOR; WEBSTER v. KEENA, 9 W. R 70. [Phear and Hobhouse, JJ. May 23, 1868.]

HELD that an order passed by a mamlatdar, under Bom. Act V. of 1864, directing the accused to keep open a right-of-way to a privy, being in reality an injunction to refrain from disturbing the possession of the parties, was, therefore, within the jurisdiction of the mamlatdar.—REG. v. KRISHNASHET BIN NARAYANSHET, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 46. [Couch, C.J., and Newton, J. June 17, 1868.]

HELD that a Magistrate cannot proceed to pass an order for the removal of a nuisance, under s. 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), without calling on the party to show cause why the order should not be passed against him, and without hearing the objections, even if they are filed after the time fixed for their presentation, but before he takes up the case. A Magistrate's power to fill up a tank is, by s. 308, limited to having it fenced in; but where the tank is proved to be injurious to the community, he may, under that section, treat it as public nuisance, and cause it to be filled up.—IN THE CASE OF BISTOO CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY, 10 W. R. 27. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Aug. 13, 1868.]

S. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), does not authorize a Magistrate summarily to direct the owner of a tank in a dry bed of a river to destroy the banks, on the ground that they are an obstruction to the public in the lawful enjoyment of the river, and that the stopping of the water interferes with the health of the public.—REFERENCE IN THE CASE OF GHOLAM DURBESH, 10 W. R. 36. [Jackson and Hobhouse JJ. Sep 10, 1868.]

THE powers of a Magistrate and the procedure to be observed by him in issuing orders under ss. 62 and 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), discussed, and the difference between these sections pointed out.—IN THE MATTER OF (1) HURIMOHAN MALO; (2) JAYAKRISHNA MOOKERJEE, 10 W. R 53; 1 B. L. R. A. Cr. 20 [Phear and Hobhouse, JJ. Nov. 20, 1868.]

WHERE accused was convicted, under Act (XXV. of 1850), of disobedience of an order made by the Municipal Commissioners of Puna, and was sentenced to pay a fine of twenty rupees, and (eight days time being allowed him within which to comply with the order) a further fine of two rupees for each day during which he should continue wilfully to disobey such order, the latter part of the sentence was reversed by the High Court as being illegal.—REG v JAGANNATHBHAT BIN APPABHAT, 5 Bom H C. R. 103. [Newton and Tucker, JJ Dec. 3, 1868.]

ORDERS by Sub-Magistrates, in one case directing the removal of a house, on the ground that it was in a dangerous and dilapidated condition, and in the other directing the removal of a granary, on the ground

IT is competent to a Magistrate to issue an order to certain persons in possession and management of a Hindu temple to widen the doorway in order to give the necessary ventilation and to afford proper means of ingress and egress to the pilgrims. Even if the temple were private property, the order could be passed, as the building was open to the Hindu public.—REG. v. RAMCHUNDRA EKNATH, 6 Bom. H. C. R. 36. [Couch, C.J. and Newton, J. April 21, 1869.]

THERE is nothing in s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), to justify a Magistrate in making an order for the removal of a bund, or other obstruction or nuisance on the mere report of a police-constable; and before making such order he ought to take evidence from the defendants, and, if necessary, on both sides.—QUEEN v. BHYROO DYAR SINGH, 11 W. R. 46; 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 4. Norman and Jackson, JJ. May 3, 1869.

WHERE an order under s. 318 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861), was made between A on the one side, and B and the then tenants of B on the other, declaring that A was in possession of the property in dispute, held that this order was only binding on the actual parties to the case before the Magistrate, and that subsequent tenants of B could not be criminally punished for disobeying the order in question.—IN THE MATTER OF GOPAL BURNAWAR, 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 13. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. May 10, 1869.]

THE order contemplated by s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), is a particular and specific order addressed to a particular person or particular persons to do or abstain from a particular act or particular acts. That section does not empower a Magistrate to pass a general order to persons not to allow their cattle or horses to run at large on the public roads; nor can such an order be passed under Act III. of 1857, which applies only to injury done by cattle to crops &c., and to the sides of public roads and embankments.—QUEEN v. AMEERUDDEEN, 12 W. R. 36; 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 45; 6 B. L. R. 78n. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. July 26, 1869.]

A MAGISTRATE issued an order warning owners of cattle to take proper care of them, and that, in case of disobedience or neglect, they would be punished according to law, and did punish them for disobedience under s. 188 of the Penal Code. Held that the Magistrate was not competent, under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), to pass such an order. The order contemplated under this section is in the nature of an injunction, and such an order passed by a Magistrate would not be legal. That the conviction under s. 188 of the Penal Code was illegal.—In re AMIRADDI, 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 45. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. July 26, 1869.]

THE power of issuing orders to prevent breaches of the peace, &c., conferred on a Magistrate by s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), extends only to immoveable property of the description set forth in ch. 22 of that Code.—QUEEN v. GOLUCK CHUNDER GOHOO, 12 W. R. 38. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. July 27, 1869.]

AN order issued by a Magistrate under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), in consequence of a mahazirnama signed by certain persons, but without any notice to the defendant or inquiry by the Magistrate, is illegal.—PRO., Aug. 16, 1869, 4 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 67.

BEFORE a conviction can be had under s. 188, Penal Code, it must be proved that the accused knew that an order had been promulgated by a public servant directing such accused person to abstain from a certain act.—QUEEN v. RAMTONOO SINGH, 12 W. R. 49. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 28, 1869.]

A MAGISTRATE issued a notification that all persons desirous of carrying arms should take out a license enabling them to do so under s. 26 of Act XXXI. of 1860; and certain persons were, in consequence of this notification, arrested and brought before him, charged in a police-report with carrying arms without license. No summons or warrant had been applied for, or any complaint lodged before the Magistrate, previous to the arrest of the prisoners. No charge in writing was framed as required under ss. 250 to 251 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861). No evidence was taken, but the prisoners admitted carrying the fire-arms. The Magistrate convicted them, under s. 188 of the Penal Code, of disobedience to an order duly promulgated by a pulic servant. There was no evidence that the disobedience would cause, or tend to cause, annoyance, obstruction, or injury to human life, health, or safety. Held that the convictions must be quashed. Necessity of observing the rules laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code remarked on.—QUEEN v. NANDKUMAR BOSE, 3 B. L. R. Ap. 149. [Markby and Glover, JJ. Sep. 14, 1869.]

S. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), does not apply to disputes connected with lands, but refers specially to nuisances and other similar matters in which immediate action is necessary in order to avoid the risk of illegal consequences. — RAJBULLUB ADDHYA v. GOBIND CHUNDER MOITRO, 12 W. R. 66. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Oct. 27, 1869.]

OOMRA was convicted of stealing a heifer. Moola bought the stolen heifer from accused No. 1, and was ordered by the Deputy Commissioner to give notice of the purchase at the thana. This Moola omitted to do, and he was tried and convicted under s. 188, Penal Code. Held that Moola had not committed an offence under that section, as the order in question was not one which the Deputy Commissioner was lawfully empowered to promulgate within the meaning of that section.—OOMRA v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 17 of 1869.

THE Sub-Magistrate issued an order to two persons directing them to remove a certain embankment, whereby the adjacent lands of the complainant were in danger of being flooded. Held that the act of the defendant was not an act which could be prohibited by the Sub-Magistrate under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861). —PRO., Feb. 22, 1870, 5 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 19.

A MAGISTRATE has no power, under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), to issue any order which is by its very nature irrevocable. All that he has power to compel the owner of property to do is to take certain order with it. Such power does not extend to an order to cut down a large quantity of trees — UTTAM CHUNDER CHATTERJEE v. RAM CHUNDER CHATTERJEE, 13 W. R. 72; 5 B. L. R. 131. [Bayley and Markby, JJ. May 14, 1870.

WHERE a Deputy Magistrate, without taking evidence, made an order under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), changing a day on which a haut used to be held, and, subsequently, on taking evidence, found that his first order was wrong, and passed without jurisdiction, he was held to have acted properly in recalling his first order. — MOHUN SIRDAR ON BEHALF OF BUNWAREE LALL v. OBHOY CHURN MUKHOPADYAH, NAIB OF BABOO DEBENDER NATH TAGORE, 13 W. R. 72. [Kemp and Jackson, JJ. May 14, 1870.]

A MAGISTRATE cannot pass an order under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), directing a person to abstain from a certain act, or to take certain order with certain property, unless he is satisfied that such direction on his part is likely to prevent, or tends to prevent, a riot or affray; nor can he pass an order under that section, or under s. 282 or any other section of the law, calling upon a person to enter into recognizances not to collect certain cesses, though under s. 282 the Magistrate may bind him to keep the peace, if there is sufficient evidence to show that a breach of the peace is imminent through his act.—IN THE MATTER OF LUCHMEEPUT SINGH, 14 W. R. 3. [Loch and Hobhouse, JJ. June 11, 1870.]

A MAGISTRATE cannot pass an order under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), without first calling on the defendant to show cause why the order should not be passed, and taking any evidence which the defendant may adduce — RAI LUCHMEEPUT SINGH, 14 W. R. 17; 5 B. L. R. Ap. 81. [Loch and Glover, JJ. July 9, 1870.]

HELD (Phear J., dissenting) that an order passed by a Magistrate under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), is not of the nature of a judicial proceeding, and therefore cannot be interfered with by the High Court under s. 404 of that Code.—ABBAS ALI CHOWDHRY v. ILLIM MEAH, 14 W. R. 46; 6 B. L. R. 74. [Couch, C.J., and Bayley Kemp, Jackson, and Phear, JJ. Aug. 17, 1870. Contra—Sheeb Chunder Bhattacharjee v. Sadut Ally Khan, 4 W. R. 12, which has been overruled by Bykuntram Shaha Roy v. Meajan, 18 W. R. 47: 10 B. L. R. 434. But followed in Sheikh Laloo v. Adam Sirkar, 17 W. WHERE an order had been made by a Magistrate under s. 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), in favour of A in respect of certain land, and B subsequently obtained an order from the Collector declaring him entitled to the same land, in pursuance of which he was put into possession by an officer of the Collector, it was held that, before B could be convicted under s. 188 of the Penal Code of disobeying an order made by a public officer, it should be proved that B was aware of the order under s. 318 and that, having that knowledge, he disobeyed it.—ABELAKH LALL v. SIRNAN SINGH, 15 W. R. 50. [Jackson and Macpherson, JJ. April 14, 1871.]

WHERE a complaint was made by A that timber belonging to his master, which had been cut and stacked in a certain place, had been removed by B, who said that the timber was cut, not by A's master, but by himself, and that he had stacked it in a place where he always put his timber, it was held that the Magistrate could not proceed under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), but was bound to try the charge brought against B, and either restore the timber to A, or leave it where it was according to the result of the investigation.—KARTICK CHUNDER PAL v. CHUNDER NATH CHUCKERBUTTY, 15 W. R. 56. [Jackson and Mookerjee, JJ. April 24, 1871.]

THE purchaser of an interest in land at a sale in execution of a decree obtained an order for possession under s. 263 or 264, Act VIII. of 1859, and a dispute arose between him and another person, who had some interest in the land, as to what passed under the sale-certificate. Without ascertaining the rights of the parties, the Magistrate made certain orders, the effect of which was to exclude the auction-purchaser for some time from exercising the right alleged to have passed to him under the purchase. Held that the Magistrate ought to have made no order at all with reference to the property, leaving it to the parties to determine their rights in the Civil Court, and that he had ample power under the section to do what was necessary to prevent a breach of the peace. The High Court may interfere with and quash any order passed by a Magistrate under s. 62, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV of 1861), when the order is such that it was beyond the power and out of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to make it. Quære—Whether pleaders have a right to be heard in such case.—SHEIKH LALOO v. AN order in writing under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV of 1861), is necessary to sustain a charge under s. 188 of the Penal Code. Quære—Whether a Magistrate has not power to proceed under the former section instead of under s. 308 against a party for disobeying an order issued by him directing the party to clean a privy pronounced to be a nuisance.—IN THE MATTER OF PITAMBUR DEY, 17 W. R. 57. [Couch, C.J., and Ainslie, J. April 27, 1872.]

WHERE a new haut was established about half a mile from a long-established market, and the Deputy Magistrate was of opinion that the holding of the two hauts on the same days of the week would induce a breach of the peace, held that the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate, under s. 62 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), directing petitioner to abstain from holding his haut on certain days, was not beyond his power, or out of his jurisdiction, to pass, and therefore was one with which the High Court could not interfere under s. 404 of the Code of 1861.—LALLA MITTERJEET SINGH v. RAJCOGMAR SIRKAR, 18 W. R. 22. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. June 25, 1872.] Dissents from Sheikh Laloo v Adam Sirkar, 17 W. R. 37, supra. Follows Abbas Ali Chowdhry v. Illim Meah, 14 W. R. 46, supra, p. 176.

WHERE, by direction of Government, the Magistrate promulgated an order under s. 62, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), directing all persons to abstain from hook-swinging or other self-torture in public, and from the abetment thereof, and no such order was upon the record, the High Court annulled the conviction of the prisoners by the Deputy Magistrate under ss. 188, 114, Penal Code, for having knowingly disobeyed that order.—IN THE MATTER OF DWARICK MISSER, 18 W. R. 30. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 19, 1872.]

A MAGISTRATE, or other officer exercising the powers of a Magistrate, is legally competent, under s. 62, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), to issue an order prohibiting a landholder from holding a haut on any particular spot on his estate on particular days on the ground that such an order is likely to prevent a riot or an affray.—BYKUNTRAM SHAHA ROY v. MEAJAN, 18 W. R. 47; 10 B. L. R. 434. [Couch, C.J., and Bayley, Kemp, Mitter, and Ainslie, JJ. Sep. 9, 1872.] Overrules Sheeb Chunder Bhuttacharjee v. Saadut Ally Khan, 4 W. R. 12.

ACCUSED was convicted, under s. 188 of the Penal Code, of exposing beef for sale in the city of Amritsar, and thereby disobeying an order duly promulgated. He was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two months, and his knife and scales were ordered to be confiscated. The Chief Court, on the revision-side, cancelled the order of confiscation, as being unauthorized by law.—CROWN v. IMAMI, Panj. Rec., No. 13 of 1872.

THE words, "or to do any act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace," in s. 282, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV of 1861), were construed to mean a wrongful act, and not one which the person may lawfully do. It was not intended that a person should be prevented by a Magistrate from exercising his right of property, because another person would be likely to commit a breach of the peace if he did so. Therefore, where a Magistrate issued an order preventing a householder from building a wall to his own house, the order was set aside as illegal.—CASHI CHUNDER DAS v. HURRIKISHORE DASS, 19 W. R. 47; 10 B. L.

R. 441. [Couch, C.J., and Birch, J. Mar. 19, 1873.]

IN a case in which the Magistrate passed an order under s. 518, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), for closing a haut on the ground that it was only a mile apart from another haut, and a breach of the peace was not unlikely, the Sessions Judge recommended that the order should be set aside, s. 518 applying only when a breach of the peace was imminent. Held that, under expl. 2, s. 518, the order could be made in all cases upon such information as satisfied the Magistrate; and as the order was one which the Magistrate had power to make, and was not contrary to law, the High Court could not, under s. 297, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872, set it aside. Orders made under s. 518 are not judicial proceedings, and therefore are not within s. 297.—BHOLANATH BOSE v. KOMURUDDIN, 20 W. R. 53. Couch, C.J., and Birch, J. July 18, 1873.

A SECOND-CLASS MAGISTRATE who issues an order under s. 518 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), has no jurisdiction to punish for its disobedience by reason of s. 487 of the Criminal Procedure Code (or ss. 131 and 132 of the new Code).—REG. v. RANCHOD DAYAL, 10 Bom. H. C. R. 424. [Melvill and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ. Oct. 29, 1873.]

THE accused were convicted by the Deputy Commissioner of Rohtak, under s. 188 of the Penal Code, of disobeying an order issued by the Lieutenant-Governor, and dated 7th April 1865. Para. 3 of the order was as follows: "His Honor desires that, in the case of every kacha road in this province which has to support a traffic carried on carts, one side may be assigned to the carts, and one reserved for light traffic." The accused drove heavy carts on that part of a road which was set apart for light traffic. Held that the order of the 7th April 1865 was not legal, and the conviction could not stand.—CROWN v. UNNIR, Panj. Rec. No. 8 of 1873.

THE accused were caught fishing in the canal near Dinanager, in the Gurdaspur district, with nets, the meshes of which were smaller than one-inch and-a-quarter square or six inches all round, the minimum size fixed by the Financial Commissioner's Circular No. 40 of 1870. The accused did not hold licenses for fishing. The Magistrate convicted the accused under s. 188 of the Penal Code. Held (by Lindsay, J.) that the Financial Commissioner's circular was not authorized by law, and the conviction must be quashed. Held (by Campbell, J.) that the facts did not disclose an offence under s. 188.—CROWN v. KANHAYA, Panj. Rec., No. 11 of 1873.

THE operation of s. 518, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), is confined to cases where, in the opinion of the Magistrate, the delay which would be caused by adopting a different procedure from that specified in the explanation to that section would occasion a greater evil than that suffered by the person upon whom the order is made, or would defeat the intention of this (the 39th) chapter. Where a Magistrate, without hearing the petitioner, or giving him an opportunity of being heard, and simply upon the foundation of a police-officer's report, directed the petitioner to abstain from holding a haut upon his land on a certain day, because another party had long been accustomed to hold a haut upon his land adjacent to the petitioner's haut on the day following that in which the petitioner held his haut, it was held that his order passed under s. 518 was ultra vires, the police-officer's report being vague and insufficient, and the private interest of this kind not affording a ground for making an order under s. 518 or any other order under the Criminal Procedure Code.—BANEE MADHUB GHOSE v. WOOMA NATH ROY CHOWDHRY, 21 W. R. 26. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Jan. 18, 1874.]

THE pay of G, a servant of a Railway Company, fell due on the 1st April. On the 31st March, the Civil Court granted a prohibitory order under Act VIII of 1859, attaching G's pay, and the order was served on the Auditor of the Company on the 1st April. The Auditor returned the order, having endorsed on it that it was dated March 31st, and G's pay was not due till the 1st April. The order was again served on the 1st April, and the Auditor again returned it with the remark that, since the first service, the pay due to G had been made over to him. The Auditor was convicted under s. 183 for resisting the taking of property by the lawful authority of a public servant. Held that the conviction was bad under s. 183, and could not be sustained under s. 188, as on the 31st March there was no debt due to G on which the prohibitory order could operate, and the Auditor was, therefore, not bound to obey such an order.—LIGHTFOOT v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 9 of 1874.

To support a conviction under s. 188, Penal Code, there must be evidence that the order has been promulgated by a public servant lawfully empowered to promulgate such order; s. 518 of the Code which relates to local nuisances, has no application to a case like this, which refers to the collection of market-dues.—QUEEN v. SOBUN SINGH, 23 W. R. 57. [Kemp and Birch, JJ. April 5, 1875.]

AN order which declares that, as between the parties to a contention, certain land in dispute does not belong to the public, is not one the contravention of which can form the subject of an order under the Penal Code, s. 188.—UNNODA PERSHAD DUTT v. RANEE SHAMA SOONDUREE, 24 W. R. 20. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. June 28, 1875.]

THE extraordinary powers conferred on the High Court by the Letters Patent, s. 15, extend to the revising of orders passed under section 518 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872). When a Magistrate makes an order under this section, on the ground that he has received information, and is satisfied with it, no interference is possible; but when he states the nature of the information, the High Court can see whether such information justifies the order made. Before a prohibitory order under s. 518 can be made, there ought to be information or evidence before the Magistrate that the act prohibited was likely to cause a riot or affray, and that the stoppage of that act would prevent such riot or affray. After summoning a person to show cause why he should not enter into a bond to keep the peace, the Magistrate cannot bind over that person until he adjudicates on evidence before him that such person is likely to commit a breach of the peace.—GOSHAIN LUCHMAN PERSHAD POOREE v. POHOOP NARAIN POOREE, 24 W. R. 30. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. Aug. 2, 1875.]

UNDER Act XXV. of 1861, s. 62, it is necessary that the direction should be addressed to a particular person, or particular persons, and not to the public generally, and with reference to a particular occasion only, not for a continuance.—Pro., Aug. 17, 1875, 8 Mad H. C. R. Ap. 9.

IN a civil suit to which accused was a party the decree was that the marriage of a certain girl should be arranged for by A, another party to the suit, and that accused, her maternal uncle, should, in the meantime, have her custody only. Notwithstanding this decree, accused gave her away in marriage to B. A prosecuted accused, and the latter was convicted of disobeying a lawful order of a public servant. Held that the conviction could not stand.—CROWN v. NAND LALL Panj Rec., No. 3 of 1876.

A PERSON plying a boat for hire at a distance of three miles from a public ferry cannot be said, with reference to such ferry, to commit "criminal trespass" within the meaning of that term in s. 441 of the Penal Code. If, when directed by the order of a public servant, duly promulgated to him, to abstain from plying a boat for hire at or in the immediate vicinity of a public ferry, a person disobeys such direction, he renders himself liable to punishment under the Penal Code.—MUTHRA v. JAWAHIR, I. L. R., 1 All. 527. [Spankie, J. Dec. 15, 1877.]

WHERE a Magistrate made an order under s. 518 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872), directing one of two rival haut-proprietors to remove his haut to such a distance as to render it useless for the purposes for which it was established, it was held that the order came within the purview of the Full Bench decision in Gopi Mohun Mullick v. Taramoni Chowdhrani (I. L. R., 5 Cal. 7; 4 C. L. R. 309), and might be set aside as in excess of jurisdiction.—SHARUT CHUNDER BANERJEE v. RAMACHURN MOOKERJEE, 4 C. L. R. 410. [Morris and White, JJ. Mar. 19, 1879.]

A MAGISTRATE is not empowered to pass an order under s. 518 of Act X. of 1872 which has more than a temporary operation. The grant of what is, in effect, an order for a perpetual injunction is entirely beyond his powers. When a plaintiff alleged that he had held a haut on his own land for many years on Tuesdays and Fridays: that the defendant had set up a rival haut on these days, and prevented persons from attending the plaintiff's haut; that this led to disturbances which ended in an order being made by the Magistrate prohibiting the plaintiff from holding his haut on the said days, and that the plaintiff suffered loss and damage in consequence: Held that, assuming these facts to be true, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree, declaring, as against the defendant, that the plaintiff had a right to hold his haut on Tuesdays and Fridays.—GOPI MOHUN MULLICK v. TARAMONI CHOWDHRANI, I. L. R., 5 Cal. 7; 4 C. L. R. 309 [Garth, C.J., and Jackson, Pontifex, Ainslie, Birch, Morris, White, Mitter, McDonell, Prinsep, Wilson, and Broughton, JJ. April 17, 1879.]

WHERE an executive officer makes an order, or issues a notification under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it is not within the province of judicial authority to question the propriety or legality of such order or notification until an attempt is made to enforce the exaction of a penalty against a person committing a breach of such order or notification. It then becomes the duty of the judicial authority to consider whether the order is properly made or not.—IN THE MATTER OF SURJANARAIN DASS: EMPRESS v. SURJANARAIN DASS, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 88. [Jackson and Tottenham, JJ. June 15, 1880.]

A MAGISTRATE directed a landholder "to find a clue" in a case of theft "within fifteen days and to assist the police." Held that such order was not authorized by ss. 90 and

91 of Act X. of 1872, and the conviction of such landholder, under ss. 187 and 188 of the Penal Code, for disobedience of such order, was not maintainable.—EMPRESS v. BAKSHI RAM, I. L. R., 3 All. 201. [Pearson, J. Aug. 18, 1880.]

IN the absence of evidence that an order under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), was, in fact, directed to the accused, he cannot legally be convicted under s. 188 of the Penal Code for disobeying such order. Quære.—Whether an order under s. 530 can be directed to others than the unsuccessful party to the proceedings under the section, or whether such an order could properly be directed to the public at large.—In re NOBOKISHORE CHUCKERBUTTY, 7 C. L. R. 291. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Sep. 4, 1880.]

S. 188 of the Penal Code applies to orders made by public functionaries for public purposes, and not to an order made in a civil suit between party and party. The proper remedy for disobedience of an order of injunction passed by a Civil Court is committal for contempt.—IN THE MATTER OF CHANDRAKANTA DE, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 445; 7 C. L. R. 350. [Garth, C.J., and Maclean, J. Nov. 9, 1880.]

IN a case of a dispute between rival parties as to the payment of rents by tenants, a Magistrate has no power, under s. 518 of Act X. of 1872, to make an order that no rents should be collected until such time as the right and title of both parties should have been established by order of a competent Court, and a conviction under s. 188 of the Penal Code for disobeying such an order cannot be sustained.—PROSUNNO COOMAR CHATTERJEE v. EMPRESS, 8 C. L. R. 231. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Jan. 19, 1881.]

AN omission or neglect by a zemindar, when called upon under s. 11 of Reg. XX. of 1817, to nominate some one to fill the office of village-watchman which had become vacant, is not an offence under either s. 187 or s. 188 of the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF KALI PROSUNNO GHOSE, 7 C. L. R. 575. [Morris and Prinsep, JJ. Jan. 19, 1881.]

WHERE a dispute arises as to the right of the possession of lands and buildings, a Magistrate, if he considers a collision between the parties, and a serious breach of the peace, imminent, may properly proceed under ch. 39, instead of ch. 40, of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872). If the Magistrate had jurisdiction, the proceedings, not being judicial, cannot be revised by the High Court. An order to abstain from interference with a temple and its property is an order to abstain from a "certain act within the meaning of s. 518 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872).—E. V. RAMANUJA JEEVARSVAMI v. V. RAMANUJA JEEYAR, I. L. R., 3 Mad. 354. [Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. Aug. 4, 1881.]

ON the 7th of June 1881, the Assistant Commissioner of Hylakandi, in Sylhet, passed an order under s. 518 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872), that the manager of a certain tea garden should discontinue holding a market on Thursday until further notice. On the 25th August 1881, the Assistant Commissioner reviewed this order, and, having come to the conclusion that he had no power to issue a permanent injunction, struck the case off the file, at the same time referring the matter to the Deputy Commissioners. The latter declined to interfere, informing the Assistant Commissioner that he saw no illegality in his order. Thereupon the Assistant Commissioner passed an order, declaring that his order of the 7th of June 1881 remained in full force. On a reference to the High Court made by the Officiating Sessions Judge of Sylhet under s. 297 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), held that the Magistrate having, on the 25th of August 1881, set aside his order of the 7th of June 1881, and struck the case off the file he had no power to revive it without a fresh proceeding.—BRADLY v. JAMESON, I. L. R., 8 Cal. 580. [Cunningham and Tottenham, JJ. Mar. 6, 1882.]

AN order given by an officer superior in rank to an officer in charge of police-stations, commanding an assembly of five or more persons likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace to disperse, is a lawful order within the meaning of s. 480 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872).—EMPRESS v. TUCKER, I. L. R., 7 Bom. 42. [Kemball and Pinhey, JJ. Sep. 28, 1882.]

IN affording special protection to persons assembled for religious worship or religious ceremonies, the law points to congregational rather than private worship; and it may fairly be required of congregations that they should inform the Magistrate or police at what hours they customarily assemble for worship, in order that the rights of other persons may not be unduly curtailed. No sect is entitled to deprive others for ever of the right to use the public street for processions, on the plea of the sanctity of their place of worship, or on the plea that worship is carried on therein day and night. The duties of a Magistrate in cases where the public peace is likely to be disturbed by one sect attempting to prevent another from using the public streets for procession discussed. The principles laid down in Muthialu Chitti v. Bapun Said (I. L. R., 2 Mad. 140) examined, explained, and approved.—SUNDRAM v. QUEEN, I. L. R., 6 Mad. 203. [Turner, C.J., and Innes and Kindersley, JJ. Jan. 9, 1883.]

THE accused was convicted under the Penal Code of disobedience to a general order of the Magistrate, directing the public not to frequent the roads and public places at the village of P between certain hours. Held that the conviction was bad.—In re KOMUL KRISTO BONICK, 12 C. L. R. 231. [Mitter and Field, JJ. Feb. 28, 1883.]

A DISPUTE having arisen between the Mahomedan and Hindu inhabitants of a town as to the right of the latter to carry corpses along a certain public street to the burning-ground, the Magistrate passed an order, purporting to be under s. 539 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872), directing that the Hindus should carry corpses by the nearest route to the burning-ground, and not by the street to the use of which for such purposes the Mahomedans objected. Held that the order of the Magistrate was illegal.—In re NARAYANA, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 49. [Turner, C.J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J. May 26, 1883.]

A PERSON attempted to obtain his recruitment in the police of a district by giving certain information which he knew to be false to the District Superintendent of Police. Held that such person had not thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 177 or s. 188 of the Penal Code, or the offence of attempting to "cheat" within the meaning of s. 415 of that Code.—EMPRESS v. DWARKA PRASAD, I. L. R., 6 All. 97. [Tyrrell, J. Sep. 25, 1883.]

ON the 29th of March 1883, the Municipal Commissioners of Commillah, at a meeting, issued an order under s. 256 of the Bengal Municipal Act of 1876. The accused was tried and convicted before the District Magistrate under s. 188 of the Penal Code, and fined Rs 100 for having disobeyed that order. The Magistrate who tried and convicted the accused was present as Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners at the meeting of the 29th of March, when the order was passed, for disobedience of which the accused was tried and convicted. Held that the conviction was illegal, and must be set aside. Sergeant v. Dale (L. R., 2 Q. B. D. 558) cited and followed.—KHARAK CHAND PAL v. TARACK CHUNDER GUPTA, I. L. R., 10 Cal. 1030. [Prinsep and Macpherson, JJ. Aug. 22, 1884.]

IN May 1883 the District Magistrate of Tipperah held an inquiry as to the possession of certain lands claimed by A and B, and, having found on the evidence taken by him that A was in possession, he passed an order on the 21st of May 1883, declaring that A was entitled to hold possession of the disputed land until evicted in due course of law, and forbidding B and all others to disturb A's possession until such disturbance should be effected in due course of law. Previously to November 1885, B sold an eight-anna share of its interest in the disputed land to C, who, at the time of his purchase, had notice of the order of the 21st of May 1883. In November 1885, B and others went to the disputed lands, and attempted to turn A out of possession by force, and to compel the tenants of the lands to pay rent, and give kabuliyats to B and C. At the time that B and his companions went to the disputed land, the latter were aware of the order of the 21st of May 1883, though none of them was a party to the inquiry then made by the District Magistrate. In December 1885, they were all tried and found guilty of disobedience to an order duly promulgated by a public servant. Held that the conviction was right. Semble.—That a reference by a Magistrate to the police-report, which clearly sets out the probability of a breach of the peace, is a sufficient statement of the reasons for the Magistrate's being satisfied of the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace within the meaning of s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.—GOLUCK CHANDRA PAL v. KALI CHARAN DE, I. L. R., 13 Cal. 175. [Prinsep and Grant, JJ. April 30, 1886.]

IN 1876 a Magistrate passed an order under s. 518 of Act X. of 1872 (Criminal Procedure Code), directing the Saraogis of Etah to take one of their annual religious processions along a particular route and at a particular hour. In 1885, in which year there was no fresh promulgation of the order, the Saraogis took their procession along another route and at a different hour, and for so doing some of them were convicted and sentenced under s. 188 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction was wrong, the order of 1876 having a temporary operation only. Gopi Mohun Mullick v. Taramoni Chowdhrani (I. L. R., 5 Cal. 7) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SHEODIN, I. L. R., 10 All. 115. [Mahmood, J. Nov. 25, 1887.]

A DISTRICT MAGISTRATE, by an order made under s. 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code, after stating that it appeared that one "GCS has recently established a hât at S in the vicinity of K. an old-established hât, held it on the same days, and that, in consequence of the establishment of the new hât, and the endeavours made to induce or force people to frequent the new hât instead of the old one, a serious breach of the peace or riots are imminent," ordered "that the said GCS and all other persons abstain from holding such hât" on those days. The order was duly made and promulgated, but not strictly in accordance with s. 134 of the Code and the orders of Government made thereunder. Notwithstanding the order, one PCA was found exposing goods for sale as a trader at the hât on one of the prohibited days, and he was thereupon charged with disobeying the order of the Magistrate, and convicted of an offence under s. 188 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction was bad, as PCA did not come within the description of the persons intended by the order to be prohibited from "holding" the hât, which referred to "holding" as owner or manager, not as a trader. Held also that the terms of s. 134 of the Code, and the notification made by Government thereunder as to promulgation and issue of an order, are directory, but an omission to follow strictly such direction, though it is an irregularity, does not invalidate the order: where, therefore, it is shown that the order has been brought to the actual knowledge of the person sought to be affected by it, such omission does not prevent the case coming within s. 188 of the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF PARBUTTY CHARAN AICH: PARBUTTY CHURN AICH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 9 [Wilson and Rampini, JJ. Aug. 6, 1888.]

A MAGISTRATE made an order under s. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requiring N to fence a certain well in a public street, or to appear before him, and move to have the order set aside. A copy of this order was affixed to the house of N, but he did not appear. The Magistrate then adopted the procedure prescribed by ss. 136, 140, and made an order requiring N to fence the well by a certain date. N, who was personally served with notice of the above order, did not comply with it. The Magistrate then sanctioned the prosecution of N under s. 188 of the Penal Code. N appeared and produced evidence to prove that he was not liable to fence the well. Held that the accused was guilty of the offence of disobedience to an order duly promulgated by a public servant, and was not entitled to go behind the order, and show that it was one which ought not to have been made. The mode of service of notice of an order under s. 133 considered.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NARAYANA, I. L. R., 12 Mad. 475. [Muttasami Ayyar and Shephard, JJ. May 3, July 10, 1889.] Approved in Queen-Empress v. Bishambar Lal, I. L. R., 13 All. 577, infra. Distinguished in Queen-Empress v. Jusoda Nand, I. L. R., 20 All. 501, infra.

A PERSON against whom an order under s. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is passed, who neglects to take any steps whatever in respect of such order within the time therein specified, either by way of compliance therewith, or by way of objection thereto in the manner prescribed by law, renders himself liable to be proceeded against under s. 188 of the Penal Code without its being necessary to wait until the order has been made absolute. If such order is made absolute under s. 140 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, further proceedings can then be had, under s. 188 of the Penal Code, against the person disobeying the order absolute. When an order under s. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has been made absolute under s. 140, ib., its validity cannot subsequently be questioned. Queen-Empress v. Narayana (I. L. R., 12 Mad. 475) approved.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BISHAMBAR LAL, I. L. R., 13 All. 577. Straight, J. July 27, 1891.

ON the 11th August 1894, the District Magistrate promulgated an order prohibiting the people of the village of Thirukodikaval from using their burning-grounds situated on the southern bank of the Cauvery, and directing them to use other burning-grounds which had been provided. On the 11th May 1895, certain persons in defiance of this order, cremated a corpse at the spot interdicted, and were convicted under ss. 188, 290, Indian Penal Code, but the conviction under s. 188 was reversed on appeal. Held that when persons entitled to use a particular spot dedicated for the communal purpose of cremation, use it for that purpose in a manner neither unusual nor calculated to aggravate the inconveniences necessarily incident to such an act as it is generally performed in this country, they cannot be convicted of a public nuisance on the ground that their act caused material annoyance and discomfort to persons near the place on the occasion referred to. Held, further, that the order of the District Magistrate was not warranted by s. 143, Criminal Procedure Code, or by any other law, and must, therefore, be set aside.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SAMINADHA PILLAI, I. L. R., 19 Mad. 464. [Subramania Ayyar and Davies, JJ. Aug. 13, 14, 25, 1896.]

THE President of a Local Board, acting under Act V. of 1884, issued a notice calling upon a person to remove certain encroachments on a public road within ten days. Held that such a notice was not an order within the meaning of s. 188 of the Indian Penal Code, and a person neglecting to obey it could not be convicted under that section.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SUBRAMANIAN, I. L. R., 20 Mad. 1. [Subramania Ayyar and Davies, JJ. Sep. 11, 1896.]

S. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, does not empower a Magistrate to order the owner of a house standing apart from any public road in its own compound to repair such house. By "persons living or carrying on business in the neighbourhood," injury to whom the power to pass orders under s. 133 is intended to prevent, are meant, not the persons who, in the exercise of their private rights, may use a building supposed to be in a dangerous condition, but unascertained members of the public whose ordinary avocations may take them to the neighbourhood of such building. Queen-Empress v. Narayana (I. L. R., 12 Mad. 475) and Queen-Empress v. Bishamber Lal (I. L. R., 13 All. 577) distinguished. — QUEEN-EMPRESS v. JASODA NAND, I. L. R., 20 All. 501. [Blair and Aikman, JJ. July 5, 1898.]

189. Whoever holds out any threat of injury to any public servant, or to any person in whom he believes that public servant to be interested, for the purpose of inducing that public servant to do any act, or to forbear or delay to do any act, connected with the exercise of the public functions of such public servant, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Threat of injury to public servant.

IN a prosecution for an offence under s. 189 of the Penal Code, the witnesses differed as to the exact words used by the prisoner in threatening the public servant, though they agreed as to the general effect of those words. The Magistrate, however, considered that the offence was clearly proved, and convicted the prisoner. The Sessions Judge, on appeal, affirmed the conviction, observing that it was immaterial what the words used were, and that the intention and effect of the words were plain. Held that the Judge was mistaken in regarding it as immaterial what the words used actually were, and that, on the contrary, it was most material that those words should be before the Court to enable it to ascertain whether, in fact, a threat of injury to the public servant was really made by the accused.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MAHESHRI BAKHSH SINGH, I. L. R., 8 All. 380. [Straight, Offg. C.J. May 22, 1886.]

Ditto.

190 Whoever holds out any threat of injury to any person for the purpose of inducing that person to refrain or desist from making a legal application for protection against any injury to any public servant legally empowered as such to give such protection, or to cause such protection to be given, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Threat of injury to induce person to refrain from applying for protection to public servant.

WHERE the exercise of ecclesiastical jurisdiction is plainly ultra vires, or otherwise unsanctioned by the ordinances of a religious society, or where such ordinances controvert the general law, and, in either case, consequences result which the criminal law was intended to restrain, the Criminal Courts are not at liberty to decline jurisdiction. A Roman Catholic complained to a Magistrate that he had been threatened with an illegal sentence of excommunication, and had been excommunicated by the Ecclesiastical authorities, with a view to prevent him from asserting his his legal rights in defending a civil suit concerning the property of a church. Held that, under the circumstances, the proper course was for the Magistrate to postpone the trial till the complainant proved in a Civil Court the illegality of the action of the Ecclesiastical authorities.—In re DECRUZ, I. L. R., 8 Mad. 140. [Turner, C.J., and Brandt, J. Oct. 6 and Dec. 2, 1884.]

CHAPTER XI.*

OF FALSE EVIDENCE AND OFFENCES AGAINST PUBLIC JUSTICE.

Giving false evidence.

191. Whoever, being legally bound by an oath, or by any express provision of law, to state the truth, or being bound by law to make a declaration upon any subject, makes any statement which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false, or does not believe to be true, is said to give false evidence.

Explanation 1.—A statement is within the meaning of this section, whether it is made verbally or otherwise.

Explanation 2.—A false statement as to the belief of the person attesting is within the meaning of this section, and a person may be guilty of giving false evidence by stating that he believes a thing which he does not believe, as well as by stating that he knows a thing which he does not know.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, in support of a just claim which B has against Z for one thousand rupees, falsely swears on a trial that he heard Z admit the justice of B's claim. A has given false evidence.

(b) A, being bound by an oath to state the truth, states that he believes a certain signature to be the handwriting of Z when he does not believe it to be the handwriting of Z. Here A states that which he knows to be false, and, therefore, gives false evidence.

(c.) A, knowing the general character of Z's handwriting, states that he believes a certain signature to be the handwriting of Z, A, in good faith, believing it to be so. Here A's statement is merely as to his belief, and is true as to his belief, and therefore, although the signature may not be the handwriting of Z, A has not given false evidence.

(d.) A, being bound by an oath to state the truth, states that he knows that Z was at a particular place on a particular day, not knowing anything upon the subject. A gives false evidence, whether Z was at that place on the day named or not.

(e.) A, an interpreter or translator, gives or certifies, as a true interpretation or translation of a statement or document which he is bound by oath to interpret or translate truly, that which is not, and which he does not believe to be, a true interpretation or translation. A has given false evidence.

WHERE a witness was, at the beginning of the day, solemnly affirmed, once for all to speak the truth in all the cases coming before the Court that day. Held that he might be convicted, under section 193 of the Penal Code, of giving false evidence in a suit which came on that day, although he was not affirmed to speak the truth in that suit after it was called on for hearing, and the names of the cases in the day's list were not mentioned when the affirmation was administered.—QUEEN v. VENKATACHALAM PILLAI, 2 Mad. H. C. R. 43. Scotland and Bittleston, JJ. Mar. 15, 1864.

* As to the application of ss. 194, 195, 201 to 203, 211 to 214, 216, 221 to 225 to offences under special or local laws, see s. 40, supra.

As to authority for instituting prosecutions under ss. 193 to 196, 199, 200, 205 to 211, and 228, see the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), s. 195 (b).

As to procedure in case of the offences described in ss. 193, 196, 199, 200, and 205 to 210, see the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV. of 1882), s. 643; and in case of the offence described in s. 228, see the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), ss. 480, 481, 482, and the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV. of 1882), Ch. XII.

As to whipping for offences punishable under s. 193, or defined in ss. 194, 195, and 211, see the Whipping Act (VI. of 1864), ss 4-6.

As to punishment for offences under ss. 193 to 196, 201, 211, and 212, enquired into by a Council of Elders in a Punjab Frontier District or in Baluchistan, see the Punjab Frontier Crimes Regulation (IV. of 1887), s. 14.

AN oath or solemn affirmation is not a sine qua non in the offence of giving false evidence defined in s. 191 of the Penal Code. This offence may be committed by a person who, "being bound by law to make a declaration upon any subject, makes any statement which is false, or does not believe to be true." So that, if the prisoner made such a false statement before the Registrar of Deeds, even though no oath or solemn affirmation had not been administered to him, he was clearly guilty of having given false evidence.—2 W. R. Cr. L. 9. [Trevor, P.J. Jan. 27, 1865.] See also Gobind Chandra v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R., 19 Cal. 355, under s. 193.

THE making of a false statement, without knowledge as to whether the subject-matter of the statement is false or not, is legally a giving of false evidence.—QUEEN v. ECHAN MEERAH, 2 W. R. 47. [Glover, P. J. Mar. 20, 1865.

A STATEMENT taken by a Third-class Magistrate under s. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882), such Magistrate not having authority to carry on the preliminary inquiry in the case, is not evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding within the meaning of ss. 191 and 193 of the Penal Code, such that, when the statement is contradicted afterwards before the Magistrate having jurisdiction, and exercising it in the preliminary inquiry, it will form a sufficient basis for an alternative charge of giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BHARMA I. L. R., 11 Bom. 702. [Sergeant, C.J., and West and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ. Dec. 20, 1886.

AN accused was charged with giving false evidence upon an alternative charge, one statement having been made to a police-officer investigating a case of arson, and the other having been made when he was examined as a witness before the Joint-Magistrate when the case was being inquired into. The two statements were contradictory, and no evidence was given to show which of them was false. It was not proved that the statement made to the police-officer was made in answer to questions put by him, and the only evidence given at the trial with regard to the inquiry upon which the police-officer was engaged, was to the effect that an inquiry was being made about the burning of a house. The jury acquitted the accused, and the case was referred to the High Court by the Sessions Judge, who disagreed with the verdict of acquittal. Held that the verdict was right. Before a conviction in such a case can be sustained, it must, having regard to the provisions of s. 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code, be clearly proved by the evidence that the statement made to the police-officer was a statement in answer to questions put to the accused by the investigating police-officer, and in the absence of such evidence, even though the statement were proved to be false, a conviction could not be sustained. Held, further, that in such a case it is also necessary for the prosecution to establish that the police-constable was making an investigation under ch. 14 of the Criminal Procedure Code. — EMPRESS v. BAIKANTA BAURI, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 349. [Mitter and Macpherson, JJ. Mar. 4, 1889.]

SANCTION under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should be given only on application made for it by some person, who may desire to complain of the particular offence, and whose complaint could not be entertained without such sanction. In the Matter of Banarsi Das (I. L. R., 18 All. 213) and Baperain Surma v. Gouri Nath Dutt (I. L. R., 20 Cal. 474) referred to. The expression "the Court" in the Land Acquisition Act does not include a Collector, nor is there any authority given to the Collector to administer an oath or to require a verification. It is a false statement made under a verification that constitutes an offence under s. 193 of the Penal Code, not a verification oath or solemn affirmation. The Deputy Collector acting under the Land Acquisition Act is not a Judicial Officer he cannot properly be regarded as a Revenue Court within the terms of s. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, his proceedings under the former act are not regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure, nor is he right in requiring a petition put in before him to be verified in accordance with that Code, so as to make any false statement punishable as perjury. The Deputy Collector is not in a position to pass any final order in the matter of value of the land or the right to claim the price fixed A party dissatisfied can claim a reference to the Civil Court, whose duty it is to settle the matter in dispute judicially, therefore, to subject parties, who claimed the right to such a reference to a criminal prosecution, when the matters on which the Deputy Collector had formed an opinion as a Revenue Officer under the Land Acquisition Act must be submitted to the determination of a Court is obviously premature and improper, and is almost certain to operate very prejudicially towards them in the trial before the Civil Court of the same matter. In proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act what may be found to be an exaggeration or over-estimate of the value of land cannot properly constitute a false statement, which would demand a prosecution for perjury, and the fact that some years before the land was offered for sale at a much lower price is no sufficient ground for imputing such an offence. Discretion of the High Court in revision at the hearing of a rule to consider and decide matters in respect to which a rule had been prayed for, but not granted.—DURGA DASS RUKHIT v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 820. [Prinsep and Stanley JJ. Nov. 30, 1899, and Jan. 9, 1900.]

HELD, that where an accused person was examined by a Magistrate for the sake of obtaining information on which proceedings could be taken, the Magistrate, although he might examine him to obtain information, could not legally examine him on oath nor could the accused be said at that stage of the proceedings to be a witness, even though he were examined on oath. There was no authority that being so examined the accused was bound by any express provision of law to state the truth. Consequently any charge for giving false evidence founded on this statement was bad, and it therefore followed that a conviction and sentence founded on this statement as being contrary to another statement made by the accused when examined as a witness at the trial, without any proof of finding that the second statement was false, could not be maintained.—HARI CHARAN SINGH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 455. [Prinsep and Stanley, JJ. Jan. 11, 1900.]

192. Whoever causes any circumstance to exist, or makes any false entry in any book or record, or makes any document containing a false statement, intending that such circumstance, false entry, or false statement, may appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding, or in a proceeding taken by law before a public servant as such, or before an arbitrator, and that such circumstance, false entry, or false statement, so appearing in evidence, may cause any person, who, in such proceeding, is to form an opinion upon the evidence, to entertain an erroneous opinion touching any point material to the result of such proceeding, is said "to fabricate false evidence."

Fabricating false evidence.

Illustrations.

(a.) A puts jewels into a box belonging to Z, with the intention that they may be found in that box, and that this circumstance may cause Z to be convicted of theft. A has fabricated false evidence.

(b.) A makes a false entry in his shop-book for the purpose of using it as corroborative evidence in a Court of Justice. A has fabricated false evidence.

(c.) A, with the intention of causing Z to be convicted of a criminal conspiracy writes a letter in imitation of Z's handwriting, purporting to be addressed to an accomplice in such criminal conspiracy, and puts the letter in a place which he knows that the officers of the police are likely to search. A has fabricated false evidence.

THE term of imprisonment for attempting to fabricate false evidence for the purpose of being used in a stage of judicial proceeding cannot extend beyond one-half of seven years. —QUEEN v. SOONDUR PUTNAICK 3 W. R., 59. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Aug. 7, 1865.]

THE accused put in an application, which he verified, before a Judge of a Court of Small Causes, praying for a re-hearing of his case under s. 119, Act VIII. of 1859, and alleging that he was not aware that a suit had been instituted, or a decree given, against him, though he had authorized a pleader to defend the suit. Held by Loch, J., that the accused was not guilty of an offence under s. 192 of the Penal Code, nor liable to punishment under s. 24, Act VIII. of 1859. The offence contemplated by the former law requires that the document containing the false statement should be made with the intention that it may appear in evidence. The latter law does not require that an application under s. 119, Act VIII. of 1859, such as the accused made, should be verified. Held by Glover, J., contra.—HARAN MUNDUL, 10 W. R. 31; 2 B. L. R. A. Cr. 1. Loch and Glover, JJ. Aug. 10, 1868.

WHERE an accused person is charged with fabricating false evidence, it should be proved that such evidence might cause some one "to form an erroneous opinion touching any point material to the result;" and it has been held that, in false declarations and certificates, the falsity must be in some material point.—REG. v. DAMODHAR RAMCHANDRA KULKARNI, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 68 [Newton and Tucker, JJ. Aug. 13, 1868.]

THE prisoner, a vakil, presented a vakalatnama in the District Munsif's Court, signed by the defendant in a civil suit, authorizing the prisoner to appear for the defendant. The vakalatnama falsely purported to have been executed before the adighari of the village, and to bear the signature of the adighari. The prisoner was convicted under s. 193 of the Penal Code. Held that the case was not brought within the section, and that the prisoner was entitled to his discharge from custody. —In re KEILASUN PUTTER, 5 Mad. H. C. R. 373. [Scotland, C.J., and Innes, J. July 11, 1870.] Referred to in Queen-Empress v. Zakir Husain, I. L. R., 21 All. 159. infra.

A, INTENDING to procure a forged document purporting to be executed by one Chotak, applied to K to accompany A to Gorakhpur, where A said Chotak would be found, and there to draw out a bond for execution by Chotak. In pursuance of this invitation, K, believing that Chotak would execute the bond, accompanied A to Gorakhpur. A took with him his ploughman, named Chetoo, and directed Chetoo to purchase a stamp-paper for the bond, and to give his name and description to the stamp-vendor as Chotak. Chetoo complied with this direction, and the stamp-vendor wrote on the stamp-paper an endorsement to the effect that the purchaser was Chotak, with the description which would apply to that person, but, suspecting false personation, arrested Chetoo, and took him to the Magistrate. On the above facts, the Sessions Judge convicted A of attempt to forge a valuable security, and, under ss. 467 and 511, sentenced him to be rigorously imprisoned for five years. Held that to constitute the offence of attempt under s. 511, Penal Code, there must be an act done with the intention of committing an offence, and for the purpose of committing that offence, and it must be done in attempting the commission of the offence. The provisions of s. 511, Penal Code, do not extend to make punishable as attempts acts done in the mere stage of preparation. Although such are doubtless done towards the commission of the offence, they are not done in the attempt to commit the offence within the meaning of the word "attempt" as used in the section.—QUEEN v. RAMSARUN CHOWBEY, 4 N.-W. WHERE the petitioner was convicted of having voluntarily assisted in concealing stolen railway-pins in a certain person's house and field, with a view to having such innocent person punished as an offender, held that the Magistrate was right in convicting and punishing the petitioner for the two separate offences of fabricating false evidence for use in a stage of a judicial proceeding under s. 193 of the Penal Code, and of voluntarily assisting in concealing stolen property under s. 144, Penal Code.—EMPRESS v. RAMESHAR RAI, I. M INSTIGATED Z to personate C, and to purchase in C's name certain stamped paper, in consequence of which the vendor of the stamped paper endorsed C's name on such paper as the purchaser of it. M acted with the intention that such endorsement might be used against C in a judicial proceeding. Held that the offence of fabricating false evidence had been actually committed, and that M was properly convicted of abetting the commission of such offence. Queen v. Ramsarun Chowbey (4 N.-W. WHERE the Magistrate of the district discharged an accused person upon the ground that the fabrication of false evidence by him to be used in his defence on a criminal charge was not an offence falling within s. 192, the Chief Court, on the revision side, set aside the Magistrate's order, and directed him to continue the proceedings, which his order discharging the accused had terminated.—EMPRESS v. JIWAN SINGH, Panj. Rec., No. 10 of 1880.

S. 35 of the Evidence Act, which provides "that any entry in an official public book, which is duly made by a public servant in the execution of his duty, is of itself a relevant fact," does not make the public book evidence to show that a particular entry has not been made in it. S. 466 of the Penal Code is not intended to apply to cases where a public officer, or a person acting for a public officer, whose duty it is to make entries in a public book, knowingly makes a false entry, but to cases where a certificate or other document is forged by some unauthorized person with a view to make it appear that it was duly issued by a public officer. The accused, in order to save an estate from forfeiture, made a false entry of rent received in a public book kept by him for the purpose of informing the Collector as to the rents which had been paid into the Collectorate, and as to what estates the rents were in arrear, so that he might take steps to enforce payment, and was convicted by the Sessions Judge of an offence under s. 465 of the Penal Code. Held, on appeal, that the accused ought properly to have been convicted under s. 192 of the Code, the provisions of that section not being confined to false evidence to be used in judicial proceedings.—IN THE MATTER OF JUGGUN LALL, 7

WHERE the date of a document, which would otherwise not have been presented for registration within the time, is altered for the purpose of getting it registered, the offence committed is not forgery, where there is nothing to show that it was done "dishonestly or fraudulently" within cl. 2, s. 464 of the Penal Code, but fabricating false evidence within s. 192.—In re MIR EKRAR ALI: EMPRESS v. MIR EKRAR ALI, I. A POLICE-OFFICER, who had suppressed a document entrusted to him to forward to his superior officer, made a false entry in his official diary that the document had been so forwarded, intending that, if he were prosecuted under the Police Act for suppressing the document, such entry might be used as evidence in his behalf that he had so forwarded the document. Held that, inasmuch as to constitute the offence of fabricating false evidence, defined in s. 192 of the Penal Code, the evidence fabricated must be admissible evidence, and as, if such police-officer had been prosecuted under the Police Act, the entry in the diary would not have been admissible in his behalf, though, contrary to his intention, it might have been used against him, such police-officer was improperly convicted, in respect of such entry, of fabricating false evidence punishable under s. 193 of the Penal Code. Held also that such police-officer's intention in making such entry being to screen himself from punishment, he was not punishable under s. 218 of the Code.—EMPRESS v. GAURI SHANKAR, I. FABRICATION.

THE term "fabrication" in s. 193 refers to the fabrication of false documentary evidence to be used in a suit, so that to convict under this section it is essential to aver and to prove that the fabricated documents were intended for that purpose. The illegal concealment by act or omission contemplated by s. 120 of the Code has reference to the existence of a design on the part of third persons to fabricate evidence.—QUEEN v. CHARGE AGAINST, AND TRIAL OF, TWO OR MORE PERSONS TO BE SEPARATE.

IN cases of giving false evidence a separate charge against each prisoner must be framed, and a separate trial held of each charge.—PRO., Mar. 15, 1867, 3 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 32.

A CONVICTION for false evidence was upheld in a case where the false statement was to stop the prosecution of certain Brahmins on a charge of riot or dacoity and murder. The commitment and trial of several persons on separate charges, each man's statement forming a distinct offence, approved.—QUEEN v. BHAIRO MISSER, 7 W. R. 51. [Norman, J. April 1, 1867.]

A PERSON accused of perjury is entitled to have the specific charge made against him tried quite independently of a like charge against another person, and the Court of Session must find judicially whether all, or, if not all, which of the particular charges of perjury, where there is more than one charge, is made out against each prisoner. A conviction for perjury, moreover, should not be sustained on the bare testimony of one witness.—QUEEN v. KHOAB LALL, 9 W. R. 66. [Phear and Hobhouse, JJ. May 12, 1868.]

IT is wholly incorrect to charge a number of persons jointly with intentionally giving false evidence under s. 193, Penal Code. A charge under that section should show what the statement is which the accused persons, or any of them, are alleged to have made, and it should disclose the exact date on which the offence charged was committed, and the Court or officer before whom the false evidence was given.—QUEEN v. MOHARAJ MISSER, 16 W. R. 47; 7 B. L. R. Ap. 66. [Macpherson and Glover, JJ. Sep. 18, 1871.]

WHERE several persons are accused of having given false evidence in the same proceeding, they should be tried separately. A, S, B, D, and P were jointly tried, A in respect of three receipts for the payments of money, produced by him in evidence in a judicial proceeding, on three charges of falsely using as genuine a forged document, and on three charges of using evidence known to be false; S, B, D, and P on charges of giving false evidence in the same judicial proceeding as to such payments. The Court (Straight, J.), being unable to say that the accused persons had not been prejudiced in their defence by having been improperly tried together, set aside the convictions, and ordered a fresh trial of each of the accused separately.—EMPRESS v. ANANT RAM, I. L. R. 4 All. 203. [Straight, J. Feb. 13, 1882.]

S. 51, ch. 6 of Act I. of 1879, enacts that, "subject to such rules as may be made by the Governor-General in Council as to the evidence which the Collector may require, allowance shall be made by the Collector for impressed stamps spoiled in the cases hereinafter mentioned," &c. According to a rule made with reference to that section, "the Collector may require every person claiming a refund under ch. 6 of the said Act, or his duly-authorized agent, to make an oral deposition on oath," &c. Held, therefore, that the Collector himself is the officer, and no other, to whom power is given by law to make inquiries into applications for allowances for spoiled stamps, to take evidence on oath in reference thereto, and to grant or refuse such applications, and he cannot delegate his authority in the matter. Held, therefore, where a person had applied for a refund under ch. 6 of Act I. of 1879, and the Collector made over the application for inquiry to a Deputy Collector, that the Deputy Collector was not entitled to put the witnesses produced by the applicant on their oaths, and consequently, in reference to the statements of such witnesses, no charge under s. 181 or s. 193 of the Penal Code was sustainable. In prosecutions for giving false evidence under s 193 of the Penal Code, the case of each person accused should be separately inquired into, and, if committed for trial, separately tried. It is wholly erroneous to include them in one joint charge. It is not of itself sufficient to warrant a conviction for giving false evidence that an accused person has made one statement on oath at one time, and a directly contradictory one at another. The charge must not only allege which of such statements is false, but the prosecutor must be prepared with confirmatory evidence, independent of the other contradictory statement, to establish the falsity of that which is impeached as untrue.* R. v. Jackson (Lewis C. C. 6, 270), Reg. v. Wheatland (8 C. & P. 238), and Rex. v. Harris (5 B. & Ald. 926) referred to. S. 455 of Act X. of 1872 (Criminal Procedure Code) is no authority for framing against a person accused of giving false evidence, who has made one statement on oath on one occasion, and a directly contradictory one on oath on another occasion, a charge in the "alternative," that word, as used in that section, meaning that where the facts which can be proved make it doubtful what particular description of offence an accused person has committed, the charge may be so varied or alternated as to guard against his escaping conviction through technical difficulties. Held, therefore, where three persons were committed for trial jointly charged with "having, on or about the 26th September 1881, or the 18th October 1881, being legally bound upon oath to state the truth, knowingly on those days, regarding the same subject, made contradictory statements upon oath," and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 193 of the Penal Code, and such persons were jointly tried on such charge that such charge was bad for being single and joint against the three accused persons, instead of several and specific in regard to each of them; that it was further bad, because it did not distinctly and in terms allege which of the statements was false; that, assuming a committal upon so faulty a charge should be allowed to stand, the Court of Session should have prepared a fresh charge against each of the accused persons, specifically setting forth the statement alleged to be false, and should then have proceeded to try each of them separately; and that, there being no evidence that either of the statements made by two of such persons was false, except that it was contradicted by the other, the charge against such persons was not sustainable, there being no sufficient evidence that either of the statements was false.—EMPRESS v. NIAZ ALI, I. WHERE three persons, of whom one was a pleader, were tried together and convicted under s. 181 of the Penal Code of having made false statements on solemn affirmation about the same matter in the course of an inquiry into the conduct of the pleader under the provisions of the Legal Practitioners Act, held that the conviction of the pleader was bad, as his statement was improperly taken from him on solemn affirmation. Held also that the trial of the three prisoners together was a grave error of procedure vitiating the trial. Held further that, an inquiry under the Legal Practitioners Act being a judicial proceeding, false statements on solemn affirmation made by the witnesses therein should be charged and tried separately under s. 193 of the Penal Code.—SUBBA v. QUEEN, I. INTENTIONAL omission on the part of the decree-holder to make the statement in his application of any adjustment between the parties after decree, whether such adjustment has or has not been previously certified to the Court, amounts to an offence under s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV. of 1860). Paupayya v. Narasannah (I. CHARGE, NATURE OF EVIDENCE NECESSARY TO PROVE.

HELD by the majority of the Court (Campbell, J., dissenting) that the evidence of one witness uncorroborated is not legally sufficient for a conviction of perjury.—QUEEN v. LAL CHAND COWRAH CHOWKEEDAR, 5 W. IN a case of giving false evidence the strictest and most accurate proof is necessary, and the testimony of a single witness unsupported by corroborative evidence is insufficient for a conviction. — QUEEN v. MOHIMA CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY, 5 W. R. 77. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. May 7, 1866.]

COMPARISON of signatures is one kind of corroboration which should justify conviction on the testimony of a single witness in a case of false evidence.—QUEEN v. BAKHOREE CHOWBEY, 5 W. R. 98. [Seton-Karr, J. June 5, 1866.]

UNSATISFACTORY conviction for perjury, where the evidence was balanced as to numbers, and where the story for the prosecution was improbable, reversed.—QUEEN v. POOSA RAM, 6 W. R. 11. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. June 25, 1866.]

IN a case of false evidence it is necessary to prove the deposition alleged to contain the false statement.—QUEEN v. BHAKOAS TUTTUM, 7 W. R. 13 [Norman, J. Jan. 14, 1867.]

A PRISONER'S inability to say where his son was on the 4th Pous is no evidence on which to direct a jury to convict him of false evidence, for saying that on the day previous (3rd Pous) his son was ill at home.—QUEEN v. SHEIKH TUFANI, 8 W. R. 26. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. June 24 1867.]

IT is essential to a charge under s. 193 of the Penal Code that the prosecution should make out that there was, on the day stated in the charge, a judicial proceeding pending, and that the prisoner, in the course of that proceeding, made the statement alleged to be false. The particular stage of the proceeding should be mentioned in the charge. Evidence should be given that the accused really made the statement which he is charged to have made. The knowledge by the Sessions Judge of the handwriting of the presiding officer of the Court in which the statement was made is not legal evidence of such statement having been made.—QUEEN v. FUTTICK alias FUTEAH BISWAS, 10 W. R. 37; 1 B. L. R. A. Cr. 13. [Phear and Hobhouse, JJ. Sep. 10, 1868.]

THE true rule in a case of giving false evidence is that no man can be convicted of such offence except on proof of facts which, if accepted as true, show, not merely that it is incredible, but that it is impossible that the statements of the party accused made on oath can be true. If the inference from the facts proved falls short of this, there is nothing on which a conviction can stand, because, assuming all that is proved to be true, it is still possible that no crime was committed. —QUEEN v. AHMED ALLY, 11 W. R. 25. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. April 5, 1869.]

IN the case of giving false evidence under s. 193 of the Penal Code, the statement which the accused is charged with having made before the Magistrate should be clearly proved to have been made by him. The procedure in the case of a charge under this section pointed out.—QUEEN v. SIDDHOO, 13 W. R. 56. [Loch and Hobhouse, JJ. April 9, 1870.]

THE evidence of one witness in cases of perjury is sufficient to establish the factum of the statement which is charged as being false. The measure of punishment is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Court of Session.—QUEEN v. ISSEN CHUNDER GHOSE PATTRI, 14 W. R. 53. [Jackson and Mitter, JJ. Sep. 12, 1870.] But see rulings, supra.

To establish the offence of giving false evidence, direct proof of the falsity of the statement on which the perjury is assigned is essential. But, as legitimate evidence for the purpose, the law makes no distinction between the testimony of a witness directly falsifying such statement and the contradictory statement of the person charged, although not made on oath. Such a statement, when satisfactorily proved, is quite as good evidence in proof of the charge as the criminatory statement of a person charged with any other offence, and on precisely the same ground—that it is an admission of the accused person inconsistent with his innocence. As to the weight to be given to contradictory statements, the sound rule is that a charge of perjury is not maintainable upon proof of one such statement not on oath, or more than one if proved by a single witness only, unless supported by confirmatory evidence tending to show the falsity of the statement in the charge. With respect to the kind or amount of confirmatory proof required, it must be considered in each case whether the particular evidence offered is sufficient to induce a belief in the truth of the contradictory statement or direct testimony.—REG v. ROSS, 6 Mad. H. C. R. 342. [Scotland, C.J., and Innes, J. Aug. 4, 1871.]

IT is a mistaken view of the law to suppose that prisoners in appeal ought to have the benefit of any doubt with reference to any portion of the evidence. The doubt shown must be of the strongest kind before the Appellate Court should be justified in interfering.—QUEEN v. RAMLUCHUN SINGH, 18 W. R. 15. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. June 11, 1872.]

IN a case of giving false evidence the English record written by the Magistrate was put in to prove what the accused had stated before him. The document was not interpreted to the accused in the language in which it was given, or which he understood; nor was it read over in accordance with the requirements of s. 339, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872) in the presence of the person then accused. Held that the English record of the Magistrate was not legal evidence under the Evidence Act (I. of 1872), s. 91, of what the prisoner said before the Magistrate. Charges of perjury ought to be based strictly upon the exact words which are used by the person who is charged; and no evidence which does not profess to give those exact words can alone be a safe foundation for a conviction.—QUEEN v. MUNGUL DAS, 23 W. R. 28. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Jan 28, 1875.]

IN a prosecution for intentionally giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding under the Penal Code, s 193, it is for the prosecution to show clearly that the prisoner's statements were false.—QUEEN v. SARJAN MIYA, 25 W. R. 23. [Glover and McDonell, JJ. Feb. 28, 1876.]

WHERE the accused was charged under s. 193 of the Penal Code with having given false evidence, in that he denied having made certain statements which he was alleged to have made to the Inspector of Police, that officer was examined, and merely put in two documents containing the statements alleged as the records of what had taken place. Held that these documents being inadmissible in evidence under s 119 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), evidence ought to have been given as to what was actually stated by the accused to the Inspector of Police.—IN THE MATTER OF SHEIKH DABU, 6 C. L. R. 47. [Tottenham and Maclean, JJ. Feb. 20, 1880.]

FAILURE to comply with the provisions of ss. 182 and 183, Act X of 1877 (Civil Procedure Code) in a judicial proceeding is an informality which renders the deposition of an accused inadmissible in evidence on a charge of giving false evidence based on such deposition, and, under s. 91 of Act I. of 1872 (Evidence Act), no other evidence of such deposition is admissible.—IN THE MATTER OF MAYADEB GOSSAMI: EMPRESS v. MAYADEB GOSSAMI, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 762; 8 C. L. R. 292. [Cunningham and Maclean, JJ Feb. 22, 1881.]

NEITHER the words, "shall answer all questions," in s. 118 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), nor the words, "shall be bound to answer all questions," in s. 119 of the same Code (corresponding with s. 161 of the new Code), constitute "an express provision of the law to state the truth" within the meaning of s. 191 of the Penal Code. Ss. 118 and 119 are merely intended to oblige persons to give such information as they can to the police in answer to the questions which may be put to them, and they impose no legal obligation on those persons to speak the truth.—EMPRESS v. KASIM KHAN AND EMPRESS v. MUSSAMUT DAHIA, I. L. R., 7 Cal. 121; 8 C. L. R. 300 [Garth, C.J., and Pontifex, Morris Mitter, and McDonell, JJ. April 13, 1881.] But see the following ruling:—

S. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882) makes it obligatory on a person examined in the course of a police-investigation under ch. 14 to answer truly all questions put to him (other than questions the answers to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge, or to a penalty or forfeiture); and such person, if he knowingly answers falsely, commits the offence of giving false evidence in a stage of judicial proceeding under s. 193 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PARSHRAM RAYSING, I. CHARGE, PARTICULARS TO BE SET OUT IN.

THOUGH a charge does not distinctly specify the false statement on which the evidence of perjury is attempted to be established, the omission is not material if the accused has not been prejudiced thereby.—QUEEN v. BHUTTOO LALLJEE, 2 W. R. 51. [Jackson, J. Mar. 23, 1865.]

A CHARGE of giving false evidence should specify the false evidence which the prisoners are supposed to have given.—QUEEN v. FAZUL MEEAH, 5 W. R. 71. [Norman and Campbell, JJ. April 17, 1866.]

IN charges of false evidence under s. 193, Penal Code, the charge should specifically state what words or expressions the accused is charged with having uttered, and in what respect they are supposed to be false.—IN THE MATTER OF DOWLUT MUNSHEE, 8 W. R. 95. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Dec. 14, 1867.]

IN framing a charge for giving false evidence under s. 193 of the Penal Code, the charge should be precise, and where the accused is charged with giving false evidence on three different occasions, each occasion should form the subject of a distinct head in the charge. Amendments in a charge ought to be made formally, and should appear on the face of the record.—QUEEN v. FROJDAR ROY, 9 W. R. 14. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson JJ. Feb. 8, 1868.]

IN a case of giving false evidence the charge should show the particular matter in respect of which the accused is put on his trial; and only so much of the prisoner's statement ought to be set out as is necessary in order to show the particular false statements relied on by the prosecution.—QUEEN v. SOONDER MOHOORAE, 9 W. R. 25 [Macpherson and Jackson, JJ. Mar. 2, 1868.]

CHARGES of perjury should contain a distinct assertion with regard to each statement intended to be characterized as perjury, that it was made, that it is untrue in fact, and that the accused knew it to be so when he made it; and the investigation of the Court should be directed to each of those points singly. It does not follow that all contradictions on oath by opposing witnesses necessarily involve perjury, nor is the making of a document without authority always forgery.—QUEEN v. KALICHURN LAHOOREE, 9 W. R. 54. [Kemp and Phear, JJ. April 3, 1868.]

IN a case under s. 193, as it is essential that the charge should show, not only the judicial proceeding in which the prisoner is accused of having given false evidence, but the particular stage of the proceeding at which the evidence was given, the proper way to prove that judicial proceeding took place is to produce the record thereof.—QUEEN v. FUTTICK alias FUTTEAH BISWAS, 10 W. R. 37; 1 B. L. R. A. Cr. 13. [Phear and Hobhouse, JJ. Sep. 10, 1868.]

A CHARGE under s. 193 should specify the judicial proceeding in a stage of which the alleged false evidence was given, and should contain the exact words as definitely and specifically as possible which constitute the false evidence.—MEWA SINGH v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 36 of 1869.

A PERSON who is called upon to answer to a charge of giving false evidence, should know exactly what is the false evidence imputed to him. A charge "that he, on or about the 15th April 1871, gave false evidence," is not sufficiently specific. Although the verification of plaints containing false statements is punishable according to the provisions of the law for the time being in force for the punishment of giving or fabricating false evidence, still it is not quite the same thing as giving false evidence. Three separate offences should not be lumped together in a single charge, but each offence should form a separate head of charge, with reference to which there should be a distinct finding and a distinct sentence.—QUEEN v. SHEO CHURUN, 3 N.-W. P. 314. [Pearson, J. Sep. 4, 1871.]

A MAGISTRATE making a commitment for giving false evidence must set out the precise words, recorded as used by the accused, containing the statement which he undertakes to prove false and not state the effect on those words. In the High Court it is the practice to set out in the charge the substance and, as nearly as possible, the words of the statement alleged to be false. Where a charge did not distinctly set out the statement alleged to be false, but it appeared that the accused perfectly understood what was the alleged statement, and was not prejudiced in his defence, the Court refused to interfere.—QUEEN v. BOODHUN AHIR, 17 W. R. 32. [Loch and Ainslie, JJ. Feb. 12, 1872.]

WHEN certain charges did not set out the exact statements made by witnesses which the Magistrate intended to prove false, but the defect was not such as to mislead the accused, the High Court declined to interfere under s. 426 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), but warned the Magistrate to be careful for the future.—QUEEN v. ABHYA THAKOOR, 17 W. R. 33. [Loch and Amslie, JJ. Feb. 24, 1872.]

CHARGES of perjury ought to be based strictly upon the exact words which are used by the person who is charged; and no evidence which does not profess to give those exact words can alone be a safe foundation for a conviction.—QUEEN v. MUNGAL DAS, 23 W. R. 28. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Jan. 28, 1875.]

S. 455 of Act X. of 1872 applies to cases in which, not the facts are doubtful, but the application of the law to the facts is doubtful. Judgment in the alternative cannot be passed in cases in which it is doubtful whether the accused person is guilty of any one of the several offences charged, but where it is doubtful of which of those offences he is guilty. The accused persons were committed for trial under an erroneous and untenable alternative charge under s. 193 of the Penal Code. The Court of Session amended the charge under s. 193, and added charges under ss 201 and 203. It was doubtful whether the amendment and addition were not likely to prejudice the accused in their defence. The alleged false evidence, and not its assumed substance and purport, should be set forth in a charge under s. 193.—QUEEN v. JAMURHA, 7 N.-W. P. 137. [Pearson, J. Feb. 4, 1875.]

IF a Court of Session proceeds to take action under s. 477 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it must, in the first instance, frame a charge so as to enable the accused to know the exact nature of the offence he is alleged to have committed. A charge is a precise formulation of the specific accusation made against a person who is entitled to know its nature at the earliest stage. After the accusation has been formulated in the shape of a charge, the Sessions Court may then either commit the accused for trial before itself upon the charge so framed, or admit him to bail for the same purpose. R was examined as a witness by the Sessions Judge in a case. On the 15th of February the Sessions Judge delivered judgment in that case, and on the same day purporting to act under s. 477 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, had R arrested and committed to jail on charges under ss. 193, 466, and 471 of the Penal Code. The 25th of February was fixed for commencing the preliminary inquiry. No proceeding was drawn up or charges framed on the 15th. On the 16th of February an order was recorded by the Sessions Judge as follows: "In the course of the Sessions trial decided yesterday, I came to the opinion, for reasons stated in my judgment then delivered, that R has committed offences under ss. 193, 466, and 471 of the Penal Code, and that it is my duty to hold an inquiry preliminary to committing him to the High Court to be tried for those offences. R was yesterday arrested and committed to jail. There was then no time owing to the lateness of the hour to draw up this formal proceeding. He will be produced before me, as directed in the warrant, on the 25th of February, when evidence will be taken." Held that the proceeding of the 16th of February contained no particulars of the statements made and acts done by R, upon which perjury and forgery were charged against him, and was not in any sense a charge or order of commitment, and was not warranted by law.—REILY v. KING-EMPEROR, I. L. R., 28 Cal. 434. [Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ. April 26, 1901.]

CHARGE, WHERE THERE ARE SEVERAL FALSE STATEMENTS.

IN framing a charge for giving false evidence under s. 193 of the Penal Code, the charge should be precise, and, where the accused is charged with giving false evidence on three different occasions, each occasion should form the subject of a distinct head in the charge. Amendments in a charge ought to be made formally, and should appear on the face of the record.—QUEEN v. FEOJDAR ROY, 9 W. R. 14. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. Feb 8, 1868.]

THE making of any number of false statements in the same deposition is one aggregate case of giving false evidence. Charges of false evidence cannot be multiplied according to the number of false statements contained in the depositions.—PRO., May 1, 1871; 6 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 27.

CIVIL COURT, FALSE EVIDENCE BEFORE.

WHEN a Civil Court directs that criminal proceedings be taken against a party to a suit before it for perjury or forgery, the High Court has no power, on an appeal being preferred against the decision of that Court, to direct that such proceedings be stayed until the appeal shall have been heard and determined.—IN THE MATTER OF RAM PRASAD HAZRA, B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 426. [Peacock, C.J., and Bayley, Seton-Karr, Pundit, and Macpherson, JJ. Feb. 12, 1866.]

THE discretion vested in a Civil Court under s. 169. Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), of sanctioning a criminal charge of perjury, is one that should be most carefully exercised. Remarks on the present case in which the discretion was improperly exercised.—QUEEN v. POOSA RAM, 6 W. R. 11. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. June 25, 1866.]

THE failure of the Civil Court in a case of perjury to make a memorandum of the evidence of the accused when examined before it does not vitiate the depositions, if the evidence itself was duly recorded in the language in which it was delivered in such Court.—IN THE CASE OF BEHAREE LAL BOSE, 9 W. R. 69. [Loch and Kemp, JJ. May 16, 1868.]

WHERE a Civil Court sends an offence under section 193 of the Penal Code to a Magistrate for investigation and commitment, if necessary, the Magistrate cannot return the case to the Civil Court; nor can the Civil Court, after it has sent a case to the Magistrate, commit it to the Sessions. The Magistrate should himself proceed with the case, and take evidence therein.—QUEEN v. JAN MAHOMED, 12 W. R. 41; 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 47. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Aug 3, 1869.]

A CIVIL COURT has no power to order the commitment of persons for offences under ss. 471, 465, and 193 of the Penal Code without holding the preliminary inquiry required by s. 474 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872).—QUEEN v. RUNGATOONEE, 22 W. R. 52. [Markby and Mitter, JJ. Aug. 5, 1874.]

ALTHOUGH s. 16 of Act XXIII. of 1861 gives Civil Courts powers similar to those conferred on Civil and Criminal Courts alike by s. 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872), the whole law as to the procedure in cases within those sections is now embodied in s. 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In a suit brought to recover possession of certain property, the Judge decided one of the issues raised in the plaintiff's favour, but, on the important issue as to whether the plaintiff ever had possession, he found for the defendant. The plaintiff was not examined, but on the issue as to possession he called two witnesses. The Judge disbelieved their statements, and considering that the plaintiff had failed to prove his case, he gave judgment for the defendant without requiring him to give evidence on that issue. In the concluding paragraph of his judgment, the Judge directed the depositions of the two witnesses above referred to, together with the English memoranda of their evidence, to be sent to the Magistrate, with a view to his inquiring whether or not they had voluntarily given false evidence in a judicial proceeding: and he further directed the Magistrate to inquire whether or not the plaintiff had abetted the offence of giving false evidence, on the ground that, as the witnesses were the plaintiff's servants, he must personally have influenced them, and also to inquire whether the plaint which the plaintiff had attested contained averments which he knew to be false. On a motion to quash this order, held that, under s. 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Judge has no power to send a case to a Magistrate, except when, after having made such preliminary inquiry as may be necessary, he is of opinion that there is sufficient ground (i.e., ground of a nature higher than mere surmise or suspicion) for directing judicial inquiry into the matter of a specific charge, and that the Judge is bound to indicate the particular statements or averments in respect of which he considers that there is ground for a charge into which the Magistrate ought to inquire, and that the order was bad, because the Judge had made no preliminary inquiry, and because it was too vague and general in its character.—IN THE MATTER OF BAIJOO LALL: REG. v. BAIJOO LALL, I. L. R., 1 Cal. 450. [Macpherson and Morris, JJ. Aug. 23, 1876.]

THE power of a Civil Court to commit a case to the Court of Session, after completing the preliminary inquiry, is given by s. 474 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), and is restricted to the class of cases provided in that section, viz., where offences exclusively triable by a Court of Session are committed before the Civil Court. S. 471 of the Code of 1872 (or s. 476 of the Code of 1882) deals with a more extended class of cases, viz., all those mentioned in ss. 467, 468, and 469 of the Code of 1872 in which, not merely a Civil Court, but any Court, Civil or Criminal, and whether possessing or not possessing the power to commit to the Court of Session, is of opinion that there is sufficient ground for holding an inquiry; and it enacts the procedure to be followed by the Court, which may elect to adopt one of two courses, that is to say, it may either commit a case to the Court of Session, if and where it has the power to do so, or, if it has not that power, or is not disposed to exercise it, it may send the case to a Magistrate having power to try, or commit for trial, the accused person for the offence charged.—IMPERATRIX v. POPAT NATHU, I. L. R., 4 Bom. 287. [Pinhey and Melvill, JJ. Dec. 17, 1879.]

AN order made under s. 471 of Act X. of 1872, sending a case for inquiry to a Magistrate, is not necessarily bad, because the Court did not make a preliminary inquiry before making such order. The law requires only such preliminary inquiry "as may be necessary." Held, therefore, where a Munsif, being of opinion that both the parties to a suit tried by him had given false evidence therein on certain points, sent the case for inquiry to the Magistrate under s. 471 of Act X. of 1872, with a proceeding embodying the facts of the case, and charging the parties respectively with giving false evidence on such points, and there was nothing to show that any inquiry that the Munsif could have made was necessary, or would have put the Magistrate into a better position for dealing with the case than he was in, that the Munsif's proceedings were not bad, because he did not hold a preliminary inquiry.—EMPRESS v. JUALA PRASAD, I. L. R., 5 All. 62. [Tyrrell, J. July 29, 1882.]

COMMITMENT.

A MAGISTRATE, to whom the case of a person charged with giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding is transferred for investigation, cannot commit to the Sessions without himself recording evidence, and examining the complainant and his witnesses in the presence of the accused.—QUEEN v. RAMDHUN SINGH, 11 W. R. 22. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. Mar. 17, 1869.]

THE Sessions Judge has no power to commit a man for having given false evidence before the Magistrate, but he can commit him for having given false evidence in his own Court.—QUEEN v. HARDYAL, 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 35. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. July 13, 1869.]

A COURT OF SESSION is competent and ought to proceed to the trial of a prisoner who is brought before it upon a charge exhibited by a Magistrate who is authorized to make a commitment, notwithstanding any irregularity or defect of form in recording the complaint.—In re NARAIN, 14 W. R. 34: 5 B. L. R. 660. [Couch, C J., and Bayley, Kemp, Jackson and Phear, JJ. Aug 23, 1870.] Overrules Queen v. Mahim Chandra Chuckerbutty, 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 67.

THE Criminal Procedure Code does not authorize the Sessions Judge to quash a commitment on the ground of illegality. If the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the order or commitment should be annulled as illegal, he should move the High Court to annul the same.—QUEEN v. MATA DYAL, 4 N.-W. P. 6. [Pearson, J. Jan. 13, 1872.]

GIVING false evidence is "an offence committed in contempt of the authority" of a Court within the meaning of s. 473 of Act X. of 1872. Reg. v. Naranbeg (10 Bom. H. C. R. 73) and the ruling in 7 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 17, followed. Queen v. Kultaran Singh (I. L. R., 1 All. 129) and Queen v. Jagat Mull (Ibid, 162) dissented from. Where the accused was, by a Magistrate, First Class, committed for trial by the Sessions Court on a charge of having given false evidence in a judicial proceeding before the Sessions Judge, there being no Assistant Sessions Judge or Joint Sessions Judge, held that the commitment could not be quashed, there being no error in law, and the case must, therefore, be transferred for trial to another Court of Session. In such a case as the above, the better course would be for the Magistrate to try the case himself, and, if he is incompetent to pass a sufficient sentence, for the Sessions Judge to refer the case to the High Court for enhancement of sentence.—REG. v. GAJIKOM RANU, I. L. R., 1 Bom. 311. [Melvill and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ. Aug. 24, 1876.]

L MADE a complaint against S by petition, in which he only charged S of having committed offences punishable under ss. 193 and 218 of the Penal Code, but in which he also accused S of acts which, if the accusation had been true, would have amounted to an offence punishable under s. 466 of that Code with seven years' imprisonment. The Magistrate inquired into the charges against S under ss. 193 and 218 of the Penal Code, and directed his discharge. L then applied to the Court of Session to direct S to be committed for trial on the ground that he had been improperly discharged, which the Court of Session did, and S was committed for trial charged under s. 218 of the Code, and was acquitted by the Court of Session. The Court of Session then, under s. 472 of Act X. of 1872 charged L with offences punishable under ss. 193, 195, 211, and 211 and 109 of the Penal Code, and committed him for trial. Held that such commitment was not bad by reason that an offence under s. 193 of the Penal Code is not exclusively triable by a Court of Session. Held also per Stuart C.J. (Spankie, J., doubting).—That the High Court is competent in the exercise of its power of revision under s. 297 of Act X. of 1872 to quash a commitment made by a Court of Session under the provisions of s. 472 of that Act (or s. 477 of the new Act). Held also per Spankie, J.—That the Court of Session was competent, notwithstanding that L had only charged S with offences under ss 193 and 218 of the Penal Code, to charge L with offences under ss. 195 and 211, if such offences had come under its cognizance. — EMPRESS v. LACHMAN SINGH, I. L. R., 2 All 398. [Stuart, C.J., and Spankie, J. June, 11, 1879.]

COMPENSATION.

A MAGISTRATE having jurisdiction is authorized by law in making an order under s. 270, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), directing the complainant to make amends to the accused, notwithstanding that the complainant is to take his trial for perjury.—QUEEN v. ROOPUN RAI, 15 W. R. 9; 6 B. L. R. 296. [Jackson and Ainslie, JJ. Jan. 26, 1871.]

THE complainant was directed to pay Rs. 50 as compensation to the accused, or, in default, to suffer simple imprisonment for one month under s. 560 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and sanction was also granted to prosecute him for offences under ss. 211 and 193 of the Penal Code. Held that, if the Magistrate thought that this was a case in which a prosecution under ss. 211 and 193 of the Penal Code should be sanctioned, he ought not to have taken action under the provisions of s. 560 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held also that the order for imprisonment in default of payment of the compensation awarded was illegal. Ramjeevan Koormi v. Durga Churn Sadhu Khan (I. L. R., 21 Cal. 979) followed.—SHIB NATA CHONG v. SARAT CHUNDER SARKAR, I. L. R., 22 Cal 586. [Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J. April 1, 1895.]

CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS—ALTERNATIVE CHARGE.

IT being impossible to decide which of the prisoner's two statements was false, and which true, the prisoners were convicted on the alternative charge.—QUEEN v. NARAIN DOSS, 1 W. R. 15. [Glover, J. Sep. 20, 1864.]

DISCUSSION as to the propriety of a conviction on a charge of false evidence, one of the statements charged having been made to the police under compulsion.—QUEEN v. NAGENA OURUT, 3 W. R. 6 [Campbell, Jackson, and Glover, JJ May 3, 1865.]

THE prisoner, who, as a witness in a former case, had made one statement before the Magistrate, and a contrary one before the Sessions Judge, was tried and convicted of having either given false evidence before the Judge, or given false evidence before the Magistrate. Held (Norman and Campbell, JJ., doubting, that the conviction was right. Held also (Campbell, J., differing) that the evidence taken before the Judge was admissible on the charge of having given false evidence before the Magistrate — QUEEN v. MUSSAMAT ZAMIRAN, B. L. R. Sup Vol. 521, 6 W. R. 65. [Peacock, C.J., and Norman, Kemp, Seton-Karr, and Campbell, JJ. Aug. 31, 1866.] Followed by Empress v. Ghulet, I. L. R., 7 All. 44, infra.

A CONVICTION on a charge of giving false evidence was set aside, the alleged conflicting statements having been made after a lapse of four years, and there being no proof of deliberate intention to give false evidence, which was held to be the gist of the offence.—QUEEN v. NAGBUNSEE LALL, 6 W. R. 89. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Dec. 10, 1866.]

WHERE a person makes one statement before the Magistrate, and a directly different statement before the Civil Court, his commitment on an alternative charge, after the consent of the Civil Court has been obtained under s. 169 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), is strictly legal.—QUEEN v. OOTTUR NARAIN SINGH, 8 W. R. 79. [Glover and Hobhouse, JJ. Nov. 4, 1867.]

IN a case of giving false evidence, the charge should show the particular matter in respect of which the accused is put upon his trial; and only so much of the prisoner's statements ought to be set out as is necessary in order to show the particular false statements relied on by the prosecution. The mere fact that a person has made a statement which contradicts a previous statement is not itself necessarily sufficient to bring him within s 193, Penal Code. The circumstances under which, and the intention with which, the particular statement relied on by the prosecution is made must, in each case, be considered before it can be held that the offence has been committed.—QUEEN v. SOONDER MOHOOREE, 9 W. R 25. [Macpherson and Jackson, JJ Mar. 2, 1868.]

BEFORE an accused person can be convicted of giving false evidence, it must be proved that he made the statements which are the basis of the charge, and, further, that he made them with the necessary criminal intention. The mere fact that a man has made contradictory statements does not necessarily prove that he has committed an offence under s. 193. The Court must be satisfied as to the intention with which the statements were made.—QUEEN v. DENONATH BUZZAR, 9 W. R. 52. [Macpherson and Glover, JJ. Mar. 30, 1868.]

IT does not follow that all contradictions on oath by opposing witnesses necessarily involve perjury.—QUEEN v. KALICHURN LAHOOREE, 9 W. R. 54. [Kemp and Phear, JJ. April 3, 1868.]

PROOF of contradictory statements on oath or solemn affirmation, without evidence as to which of them is false is sufficient to justify a conviction, upon an alternative finding, of the offence of giving false evidence under s. 72 of the Penal Code and ss. 242, 381, and 382 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861). The English law upon the subject stated.—In re PALANY CHETTY, 4 Mad. H. C. R. 51. [Scotland, C.J., and Collett, J. May 18, 1868. Followed by Empress v. Ghulet, I. L. R., 7 All 44, infra.

WHERE a person makes two contradictory statements in the course of a judicial proceeding, he may be tried and convicted of giving false evidence on a single charge, if there is evidence to show which statement is false.—REG. v. GANOJI BIN PANDJI, 5 Bom. H. C.

R. 49. [Couch, C.J., and Newton, J. June 25, 1868.]

AN alternative finding under s. 381 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), should not be resorted to until both the committing officer and the Sessions Judge are satisfied that no reliable evidence is procurable in support of one or other of the charges; and such a finding cannot be based in a case of giving false evidence upon two statements which are not absolutely contradictory, the one of the other, nor when in one of them the accused gives only hearsay evidence. Every presumption in favour of the possible reconciliation of the statements must be made.—QUEEN v. BEDOO NOSHYO, 12 W R. 11; 13 B. L. R. 325n. [Norman and Hobhouse, JJ. June 24, 1869.]

S. 242, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), points out how the charge is to be drawn up in a case in which it is doubtful which of two statements made by the accused is false.—QUEEN v. KALKA KHAN, 12 W. R 23. Jackson and Mitter, JJ July 5, 1869.

IN the trial of a prisoner for murder, a witness stated on oath before the Sessions Court that another had committed the murder, whereas before the Magistrate he had stated, as was the fact, that the prisoner had committed the murder. Held that such witness was guilty under s. 193, and not under s. 194, of the Penal Code, as he did not know that he would cause a conviction for murder. —QUEEN v. HARDYAL, 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 35. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. July 13, 1869

WHERE a person is charged with making two contradictory statements, it must be proved by direct evidence that both statements were made, and there must be an inquiry as to which statement is untrue, and whether the accused wilfully made the statement which is supposed to be false, knowing it to be false. —QUEEN v. MOTI KHOWA, 12 W. R. 31: 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 36. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. July 13, 1869.] But see Empress v. Ghulet, I. L. R., 7 All. 44, infra: and the cases therein cited.

IN a case of giving false evidence by making contradictory statements, one of which the accused knew to be false, it is not sufficient to support the falseness of either story by the other deposition, but there must be independent evidence of the falseness of either story. —QUEEN v. KOLA, 12 W. R. 66; 4 B. L. R. A. Cr. 4. [Norman and Kemp, JJ. Oct. 8, 1869.] But see Empress v. Ghulet, I. L. R., 7 All. 44, infra; and the cases therein cited.

IN a case of giving false evidence by making contradictory statements, a Court of Session cannot, without making further inquiry, commit a person for trial under s. 172 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), when both contradictory statements are not made before it. By the words, "under its own cognizance," in that section it is meant to provide for a case where it is brought under the notice of the Court of Session in the course of a judicial proceeding that the crime with which the party is to be charged has been committed by him. The following important observations were made by Norman, J., in the case: "It is one thing to show that a particular statement made by a witness is inaccurate or even false, and another to say that the witness has intentionally given false evidence. . . . To overlook the difference between the making of contradictory statements by a witness under examination and the giving of intentional false evidence is to shut one's eyes to the infirmities of human memory, to fail to understand how slow are the intellects and how imperfect the powers of expression of uneducated peasants . . . . I firmly believe that, if a witness could be convicted upon alternative charges of giving false evidence on contradictions of such a character as those supposed to exist in the present case, no native witness of the lower classes subjected to cross-examination by an adroit and, perhaps, not over-scrupulous advocate would be safe."—QUELN v. NOMAL, 12 W. R. 69, 4 B L. R. A. Cr. 9. [Norman and Kemp, JJ. Nov. 26, 1869.]

TO establish the offence of giving false evidence, direct proof of the falsity of the statement on which the perjury is assigned is essential. But, as legitimate evidence for the purpose, the law makes no distinction between the testimony of a witness directly falsifying such statement, and the contradictory statement of the person charged, although not made on oath. Such a statement, when satisfactorily proved, is quite as good evidence in proof of the charge as the criminatory statement of a person charged with any other offence, and on precisely the same ground—that it is an admission of the accused person inconsistent with his innocence. As to the weight to be given to contradictory statements, the sound rule is that a charge of perjury is not maintainable upon proof of one such statement, not on oath, or more than one if proved by a single witness only, unless supported by confirmatory evidence tending to show the falsity of the statement in the charge With respect to the kind or amount of confirmatory proof required, it must be considered in each case whether the particular evidence offered is sufficient to induce a belief in the truth of the contradictory statement or direct testimony.—REG. v. ROSS, 6 Mad. H.

C. R. 342. [Scotland, C.J., and Innes, J. Aug. 4, 1871.]

WHERE a prisoner is charged separately for having given false evidence with regard to two statements directly opposed to each other, a plea of guilty on one of the charges does not involve an acquittal on the other. A Sessions Court is bound to take evidence, and try a charge, before it can acquit a prisoner of that charge.—QUEEN v. HOSSAIN ALI, 8 B. L. R. Ap. 25. [Ainslie, J. Aug. 15, 1871.]

HELD by the majority (Jackson, J., dissenting) that a charge, framed on the model given in ch. 3 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), charging the accused upon two charges with having made contradictory statements in the course of judicial proceedings under s. 193, Penal Code, is a good charge, and that (Phear and Jackson, JJ., dissenting) the Court or jury, if convicting, need not, by direct evidence, find which of the two statements is false; all that is necessary being that the Court or jury should find that the allegations made in the charge are proved.—QUEEN v. MAHOMED HOOMAYOON SHAH, 21 W. R. 72; 13 B. L. R. F. B. 324 [Couch, C.J., and Kemp, Jackson, Phear, Markby, Glover, Ainslie, Pontifex, Birch, and Morris, JJ. April 11, 1874.] Followed by Empress v. Ghulet, I. L. R., 7 All. 44, infra.

To support a finding upon an alternative charge of perjury, there must be legal evidence of the truth of each branch of the charge. The deposition of the prisoner given in Hindustani, but taken in English by the Magistrate, and the memorandum at the foot of the deposition that it was read to the witness, and was by him acknowledged to be correct, though held not to be quite satisfactory (as the person who took down in English what the prisoner had said in Hindustani was not examined as a witness, and the prisoner had no opportunity of cross-examining him), was admitted as a proper deposition within the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and the memorandum was taken under s. 80 of the Evidence Act (I. of 1872), as evidence of the facts stated in it, and as affording some evidence that the translation was correct.—QUEEN v. GONOWRI, 22 W. R. 2. [Phear and Morris, JJ. April 21, 1874.] Follows Queen v. Mahomed Hoomayoon Shah, 21 W. R. 72: 13 B. L. R. 324, which again is followed by Empress v. Ghulet, I. L. R., 7 All. 44, infra.

A PRISONER who had made certain contradictory statements on oath before a Magistrate and a Court of Session, respectively, was convicted by the same Court of Session on a charge, in the alternative, of giving false evidence, either before a Magistrate or before the Court of Session. Held that the Court was precluded, by s. 473 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872), from trying the charge.—SUNDRIAH v. REG., I. L. R., 3 Mad. 254. [Turner, C.J. Aug. 8, 1881.]

IN prosecutions for giving false evidence under s. 193 of the Penal Code, the case of each person accused should be separately inquired into, and, if committed for trial, separately tried. It is wholly erroneous to include them in one joint charge. It is not of itself sufficient to warrant a conviction for giving false evidence that an accused person has made one statement on oath at one time, and a directly contradictory one at another. The charge must not only allege which of such statements is false, but the prosecutor must be prepared with confirmatory evidence, independent of the other contradictory statement, to establish the falsity of that which is impeached as untrue.* R. v. Jackson (1 Lewis C. C. 270), Reg. v. Wheatland (8 C. and P. 238), and Rex. v. Harris (3 B. and Ald. 926) referred to. S. 455 of Act X. of 1872 (or s. 236 of Act X. of 1882) is no authority for framing, against a person accused of giving false evidence, who has made one statement on oath on one occasion, and a directly contradictory one on oath on another occasion, a charge in the "alternative;" that word, as used in that section, meaning that, where the facts which can be proved make it doubtful what particular description of offence an accused person has committed, the charges may be so varied or alternated as to guard against his escaping conviction through technical difficulties Held, therefore, where three persons were committed for trial jointly charged with "having, on or about the 26th September 1881 or the 18th October 1881, being legally bound upon oath to state the truth, knowingly, on those days, regarding the same subject, made contradictory statements upon oath," and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 193 of the Penal Code, and such persons were jointly tried on such charge, that such charge was bad for being single and joint against the three accused persons, instead of several and specific in regard to each of them; that it was further bad, because it did not distinctly and in terms allege which of the statements was false; that, assuming a committal upon so faulty a charge should be allowed to stand, the Court of Session should have prepared a fresh charge against each of the accused persons specifically, setting forth the statement alleged to be false, and should then have proceeded to try each of them separately; and that, there being no evidence that either of the statements made by two of such persons was false, except that it was contradicted by the other, the charge against such persons was not sustainable, there being no sufficient evidence that either of the statements was false.—EMPRESS v. NIAZ ALI, I. L. R., 5 All. 17. [Stuart, C.J., and Straight, J. July 24, 1882.]

S. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882) makes it obligatory on a person examined in the course of a police-investigation under ch. 14 to answer truly all questions put to him (other than questions the answers to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge, or to a penalty or forfeiture), and such person, if he knowingly answers falsely, commits the offence of giving false evidence in a stage of judicial proceeding under s. 193 of the Penal Code. The accused was convicted by the Sessions Court on an alternative charge of having given false evidence in a judicial proceeding under s. 193 of the Penal Code, one statement being made before a head-constable of police, and the other before the Magistrate (F. C.). There was no evidence to prove which of the two statements was false. The prisoner appealed to the High Court, which delivered the following judgment: "S. 161, Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, says that any person, being under examination in the course of the police-investigation under Ch. XIV. (s. 155) of the Code shall be bound to answer truly all questions put to him (with certain exceptions not applicable to the present case). This provision is new. Under the previous law the obligation 'to answer truly' in a police-investigation was not enforced by any express provision. S. 191 of the Penal Code says that, if a person, who is bound by any express provision to state the truth, states knowingly what is false, he is said to give false evidence. The appellant in this case has therefore, as the law now stands, given false evidence. S. 193 of the Penal Code says that, whoever intentionally gives false evidence in any stage of a judicial proceeding shall be punished, &c. And under expl. 2 of the same section a police-investigation under Ch. XIV. of the Criminal Procedure Code is a stage of a judicial proceeding. We therefore think that the District Judge's decision is right under the present law, and reject the petition of appeal."—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PARSHRAM RAY SING, I. L. R., 8 Bom. 216. [Pinhey and Scott, JJ. Nov. 29, 1883.]

IN order to sustain any conviction for giving false evidence upon an alternative charge when no evidence is offered to prove the falsity of either statement in particular, it must be clear that the two statements are contradictory. The law laid down by the Full Bench in the case of Empress v. Kassim Khan (I. L. R., 7 Cal. 121) has been altered by the provisions of s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882); and a witness who makes a false statement to a police-officer in reply to a question which he is bound to answer would be guilty of intentionally giving false evidence. When four persons were accused of having given false evidence in the same proceeding, and the Sessions Judge, while professing to try each accused separately, heard the evidence of the witnesses only once, held that this was substantially trying the four prisoners together, and was an improper mode of procedure.—NATHU SHEIKH v. EMPRESS, I. L. R., 10 Cal. 405. [McDonell and Field, JJ. Feb. 7, 1884.]

A PRISONER was convicted on an alternative charge in the form provided by sch. 5 xxviii., ii. (4), of the Criminal Procedure Code, of having given false evidence, such evidence consisting of contradictory statements contained in one deposition while he was under cross-examination and re-examination as a witness in a judicial proceeding. There was no finding as to which of the contradictory statements was false. Held (Norris, J., dissenting) that s. 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code did not affect the matter, and that the conviction was good. Semble, per Wilson, J.—The decision in Queen v. Bedoo Noshyo (12 W. R. 11), though a guide to the discretion of Courts in framing and dealing with charges, was not intended to and does not affect the law applicable to the matter.—HABIBULLAH v. EMPRESS, I. L. R., 10 Cal. 937. [Wilson, Tottenham, and Norris, JJ. July 7, 1884.]

IN a charge under s. 193 of the Penal Code it is not necessary to allege which of two contradictory statements upon oath is false, but it is sufficient (unless some satisfactory explanation of the contradiction should be established) to warrant a conviction of the offence of giving false evidence to show that an accused person has made one statement upon oath at one time and a directly contradictory statement at another. R. v. Zumeerun (6 W. R. 65), R. v. Palany Chetty (4 Mad. H. C. R. 57), and R. v. Mahomed Hoomayoon Shah (13 B. L. R. 324) followed. Empress v. Nias Ali (I. L. R., 5 All. 17) overruled. Per Duthoit, J.—Every possible presumption in favour of a reconciliation of the two statements should be made, and it must be found that they are absolutely irreconcilable before a conviction can be had upon the ground that one of them is necessarily false. The English cases upon this subject are irrelevant to the interpretation of the law of India, since the Indian Legislature has not followed the law of England in regard to perjury. Trimble v. Hill (L. R. Ap. Cas. 342) and Kathama Natchiar v. Dorasinga Tever (L. R., 2 Ind. Ap. 159) referred to. —QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GHULET, I. L. R., 7 All. 44. [Straight, Offg. C.J. and Duthoit, J. July 31, 1884.]

THE accused was charged, in the alternative, by the trying Magistrate, as follows: "I, W. W. Drew, Magistrate, First Class, hereby charge you, Ramji Sajabarao, as follows: 'That you, on or about the 13th day of October 1882, at Nandarpada, stated that you had seen Vishnu Vaman and Mahadu Lakshman carrying teakwood from Gohe Forest to Narayan Ramchandra, range forest officer, and on 14th February 1885 you stated on oath before the First-class Magistrate at Pen, at the trial of these persons, that you did not see where they had brought the wood from, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 182 or s. 193 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860), and within my cognizance; and I hereby direct that you, Ramji Sajabarao, be tried by the said Court on the same charge.'" At the trial the accused asserted the truth of the former of these two statements, and denied having made the other. The Magistrate was unable to find which of them was false, and convicted the accused, in the alternative, either under s. 182 or s. 193 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860). Held that the charge was bad in law, being an alternative charge in a form forbidden by s. 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), which directs that for every distinct offence of which any person is charged there shall be a separate charge. Nor could the accused be tried upon a charge framed in the alternative as in the form given in sch. 5-28 (4) of the Criminal Procedure Code Act X. of 1882). For, upon the facts alleged, there was no way of charging him with one distinct offence on the ground of self-contradiction. He could not successfully be charged, under s. 193 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), on contradictory statements, because he only made one deposition, in which there were no discrepancies; and, similarly, he could not be charged under s. 182 of the Penal Code, for he only once gave information to a public servant. Held also that, having regard to ss. 225, 232, and 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), the accused, convicted upon such a charge, must be held to have been misled in his defence, and his conviction and sentence reversed. In charges founded upon supposed contradictory statements, every presumption in favour of the possible reconciliation of the statements must be made. Under s. 172 of the Forest Act (VII. of 1878), a forest-officer is a public servant within the meaning of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860). Any information given to him with the intent mentioned in s. 182 of the Penal Code is punishable under that section, whether that information is volunteered by the informant, or is given in answer to questions put to him by that officer.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMJI SAJABARAO, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 124. [Nanabhai Haridas and Wedderburn, JJ. Sep. 7, 1885.]

AN accused was charged with giving false evidence upon an alternative charge, one statement having been made to a police-officer investigating a case of arson, and the other having been made when he was examined as a witness before the Joint-Magistrate when the case was being inquired into. The two statements were contradictory, and no evidence was given to show which of them was false. It was not proved that the statement made to the police-officer was made in answer to questions put by him, and the only evidence given at the trial with regard to the inquiry upon which the police-officer was engaged was to the effect that an inquiry was being made about the burning of a house. The jury acquitted the accused, and the case was referred to the High Court by the Sessions Judge, who disagreed with the verdict of acquittal. Held that the verdict was right. Before a conviction in such a case can be sustained, it must having regard to the provisions of s. 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code, be clearly proved by the evidence that the statement made to the police-officer was a statement in answer to questions put to the accused by the investigating police-officer; and in the absence of such evidence, even though the statement were proved to be false, a conviction could not be sustained. Held, further, that in such a case it is also necessary for the prosecution to establish that the police-constable was making an investigation under ch. 14 of the Criminal Procedure Code.—THE EMPRESS v. BAIKANTA BAURI, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 349. [Mitter and Macpherson, JJ. Mar. 4, 1889.]

IT is not necessary that the statement of a witness recorded under s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, should be elicited and recorded in the form of alternate question and answer. It is sufficient if such statement is substantially an answer to one or more questions addressed to the witness before the statement is made. The provisions of ss. 191 and 193 of the Penal Code do apply to the case of false statements made under s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882.

It is not illegal, though unnecessary, for a police-officer recording a statement under s. 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, to obtain the signatures of persons present at the time to authenticate his record of such statement.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BHAGWANTIA, I. L. R., 15 All. 11. [Edge, C.J., and Tyrrell, J. July 9, 1892.]

WHERE a person has made two contradictory statements, one to a police-officer making an investigation under Ch. XIV. of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882), and the other to a Magistrate holding a preliminary inquiry, he cannot be charged, and still less convicted, on an alternative charge. In such a case, if there is no other evidence at the trial, but the contradictory statements made by the accused, separate charges cannot be framed. — QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MUGAPA, I. L. R., 18 Bom. 377. [Sargent, C.J., and Telang, Candy, and Fulton, JJ. July 3, 1893.]

HELD that a report made by an amin of a Civil Court deputed to give possession of certain property in execution of a decree as to his having been obstructed in so doing to the Court executing the decree, and a similar report made to the police, would not, even if false, amount to the fabrication of false evidence within the meaning of s. 193 of the Penal Code, and consequently, where such amin was charged in the alternative with making the two reports as above and also a third and inconsistent statement in respect of which he might have been charged under s. 193, that he was wrongly charged, and that it was necessary to prove the falsity of the third statement.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. AJUDHIA PRASAD, I. L. R., 17 All. 436. [Edge, C.J., and Banerji, J. Mar. 16, 1895.

HELD that where a witness had made one statement on oath or solemn affirmation before a third-class Magistrate under s. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and again another and totally inconsistent statement at the trial of the case before a Magistrate of the first class, he might properly be convicted under the second—if not under the first—paragraph of s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code. Queen-Empress v. Bharma (I. L. R., 11 Bom. 702), considered and distinguished.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KHEM, I. L. R., 22 All. 115. [Knox and Aikman, JJ. Nov. 14, 1899.]

FALSE EVIDENCE, ABETMENT OF.

UNDER s. 193 it is an offence to suppress evidence. Thus, where the accused asked a witness to suppress certain facts in giving his evidence before a Magistrate on a charge of defamation, it was held that this constituted abetment of the offence of giving false evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding.—In re ANDY CHETTY, 2 Mad. H. C. R. 438. [Frere and Innes, JJ. Aug. 12, 1865.]

WHERE C falsely represented himself as U, the writer of a document signed by U, and T, knowing that C was not U, and had not written such document, produced C as U, and as the writer of the document, it was held that T ought to be convicted on a charge of abetting the giving of false evidence.—QUEEN v. CHUNDI CHURN NAUTH, 8 W. R. 5. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. June 4, 1867.]

IT is not necessary to constitute the offence of abetment that the act abetted should be committed.—DINONATH BURDOA, 18 W. R. 32. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 24, 1872.]

THERE can be no offence of the abetment of giving false evidence unless the person charged with abetment intended, not only that the statement should be made, but intended that the statement should be made falsely.—QUEEN v. NIM CHAND MOOKERJEE, 20 W. R. 41. [Markby and Birch, JJ. June 27, 1873.]

THE Magistrate convicted accused of abetting the giving of false evidence in a judicial case proceeding before himself. Held that, as by the proceedings of 24th March 1873, the Magistrate could not have tried the person who gave false evidence, he could not try the abettor.—PRO., Nov. 6, 1873, 7 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 28. According to s 487 of the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), no Judge of a Criminal Court or Magistrate, other than a Judge of a High Court, the Recorder of Rangoon, and the Presidency Magistrates, can try any person for the offence of giving false evidence when such offence is committed before himself.

FALSE EVIDENCE, WHAT IS A GIVING OF.

A WITNESS falsely deposing in another's name should be charged with giving false evidence under s. 193, and not with cheating by personation under ss. 415 and 419 of the Penal Code.—REG v. PREMA BHIKA, 1 Bom. H. C. R. 89. [Forbes, Westropp, and Tucker, JJ. Nov. 5, 1863.]

THE making of a false statement without knowledge as to whether the subject-matter of the statement is false or not is legally a giving of false evidence. — QUEEN v. ECHAN MEEAH, 2 W. R. 47. [Glover, J. Mar. 20, 1865.]

A SUB-REGISTRAR is competent, for any purpose contemplated by Act XX. of 1866, to examine any person; and any statement made by such person before an officer in any proceedings or inquiries under the Act, if intentionally false, renders such person liable to a criminal prosecution.—QUEEN v. JUGGUT CHUNDER DUTTA, 6 W. R. 81. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Oct. 5, 1866.]

THE making of a false return of service of summons is an offence punishable not under s. 181, but under s. 193 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. SHAMA CHURN ROY, 8 W. R. 27. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. June 25, 1867.]

IN trying a prisoner charged with giving false evidence, a Sessions Judge rejected facts which were proved by the evidence of certain witnesses, because a medical officer gave it as his opinion that what the witnesses deposed to could not be true. Held that it was not the proper way to try a case to rely on mere theories of medical men or skilled witnesses of any sort against facts positively proved. Norman, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed: "It appears to us that the true rule is that no man can be convicted of giving false evidence, except upon proof of facts which, if accepted as true, show, not merely that it is incredible, but that it is impossible that the statement of the party accused made upon oath can be true. If the inference from the facts proved falls short of this, it seems to us that there is nothing on which a conviction can stand; because, assuming all that is proved to be true, it is still possible that no crime was committed."—QUEEN v. AHMED ALLY, 11 W. R. 25. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. April 5, 1869.]

A CONVICTION may be had for giving false evidence under s. 193, Penal Code, even if the evidence given in matters not judicial (such as before the Collector acting in his fiscal capacity under Reg XIX. 1814), but it must be proved that the false statement was made under the sanction of the law.—IN THE MATTER OF AUDHEEN ROY, 14 W R 24. [Bayley and Kemp, JJ. July 30, 1870.]

WHEN an offence under s. 193 of the Penal Code is established, a conviction under s. 181 is illegal. When the accused made, on solemn affirmation, a statement before an Income-tax Commissioner, which statement the accused new, or had reason to believe, to be incorrect, it was held that such statement amounted to the offence of giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding under s. 193 of the Penal Code, and was, therefore, not cognizable by a Full-power Magistrate, as it could not be treated as constituting an offence triable under s. 181 of the Penal Code (making a false statement to a public servant).—REG. v. DAYALJI ENDARJI, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 21. [Lloyd and Kemball, JJ. April 25, 1871.]

THE examination of a complainant in reference to the matter of his petition of complaint is an investigation directed by law, and therefore a stage of a judicial proceeding. Consequently, if in the course of that examination false evidence is intentionally given by the complainant, he is legally chargeable with the offence described in s. 193 of the Penal Code. If the charge of voluntarily causing hurt, contained in a petition of complaint, is wilfully false, and made with intent to injure, then the complainant is legally chargeable with the offence described in s. 211 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. MATA DYAL, 4 N.-W. P. 6. [Pearson, J. Jan. 13, 1872.]

A STATEMENT, untrue to the prisoner's knowledge, made upon oath in the course of a judicial proceeding, amounts to perjury, notwithstanding the fact that the statement itself is immaterial to the matter before the Court.—QUEEN v. SHIB PROSAD GIRI, 19 W. R. 69. [Phear and Glover, JJ. April 29, 1873.]

A PETITION not bearing the signature of the accused, and therefore not a declaration made or subscribed by him, cannot be made the foundation of a charge or conviction under s. 199 of the Penal Code; but a deposition on oath supporting such a petition, if false, justifies a charge under s. 193 of the Code.—IN THE MATTER OF RAM REEVAY KOOWAR, 7 C. L. R. 536. [Garth, C.J., and Maclean, J. Oct. 22, 1880.]

PERSONS giving false answers to questions put by a police-officer conducting an inquiry preliminary to a proceeding before a Court of Justice may be convicted of giving false evidence under ss. 191 and 193 of the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF JUGGERNATH SAHAI, 8 C. L. R. 236. [Cunningham and Prinsep, JJ. Feb 15, 1881.]

A CHARGE of giving false evidence under s. 193 of the Penal Code cannot be sustained in respect of a statement made to a police-officer engaged in making an investigation under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. Ss. 118 and 119 of the latter Code impose no legal obligation on the persons examined thereunder to speak the truth.—EMPRESS v. KASSIM KHAN; EMPRESS v. MUSST. DABI, 8 C. L. R. 300 (F. B.). But see the new provision in the corresponding section of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1898 (s. 161), which makes it compulsory on persons to answer truly all questions. See Queen-Empress v. Purshram Ruysing, I. L. R., 8 Bom. 216, under the heading "Contradictory Statements—Alternative Charge."

A PERSON filing a written statement in a suit is bound by law to state the truth, and if he makes a statement which is false to his knowledge or belief, or which he believes not to be true, he is guilty of giving false evidence within the meaning of s. 191 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MEHRBAN SINGH, I. L. R., 6 All. 626. [Straight, Offg. C.J. July 14, 1884.]

FALSE STATEMENT BEFORE OFFICER NOT HAVING JURISDICTION.

WHERE a plaintiff before a Munsif came and petitioned the Judge, complaining that the Munsif had improperly refused to examine his witnesses, and had dismissed his suit, although informed that witnesses were in attendance, and the Judge, upon examining the petitioner upon solemn affirmation, and finding the charge unproved, ordered proceedings to be taken against the petitioner for giving false evidence, held that the Judge had no authority to examine the petitioner upon oath in such a case, and that the oath having been made, and the evidence given coram non judice, could not form the subject of a prosecution for false evidence.—QUEEN v. CHOTA JADUB CHUNDER BISWAS, W. R. Gap. 1864, 15. [Seton-Karr and Jackson, JJ. Mar. 2, 1864.]

WHERE a Subordinate Magistrate conducted an inquiry in a case of murder and riot, without having received the necessary authority under s. 192, Act X. of 1882, it was held that an untrue statement made by a witness in the course of such inquiry was not "false evidence" within s. 193, as the subordinate Magistrate was acting without jurisdiction.—KHUSHI KHAN v. CROWN, Panj Rec., No. 24 of 1870.

HELD by the Division Bench that, where the Assistant Commissioner had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit against one R K, he had, therefore, no authority under Act X. of 1873 to administer an oath or affirmation to him in the course of the trial; that therefore R K was never legally bound to state the truth, and was therefore not liable to be convicted of giving false evidence in respect of any statement made by him in the trial of the said case upon the merits.—NARINJAN DAS v. RAM KISHEN, Panj. Rec., No. 32 of 1879

A STATEMENT taken by a Third-class Magistrate under s. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882), such Magistrate not having authority to carry on the preliminary inquiry in the case, is not evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding within the meaning of ss. 191 and 193 of the Penal Code, such that, when the statement is contradicted afterwards before the Magistrate having jurisdiction, and exercising it in the preliminary inquiry, it will form a sufficient basis for an alternative charge of giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding. — QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BHAKMA, I. L. R., 11 Bom. 702. [Sargent, C.J., and West and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ. Dec. 20, 1886.]

A DEPUTY MAGISTRATE has no power to administer an oath to a person making a declaration in the shape of an affidavit; and such person cannot, on the facts stated in such declaration, be prosecuted for committing an offence, either under s. 193 or s. 199 of the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF ISWAR CHUNDER GUHO, I. L. R., 14 Cal. 653. [Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J. June 13, 1887.]

IT is no offence to make a false statement before a person purporting to act in execution of the Registration Act, but not legally authorized so to do.—RADHIKA MOHUN KURI v. LAL MOHAN SHA, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 719. [Trevelyan and Rampini, JJ. Mar. 23, 1893.]

FALSE STATEMENT TENDING TO CRIMINATE.

WHEN a party makes a false statement, being legally bound by solemn affirmation, the fact that the statement was one tending to criminate himself will not justify his acquittal on a charge of giving false evidence. — PRO., Feb. 21, 1867, 3 Mad. H. C. Rep. Ap. 30.

ALTHOUGH a person, under examination as a witness, is bound by his affirmation to tell the truth, if he is examined on a point on which he is likely to criminate himself, his position should be explained to him by the Magistrate, as otherwise he may be induced, through ignorance of the state of the law, to deny the existence of the facts for fear of penal consequences. Although, without such a warning, he may make a false denial, and thereby become guilty of the offence of intentionally giving false evidence, his offence will not be deserving of severe punishment.—IN THE MATTER OF JADOONATH DUTT, 2 C. L. R. 181. [Markby and Prinsep, JJ. April 18, 1878.

INTENTION.

CORRUPT intention in giving false evidence may be inferred from circumstances.—QUEEN v. RHUTTEN RAM, 2 W. R. 63. [Glover, J. April 20, 1865.]

A CONVICTION on a charge of giving false evidence was set aside, the alleged conflicting statements having been made after a lapse of four years, and there being no proof of deliberate intention to give false evidence, which was held to be the gist of the offence.—QUEEN v. NAGBUNSEE LALL, 6 W. R. 89. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Dec. 10, 1866.]

THE intention is an essential ingredient in the offence contemplated by s. 218 of the Penal Code. The making of a false return of service of summons is an offence punishable, not under s. 181, but under s. 193, of the Penal Code, and is cognizable by the Court of Session alone.—QUEEN v. SHAMA CHURN ROY, 8 W. R. 27. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. June 25, 1867.]

THE mere fact that a person has made a statement which contradicts a previous statement is not itself necessarily sufficient to bring him within s. 193, Penal Code. The circumstances under which, and the intention with which, the particular statement relied on by the prosecution is made, must, in each case, be considered before it can be held that the offence has been committed.—QUEEN v. SOONDER MOHOOREE, 9 W. R. 25. [Macpherson and Jackson, JJ. Mar. 2, 1868.]

IN a case of giving false evidence by making contradictory statements, the Court must be satisfied as to the intention with which the statements were made.—QUEEN v. DENONATH BUZZAR, 9 W. R. 52. [Macpherson and Glover, JJ. Mar. 30, 1868.]

UPON a prosecution for giving false evidence, the law does not require proof of a corrupt intention. It is sufficient that there is proof of intention; and if the statement was false, and known by the accused to be false, it may be presumed that, making it, the accused intentionally gave false evidence.—QUEEN v. AMEER ALI KHAN, 3 N.-W. P. 133. [Turner, J. June 16, 1871.]

THE rule of civil procedure contained in the last clause of s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV. of 1882)—that uncertified adjustments of a decree are not to be recognized by "any Court"—does not affect the substantive criminal law. The words "any Court" in that clause have no application to a Criminal Court investigating a charge of fraudulently executing a decree under s. 210 of the Penal Code. Those words do not bar any criminal remedy which an injured judgment-debtor may have against a fraudulent decree-holder, whether by a prosecution under s. 193, 210, 406, or any other section of the Penal Code. In s. 210 of the Penal Code the word "satisfied" is to be understood in its ordinary meaning, and not as referring to decrees, the satisfaction of which has been certified to the Court. Under s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV. of 1882), the decree-holder, or the party who applies for execution, is bound to state in his application any adjustment between the parties after decree, whether such adjustment has or has not been previously certified to the Court. Paupayya v. Narrasannah (I. L. R., 2 Mad. 216) followed. Intentional omission to make such statement amounts to an offence under s. 193 of the Penal Code. S. 199 of the Penal Code does not apply to applications for execution containing false averments. — QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BAPUJI DAYARAM, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 288. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Feb. 18, 1886.]

THE maxim, Ignorantia juris non excusat, cannot be applied to a declaration, though in fact false, made under s. 18 of Act XV. of 1872, inasmuch as the declaration required by that section to be made is a declaration as to the belief only of the person making it; and further, in order to entail the penal consequences provided for by s. 66 of the said Act, such false declaration must be made "intentionally."—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ROBINSON, I. L. R., 16 All. 212. [Tyrrell and Blair, JJ. Jan. 23, 1894.]

JUDICIAL PROCEEDING, WHAT IS NOT A STAGE OF.

AN inquiry by an Assistant Magistrate, with a view to tracing the writer of an anonymous letter addressed to him, charging certain persons with murder, and without reference to the truth or otherwise of the charge of murder, is not a stage of a judicial proceeding in which the giving of false evidence is punishable under s. 193 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. BYKUNT NATH BANNERJEE, 5 W. R. 72. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. April 23, 1866.]

THE prisoner was convicted of perjury by wilfully making a false statement in a verified petition presented under s. 19 of the Income Tax Act (IX. of 1869) to a Tahsildar. Held that the Tahsildar was not an officer competent to receive such a petition, and that no offence was committed.—IN THE MATTER OF MONIAPPA OODIAN, 5 Mad. H. C. R. 326. [Scotland, C.J., and Collett, J. Mar. 11, 1870.]

THE prisoner, a vakil presented a vakalatnama in the District Munsif's Court, signed by the defendant in a civil suit, authorizing the prisoner to appear for the defendant. The vakalatnama falsely purported to have been executed before the adhikari of the village, and to bear the signature of the adhikari. The prisoner was convicted under s. 193 of the Penal Code. Held that the case was not brought within the section, and that the prisoner was entitled to his discharge from custody.—In re KEILASUM PUTTER, 5 Mad. H. C. R. 373. [Scotland, C.J., and Innes, J. July 11, 1870.]

THE accused was convicted of intentionally giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding, in having as a witness therein made, on solemn affirmation, a false statement. The proceedings in the trial at which the alleged false evidence was given were subsequently annulled in consequence of the sanction for the prosecution being insufficient. Held that the conviction of the accused must be reversed, as the false statement was not made in a stage of judicial proceeding. The proceedings in a criminal trial, when necessary to be proved, should be proved by their production.—REG. v. RAVJI VALAD TAJU, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 37. [Gibbs and West, JJ. June 15, 1871.]

A MAN died leaving some money due to him in the hands of the Telegraph Authorities. P wrote a letter to those authorities, claiming the money as the sole heir of the deceased. This letter was sent to the District Judge for verification and orders. P supported his claim before the Judge by the evidence on oath of C. C's evidence being, in the opinion of the District Judge, false, the District Judge, in his capacity as Sessions Judge, tried him for giving false evidence, and convicted him of that offence. Held that, as the reference to the District Judge by the Telegraph Authorities of P's letter for verification, and the subsequent action in regard thereto, did not constitute a "judicial proceeding," and as the District Judge had not any authority to administer an oath to C, the conviction was illegal. Held, also, that the District Judge had no jurisdiction, under s. 477 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to try C.—EMPRESS v. CHAIT RAM, I. L. R., 6 All. 103. [Straight, J. Oct. 27, 1883.]

A STATEMENT taken down in the course of a police-investigation by a police-constable under s. 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882) is not evidence at any stage of a judicial proceeding.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ISMAI VALAD FATARU, I. L. R., 11 Bom. 659. [West and Birdwood, JJ. April 5, 1887.]

AT a preliminary enquiry held by a Sub-divisional Magistrate, at the direction of the District Magistrate, into the circumstances of a complaint against the police, a witness made a false statement on oath. Notice was subsequently issued calling upon the said witness to show cause why sanction should not be granted for his prosecution. The Magistrate having held that the witness was bound to tell the truth at the said enquiry and having granted sanction for his prosecution under s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code:—Held that the enquiry before the Magistrate in the course of which the alleged offence was committed was not a judicial proceeding within the meaning of s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and the witness could not be convicted under that section.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VENKATARAMANNA, I. L. R., 23 Mad. 223. [Boddam and Moore, JJ. Aug. 31 and Sep. 1, 1899.]

HELD that where an accused person was examined by a Magistrate for the sake of obtaining information on which proceedings could be taken, the Magistrate, although he might examine him to obtain information, could not legally examine him on oath, nor could the accused be said at that stage of the proceedings to be a witness even though he were examined on oath. There was no authority that being so examined the accused was bound by any express provision of law to state the truth. Consequently any charge for giving false evidence founded on this statement was bad, and it therefore followed that a conviction and sentence founded on this statement as being contrary to another statement made by the accused when examined as a witness at the trial, without any proof of finding that the second statement was false, could not be maintained.—HARI CHARAN SINGH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 455. [Prinsep and Stanley, JJ. 4 Jan. 11, 1900.]

LOCUS PŒNITENTIÆ.

HELD by the majority of the Court (Jackson, J., dissentiente) that there ought to be locus pœnitentiæ for witnesses who have deposed falsely to retract their false statements.—QUEEN v. GOLLIE MULLICK, W. R., Gap. 1864, 10. [Steer, Seton-Karr, and Jackson, JJ. Feb. 18, 1864.]

MAGISTRATE BEFORE WHOM FALSE STATEMENT MADE NOT TO TRY CASE.

WHERE a false statement is made in a stage of a judicial proceeding before a Magistrate, he ought not to convict under s. 181 of the Penal Code, but should commit to the Sessions under s. 193 of that Code.—QUEEN v. NUSSUROODDEEN SHAZWAL, 11 W. R. 24. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. Mar. 25, 1869.]

THE Magistrate before whom the offence of intentionally giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding is committed may himself try and commit the persons so offending.—QUEEN v. RAMLOCHUN SINGH, 18 W. R. 15. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. June 11, 1872.]

WITH the exception of cases triable by the Court of Session exclusively, a Court cannot try any offence described in ss. 467, 468, and 469 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), when committed before itself.—PRO., Mar. 24, 1873, 7 Mad. H. C. R. Ap 17.

THE offence of intentionally giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding cannot be tried by the Magistrate before whom the false evidence is given. This offence, being an attempt to pervert the proceedings of a Court to an improper end, is a contempt of its authority (ss. 435, 436, 471, 472, and 473 of the Code of Criminal Procedure).—REG. v. NAVRANBEG DULABEG, 10 Bom. H. C. R. 73. [Bayley and West, JJ. May 21, 1873.]

HELD (Stuart, C.J., dissenting) that an offence under s. 193 of the Penal Code, being an offence in contempt of Court within the meaning of s. 473 of Act X. of 1872 cannot, under that section, be tried by the Magistrate before whom such offence is committed.

Queen v. Kultaran Singh (I. L. R., 1 All. 129) and Queen v. Jagat Mal (I. L. R., 1 All. 162) overruled. Per Stuart, C.J.—A Magistrate before whom such an offence is committed, if competent to try it himself, is not precluded from so doing by the provisions of s. 471 of Act X. of 1872.—EMPRESS v. KASHMIRI, I. L. R., 1 All. 625. [Stuart, C.J., and Pearson, Turner, Spankie, and Oldfield, JJ. Aug. 22, 1877.]

UNDER s. 487 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), Judges of High Courts, the Recorder of Rangoon, and Presidency Magistrates are empowered to try cases under s. 193 of the Penal Code, even though the false evidence has been given before themselves, and they have sanctioned the prosecution; but this power has not been extended to Mofussil Magistrates.

MATERIALITY.

THE materiality of the subject-matter of the statement is not a substantial part of the offence of giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding; and an indictment, under ss. 191, 193 of the Penal Code, though it does not allege materiality, is good if it alleges sufficiently the substance of the offence.—REG. v. AIDRUS SAHIB, 1 Mad. H. C. R. 38. [Scotland, C.J., and Bittleston, J. Oct. 30, 1862.]

IN a case of false evidence it is not necessary for the Judge in his charge to show how the false statements, even if made intentionally, are material in the case.—QUEEN v. PARBUTTY CHURN SIRCAR, 6 W. R. 84. Loch, J. Nov. 20, 1866.]

To constitute the offence of giving false evidence under s. 191 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that the false evidence given should be material to the case in which it is given. Aliter under s. 192. Where the Senior Assistant Sessions Judge without taking evidence, acquitted the accused after calling upon him to plead, the prosecutor being unable to say that the alleged false statements of the accused were material to the trial on which they were made, the High Court reversed the order of acquittal, and directed the trial to be proceeded with.—REG. v. DAMODHOR RAMCHANDRA KULKARNI, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 68. [Newton and Tucker, JJ. Aug. 13, 1868.]

OATH OR AFFIRMATION.

WHERE a witness was, at the beginning of the day, solemnly affirmed, once for all, to speak the truth in all the cases coming before the Court that day, held that he might be convicted, under s. 193 of the Penal Code, of giving false evidence in a suit which came on that day, although he was not affirmed to speak the truth in that suit after it was called on for hearing, and the names of the cases in the day's list were not mentioned when the affirmation was administered.—REG. v. VENKATACHALAM PILLAI, 2 Mad. H. C. R. 43. [Scotland, C.J., and Bittleston, J. Mar. 15, 1864.]

A CHARGE of perjury held unproved without proof that the statement on which it was founded was given on solemn affirmation under Act V. of 1840 instead of on oath.—QUEEN v. MANWAR KHAN, 4 W. R. 24. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov. 11, 1864.]

A HINDU, who has become a convert to Christianity, is not under a legal obligation to speak the truth, unless his evidence be given under the sanction of an oath on the Holy Gospels, so as to justify a conviction under s. 193 of the Penal Code. A statement made by a witness in a criminal trial, not upon oath or solemn affirmation, is not a declaration within the meaning of s. 199 of the Penal Code, nor is the witness bound to make a declaration under s. 191.—In re A. VEDAMUTTU, 4 Mad. H. C. R. 185. [Scotland, C.J., and Ellis, J. Dec. 21, 1868.]

No omission to take any oath or make affirmation, no substitution of any one for any other of them, and no irregularity whatever in the form in which any one of them is administered, shall invalidate any proceeding, or render inadmissible any evidence whatever in or in respect of which such omission, substitution, or irregularity took place, or shall affect the obligation of a witness to state the truth.—Oaths Act (X. of 1873) s. 13. And a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has ruled (Jackson, J., dissenting) that the evidence of a witness who was examined on simple affirmation under the direction of the Judge is admissible as evidence, and that the word "omision" in s. 13 of the Oaths Act (X. of 1873) includes any omission, and is not limited to accidental or negligent omissions.—QUEEN v. SEWA BHOGTA, 23 W. R. 12; 14 B. L. R. 294. [Couch, C.J., and Kemp, Jackson, Phear, and Markby, JJ. Dec. 22, 1874.]

V was tried and convicted under s. 193 of the Penal Code for giving false evidence before the Court of a village-munsif in a suit in which V was defendant. The village-munsif sanctioned the prosecution of V under s. 105 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. On appeal the Sessions Judge acquitted V on the grounds that a village-munsif had no power to administer oath to V (the case not being one in which either party was willing to allow the cause to be settled by the oath of the other), and because s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure did not apply. Held that both objections to the conviction were bad in law.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VENKAYYA, I. L. R., 11 Mad. 375. [Collins, C.J., and Parker, J. Feb. 22 and Mar. 13, 1888.]

THE offence of intentionally giving false evidence referred to in s. 193 of the Penal Code may be committed, although the person giving evidence has neither been sworn nor affirmed.—GOBIND CHANDRA SEAL v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 19 Cal. 355. [Norris and Beverley, JJ. Feb. 15, 1892.]

FALSE EVIDENCE IN CROSS EXAMINATION.

M S was convicted under s. 500 of the Penal Code of defaming S S by making a certain statement when under cross-examination as a witness before a Court of criminal jurisdiction. Held that the conviction was bad. The statements of witnesses are privileged; if false, the remedy is by indictment for perjury, and not for defamation.—MANJAYA v. SESHA SHETTI, I. L. R., 11 Mad. 477. [Collins, C.J., and Shepherd, J. April 11 and 24, 1888.]

PRELIMINARY ENQUIRY.

When a Magistrate takes action under s. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it is not necessary to the validity of his order that he should hold a preliminary inquiry. Baperam Surma v. Gouri Nath Dutt (I. L. R., 20 Cal. 474) followed.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MATABADAL, I. L. R., 15 All. 392. Aikman, J. June 13, 1893.]

THE provisions of s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as well as of s. 643 of the Civil Procedure Code, clearly indicate that the Court taking action under either section must not only have ground for inquiry into an offence of the description referred to in those sections respectively, but must also be primâ facie satisfied that the offence has been committed by some definite person or persons against whom proceedings in the Criminal Court are to be taken. Khepunath Sikdar v. Grish Chunder Mukerji (I. L. R., 16 Cal. 730) and Chowdry Mahomed Izarne Huq v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 20 Cal. 349) followed. A Division Bench of the High Court taking the civil business of a particular group has jurisdiction to deal with an order under s. 643 of the Civil Procedure Code made by a Civil Court in any of the districts included in the group.—BHAKKU v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 23 Cal. 532. Banerjee and Gordon, JJ. Feb. 11, 1896.]

PUNISHMENT.

THE denial of one's relationship to his brother, whose witness he was, was held to be a kind of false evidence meriting only a mild punishment.—QUEEN v. GOVIND SAHOO, W. R. Gap., 1864, 14. [Steer and Seton-Karr, JJ. Feb. 29, 1864.]

A SENTENCE of five years' imprisonment was not excessive in the case of a man convicted of making a false statement in a judicial proceeding with the intention of defeating the ends of justice by procuring the acquittal of a guilty person.—QUEEN v. ANOO, W. R. Gap., 1864, 16. [Loch, Seton-Karr, and Jackson, JJ. Mar. 14, 1864.]

WHAT was held to be a sufficient punishment in a case of false evidence in which the prisoners pleaded guilty before the Sessions Court.—QUEEN v. UNNOO PATOONEE, 3 W. R. 15. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. May 18, 1865.]

A FALSE statement by a witness as to his position or character, ought not to be punished so severely as a false charge or a false claim.—QUEEN v. REWAH GOLLAH, 5 W. R. 95. [Norman and Campbell, JJ. May 28, 1866.]

A DELIBERATE mis-statement made in a Court of Justice, whether it tends to endanger the life and property of others, or to defeat and impede the progress of justice, is not an offence which should be lightly passed over. But for a simple mis-statement from which no such inferences can be drawn, a comparatively light sentence will suffice, particularly where the prisoner pleads guilty, and throws himself on the mercy of the Court.—QUEEN v. GURJOON AHEER, 7 W. R. 37. [Loch and Seton-Karr, JJ. Mar. 6, 1867.]

FALSE charge under s. 211 and false evidence under s. 193 are not cognate offences, nor parts of the same offence, but may be punished separately.—QUEEN v. ABDOOL AZEEZ, 7 W. R. 59. Kemp and Glover, JJ. April 27, 1867.] Followed in Queen-Empress v. Pir Mahomed, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 254, infra.

CASE of perjury by females in which the majority of the Court refused to reduce the punishment.—QUEEN v. BISHOO BEWA, 7 W. R. 66. [Kemp, Seton-Karr, and Glover, JJ. May 7, 1867.]

A SENTENCE of 24 hours' imprisonment for giving false evidence was held to be quite inadequate.—QUEEN v. HOSSAIN ALI, 8 B. L. R. Ap. 25. [Ainslie, J. Aug. 16, 1871.]

UNDER s. 193 of the Penal Code it is obligatory upon the Court, in every case of conviction under that section, to pass some sentence of imprisonment.—EMPRESS v. KHOHAI SINGH, 3 C. L. R. 527. [Jackson, Markby, and Prinsep, JJ. July 29, 1878.]

WHERE the accused, who was a head-constable, was found guilty of making a false charge under s. 211, and of giving false evidence under s. 193 of the Penal Code, and the Sessions Judge passed sentences of three months' simple imprisonment for each offence, and, taking into consideration the accused's past conduct, directed that the sentences should run concurrently, held that the sentences were inadequate and illegal. Accordingly, the sentences were enhanced to three months' rigorous imprisonment for each offence; and as the two offences were distinct, the High Court directed, under s. 35 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), one sentence to commence after the expiration of the other. Queen v. Abdool Azeez (7 W. R. 59) followed.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PIR MAHOMED, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 254. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Dec. 10, 1885.]

SANCTION TO PROSECUTE FOR GIVING FALSE EVIDENCE

THE discretion vested in a Civil Court of sanctioning a criminal charge of perjury is one that should be most carefully exercised. Remarks on the present case, in which the discretion was improperly exercised.—QUEEN v. PROSA RAM, 6 W. R. 11. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. June 25, 1866.]

A GENERAL sanction by a Judge to a prosecution for giving false evidence under s. 193 of the Penal Code, and for false verification, is not sufficient. The exact words upon which the prosecution is based, and the exact offences which the Magistrate is to investigate, should be pointed out. The verification of an application filed in the Civil Court, in which it was stated that the applicant did not sign an alleged deed of compromise, does not subject him to punishment for giving false evidence. Such an application falls, not under s. 120, Act VIII. of 1859, but under s. 200 of that Act, and need not therefore, be verified. Documents which were tendered in the civil suit if relied on in a prosecution for giving false evidence, must be proved in the Criminal Court before they can be received as evidence.—QUEEN v. KARTICK CHUNDER HAZRAH, 9 W. R. 58. [Kemp and Jackson, JJ. April 14, 1868.]

WHERE the sanction to a prosecution accorded under s. 169, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), extended only to one of the persons charged, the High Court quashed the commitment, and directed the discharge of the persons to whom the sanction did not apply.—QUEEN v. WOODBURNUT SINGH, 10 W. R. 24A. [Phear and Hobhouse, JJ. Aug. 4, 1868.]

THE Civil Court, in giving permission to prosecute, should, in a case of forgery, state distinctly what the document is for which a prosecution is to be entertained. The particular act or acts of forgery, and, in a case of perjury, the particular words which constitute the perjury, should be specified.—REFERENCE IN THE CASE OF GOBIND CHUNDER GHOSE, 10 W. R. 41; 7 B. L. R. 28n. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. Sep. 11, 1868.]

THE sanction accorded by a Civil Court in a case under s. 193, Penal Code, need not be more specific than a general sanction to prosecute for any false statement contained in the two depositions given.—QUEEN v. KADIR BUX alias KADIR MAHOMED, 11 W. R. 17. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. Mar. 4, 1869.] But see s. 195, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898).

WHERE the Magistrate, before whom a witness gives false evidence, himself commits such witness for trial, his sanction of the prosecution will be implied.—REG. v. MUHAMMAD KHAN alias IMAM KHAN, 6 Bom. H. C. R. 54. [Warden and Lloyd, JJ. Aug. 20, 1869.]

S. 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), requires that sanction to prosecutions therein mentioned shall be given before any such prosecution is commenced. Until the sanction is obtained, the tribunal by which the offence is triable has no jurisdiction, and a conviction founded on evidence taken without such sanction would be bad. Where a complainant charged a person who was one of the public servants mentioned in s. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code, with committing acts which, if committed by a private individual, would have constituted the offence of extortion, it was held that it was not illegal to treat the charge as a charge of extortion, and to proceed with the trial without sanction for the prosecution.—REG. v. PANDHARAM KESHAV, 7 Bom. H. C. R. 61. [Gibbs and Melvill, JJ. July 28, 1870.]

AN application under s. 169 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861), praying for sanction to institute a prosecution on a charge of perjury, should, as a general rule, be first made to the Court before which the perjury is alleged to have been committed.—In re RAJAH OF VANKATAGIRI, 6 Mad. H. C. R. 92. [Scotland, C.J., and Holloway, J. Feb. 27, 1871.]

WHERE sanction under s. 170 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), to prosecute a person criminally for fabricating false evidence, was not given, it was held that the error was not cured by s. 426 of that Code (or s. 537 of the new Code) and the person charged was ordered to be discharged. The sanction given by the Sessions Judge after the case was committed to him, and the prisoner had pleaded to the charge, is not a sanction contemplated by the law.—QUEEN v. MOHIMA CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY, 15 W. R. 45; 7 B. L. R. 26. [Loch and Macpherson, JJ. Mar. 25, 1871.]

ALTHOUGH the averment on the record of a Magistrate by whom a prisoner is tried, that the accused, before making a confession, was warned that it was optional with him to answer the questions put to him or not, is, on appeal, conclusive as to the fact of such a warning having been given, it is not conclusive to show that such a confession has not been made under the influence of fear engendered by previous maltreatment, or is not otherwise valueless. Allegations made in a regular and proper manner before a Sessions Court on appeal, that a confession made by the accused before the Magistrate who tried the case was made under such circumstances as to preclude its admissibility in, or diminish its value as, evidence, should receive due attention, and be enquired into. A Sessions Court, refusing to make such inquiry, commits a grave error in law and procedure. Upon an inquiry which the High Court directed the Sessions Judge to make into such an allegation, the prisoners were ordered to be, and were solemnly affirmed, and the prosecution neither objected to the form of the order, nor to the affirmation of the prisoners, and moreover cross-examined them, but objected to their evidence being used upon the return of the inquiry. It was held that the objection, though possibly good if taken in time, was too late, and that the evidence of the prisoners might be used, whether the order directing them to be affirmed was correct or otherwise. Where, during such an inquiry, the Sessions Judge accorded his sanction to the prosecution for perjury of some of the witnesses who deposed on behalf of the prisoners, the High Court considered such a proceeding improper, and eminently calculated to defeat the object of the inquiry. Semble.—A person cannot be convicted, under s. 201 of the Penal Code, of causing evidence of the commission of an offence by himself to disappear, nor can he be convicted of the abetment of such an act (per Lloyd and Kemball, JJ.). Question as to the extent of the privilege of speech accorded to counsel and advocates considered. Important statements made in verified petitions to the High Court, if untrue, should be contradicted on affidavit. Appointment of the Magistrate who, in the first instance, had tried and convicted the accused, to be Crown prosecutor to conduct an inquiry subsequently directed in the same case censured as being unprecedented and objectionable. A public prosecutor should be without a personal interest in the cases which he conducts. Prisoners should be allowed to have free converse with their vakils out of the hearing of the police-officers in charge of such prisoners. It is undesirable that Magistrates whose decisions are under appeal, or who have been engaged in promoting the prosecution or police-officers concerned in a case, should sit on the bench beside, or converse privately in Court with, the Judge who is engaged in trying the prisoner's appeal. If the Appellate Judge wishes to ascertain any facts relating to the case from the Magistrate who convicted the accused, he should examine the Magistrate upon oath or solemn affirmation in the same manner as an ordinary witness. —REG. v. KASHINATH DINKUR, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 126. [Westropp, C.J., and Lloyd, Melvill, Green, and Kemball, JJ. April 12, 1871.]

SANCTION for the prosecution of the accused was accorded by an Assistant Sessions Judge in the following terms: "There is no doubt whatever that Tai, Baji, Bala, these three persons, made before me certain statements contradictory of the statements which they had made before the committing Magistrate. Therefore, if from such statements of theirs they may be liable to any charge, there is sanction from here" (i.e., I give my sanction) "for their prosecution." Held that this gave sufficient sanction for the prosecution of the accused under s. 193 of the Penal Code, and that it is not necessary that the authority giving the sanction should specify the particular section of the Penal Code under which the accused is permitted to be prosecuted.—REG. v. TAI, WIFE OF NANCHAND, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 24. [Westropp, C.J., and Gibbs, Melvill, and Kemball, JJ. April 26, 1871.] But see Jadunath Hazra v. Annada Prosad Sircar, 11 C. L. R. 53, infra; and s. 195, Act V of 1898.

WHERE a Civil Court, by letter to a Subordinate Magistrate with committing powers, gave sanction for the prosecution of the accused under ss. 463 and 471 of the Penal Code (making and using a false document), and where the Magistrate, in committing the accused for trial, in addition to framing a charge under these sections, added a head of charge under s. 193 (giving false evidence), it was held that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to commit the accused for trial on the last mentioned head of charge. —REG. v. SUBI SANI, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 28. [Westropp, C.J., and Lloyd, J. April 27, 1871.]

A CIVIL COURT has no power to make an order sanctioning a prosecution for an offence committed before the Court of the Principal Sadr Ameen on the Small Cause side, that Court not being subordinate to the Civil

Court.—Ex-parte MAHALINGAIYAN, 6 Mad. H. C. R. 191. [Scotland, C.J., and Kindersley, J. May 3, 1871.]

THE words of s. 191 of the Penal Code are very general, and do not contain any limitation that the false statement made shall have any bearing upon the matter in issue. It is sufficient to bring a case within that section if the false evidence is intentionally given, that is to say, if the person making the statement makes it advisedly knowing it to be false, and with the intention of deceiving the Court, and of leading it to be supposed that that which he states is true. The object of the sanction required by s. 169, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), is to ensure that the prosecution should be instituted after due consideration on the part of the Court before whom the false evidence was given, or on the part of a Court to which such Court is subordinate. When a Magistrate perused the papers of a case which had been forwarded to him by a Subordinate Magistrate for consideration, and then sent on the papers to the District Superintendent of Police with an opinion adverse to the prisoner, and the District Superintendent of Police requested the Magistrate to issue a warrant against the prisoner, charging him with giving false evidence, it was held that the issue of the warrant was a sufficient sanction under s. 169 on the part of the Magistrate.—QUEEN v. MAHOMED HOSSAIN, 16 W. R. 37. [Macpherson and Ainslie, JJ. Aug. 4, 1871.]

A SESSIONS JUDGE has no authority under the law to interfere with the order of a Magistrate allowing a prosecution for false evidence.—GOPAL MOZUMDAR v. HURRO SOONDERY BOISTOMEE, 16 W. R. 50: 8 B. L. R. Ap. 20. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. Nov. 23, 1871.]

IT would be very undesirable for the High Court, except under very peculiar circumstances, to entertain, in the first instance, an application to authorize a prosecution for perjury.—IN THE MATTER OF SHEEB PERSHAD CHUCKERBUTTY, 17 W. R. 38. [Bayley and Markby, JJ. Mar. 23, 1872.]

WHERE the Judicial Commissioner of Assam, sitting as Sessions Judge, certified in his capacity of Judge of the Chief Civil Court in Assam that a charge of false evidence was entertained with the sanction of the District Court of Assam, to which the Court of the Munsif of Debrooghur, before or against which the offence was committed, was subordinate, held that the sanction required by s. 169, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), had been given.—BAPOORAM ALIAM v. GUNGA RAM KACHAREE, 17 W. R. 54. [Couch, C.J., and Ainslie, J. April 22, 1872.]

THE commitment of certain persons charged, under s. 193, Penal Code, with intentionally giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding, was held to be illegal, inasmuch as the sanction of neither the Court before or against which the offence was committed, nor of some other to which such Court is subordinate, was given. It is not necessary to constitute the offence of abetment that the act abetted should be committed.—REFERENCE IN THE CASE OF DINONATH BURODA, 18 W. R. 32. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 24, 1872.]

A SUBORDINATE MAGISTRATE refused to grant sanction for a prosecution on the sole ground that the perjury was alleged to have been committed before his predecessor in office. Held that the Subordinate Magistrate was wrong in his construction of the section. The Court before which the perjury is alleged to have been committed is to give the permission. The change of incumbent leaves it still the same Court.—PRO., Nov. 12, 1872, 7 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 12.

THE words, "such sanction may be given at any time," in s. 169, Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861) must be construed reasonably, and "any time" means a time which does not unduly prejudice the party to be prosecuted, or put him in a worse position than he was before. No appeal lies against a Judge's order sanctioning such prosecution.—SITARAM SAHOO v. RAI BABU SHEW GOLAM SAHOO BAHADOOR, 18 W. R. 62. [Glover and Pontifex, JJ. Nov. 13, 1872.] But, under s. 195 of the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), no Court shall take cognizance of an offence punishable under s. 193 of the Penal Code, unless sanction has been previously obtained.

WHEN it is intended to charge a person with having made a false statement in the Court of a Magistrate, or (alternatively) a false statement in the Court of a Subordinate Judge, there must be a proper sanction for a prosecution on each branch of the alternative. A sanction for the prosecution must designate the Court where the false statement was alleged to have been made, and the occasion on which it was committed. It is desirable, if not necessary, that in the sanction for prosecution the description of the offence intended to be prosecuted should be stated in general terms, although details may be omitted.—In re BALAJI SITARAM, 11 Bom. H. C. R. 34. [West and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ. Mar. 18, 1874.]

IN a case in which the High Court was asked to sanction a prosecution for giving false evidence of a plaintiff in a suit before a Small Cause Court, which Court had refused such leave to defendant, it was held that the High Court would not be justified in exercising the discretion vested in them, unless it appeared very clearly that there were strong grounds for granting the sanction.—MONEY MOHUN DEY v. DINONATH MULLICK, 22 W. R. 11. [Kemp and Birch, JJ. April 28, 1874.]

THE Court declined in this case to say that a conviction was bad, because the Judge who tried the case, and the Judge who sanctioned the criminal proceedings, was the same.—QUEEN v. SUHAL CHUNDER GANGOOLY, 22 W. R. 16. [Markby and Mitter, JJ. May 18, 1874.]

As soon as it becomes apparent that a complaint is of an offence falling within s. 468 (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), and that it is made without sanction, the Magistrate is not competent to entertain it.—PRO., Feb. 16, 1875, 8 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 2.

HELD that the sanction referred to in ss. 468 and 469 of Act X. of 1872, when given by any of the Courts empowered under the Act, cannot be disturbed by a superior Court. Per Turner, Offg. C.J., and Pearson and Oldfield, JJ.—When sanction is refused by one of the Courts, the refusal does not deprive the other Courts of the discretion given to them. Per Spankie, J.—When sanction is refused by one of the Courts, the refusal does not deprive the superior Courts of the discretion given to them.—BARKATULLAH KHAN v. RENNIE, I. L. R., 1 All. 17. Turner, Offg. C.J., and Pearson, Spankie, and Oldfield, JJ. July 3, 1875.

A CONVICTION having been set aside as arrived at without jurisdiction, no sanction to the prosecution having been obtained from the Court against which the offence was committed, formal sanction was obtained the accused re-arrested, and, without being called upon to plead, ordered to undergo the sentence previously passed. Held that the whole of these proceedings were illegal.—IN THE MATTER OF EDOO KHANSAMAH, 24 W. R. 64. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Nov. 9, 1875.]

IN 1872, P and two others obtained a decree against S in the Bombay Court of Small Causes. For the enforcement of this decree, they presented to the District Judge of Thana an application in the form prescribed by s. 212 of the Code of Civil Procedure, alleging that the judgment-debtor had two salt-pans at Trombay, in the Thana district. The application did not, however, on the face of it, state whether it was made under the Civil Procedure Code or under Act IX. of 1850. The Judge entrusted the application for execution to the Subordinate Judge, who ordered an attachment and sale of these salt-pans. In the course of the proceedings which followed, the Subordinate and District Judges considered that J N had given and fabricated false evidence. On the 25th October 1875, the District Judge gave his sanction for the prosecution of J N and others. J N prayed the High Court to annul the sanction, alleging in his petition that the proceedings before the Subordinate Judge were, ab initio, coram non judice, as he had no authority to attach and sell immoveable property in execution of a decree of the Bombay Court of Small Causes. Held that, although the Court of Small Causes at Bombay has power to enforce its decree against moveable property only, yet, if that decree be transmitted to a Court to which the Code of Civil Procedure applies, the latter can, under s. 287 of that Code, enforce it against immoveable property also. Quære.—Whether a Court executing the decree of a Small Cause Court under s. 78 of Act IX. of 1850 could enforce it against immoveable property? Held, also, that the District Judge was quite within his province in giving his sanction to the prosecution. In Reg v. Hayat Bibee (unreported), West and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ., held that the High Court had no authority to interfere with the discretion to grant a sanction for prosecution, even in a case in which the High Court would not have granted the sanction itself. See also on this subject Barkatullah v. Rennie, I. L. R., 1 All 17.—In re JOGJIVAN NANABHAI, I. L. R., 1 Bom 82. West and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ. Jan 19, 1876.] But see s. 195, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

WHERE the High Court sanctions a prosecution for perjury, it is implied that the proper legal procedure will be adopted, and the proceedings instituted in a Court having jurisdiction to entertain the charge.—KEERUT SINGH v. NARAIN PARSEE, 25 W. R. 14. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. Jan. 21, 1876.]

FOR the purposes of s. 498 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), a Magistrate of the first class is subordinate to the Magistrate of the district. A sanction given by the latter to prosecute a person for intentionally giving false evidence before the former is therefore legal and sufficient, notwithstanding the refusal by the former to give such sanction himself. Semble.—That the Sessions Court has not power to give such sanction.—IMPERATRIX v. PADMANABH PAI, I. L. R., 2 Bom 384. [Melvill and Pinhey, JJ. Oct. 4, 1877.]

SECTION 466 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), extends to all acts ostensibly done by a public servant, i.e., to acts which would have no special signification, except as acts done by a public servant; therefore, a mahalkari, charged with fabricating the proceedings of a case decided before himself, could not be tried on that charge, except with the sanction specified in that section. Para. 1 of s. 466, which mentions a sanction by Government or its deputy, is intended to apply, at least chiefly, to the cases of persons specially responsible to Government, such as accountants who have failed in their duty; and para. 2, which speaks of sanction by Government alone to persons professing to exercise certain authority, and with that pretext doing an act which is impeached by a subject, on the ground of its being wholly unwarranted, or of an excess or impropriety of some kind. A mahalkari falls within the class of public servants contemplated in para. 1 of s. 466. A sanction for his prosecution by the District Magistrate is therefore sufficient. For the purpose of sanctioning a criminal prosecution under s 468 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), the Court of the Subordinate Judge is subordinate to that of the District Judge, notwithstanding that the subject-matter of the litigation in the former Court involves more than Rs. 5,000, and an appeal lies direct to the High Court from the decision of that Court in that matter. A prosecution commences when a complaint is made, the reception of the complaint being a stage of the judicial proceedings towards conviction.—IMPERATRIX v. LAKSHMAN SAKHARAM, I. L. R., 2 Bom 481. [West and Pinhey, JJ. Dec 20, 1877.]

HELD (Oldfield, J., dissenting) that, for the purpose of s 468 of Act X. of 1872, a Magistrate of the first class is subordinate to the Magistrate of the district, and consequently application for sanction to prosecute a person for intentionally giving false evidence before the former may, where such sanction is refused by the former, be made to the latter, and not to the Court of Session, which has not power to give such sanction.—IN THE MATTER OF GUR DAYAL, I. L. R., 2 All. 205. [Stuart, C.J., and Pearson, Spankie, and Oldfield, JJ. Mar 27, 1879.]

L MADE a complaint against S by petition, in which he only charged S of having committed offences punishable under ss 193 and 218 of the Penal Code, but in which he also accused S of acts which, if the accusation had been true, would have amounted to an offence punishable, under s 466 of that Code, with seven years' imprisonment. The Magistrate inquired into the charges against S under ss 193 and 218 of the Penal Code, and directed his discharge. L then applied to the Court of Session to direct S to be committed for trial, on the ground that he had been improperly discharged, which the Court of Session did; and S was committed for trial charged under s. 218 of the Code, and was acquitted by the Court of Session. The Court of Session then, under s. 472 of Act X. of 1872, charged L with offences punishable under ss. 193, 195, 211, and 211 and 109 of the Penal Code, and committed him for trial. Held that such commitment was not bad by reason that an offence under s. 193 of the Penal Code is not exclusively triable by a Court of Session. Held also per Stuart, C.J. (Spankie, J., doubting).—That the High Court is competent, in the exercise of its power of revision under s. 297 of Act X. of 1872 to quash a commitment made by a Court of Session under the provisions of s. 472 of that Act (or s. 477 of the Act of 1862). Held also, per Spankie, J.—That the Court of Session was competent notwithstanding that L had only charged S with offences under ss. 193 and 218 of the Penal Code, to charge L with offences under ss. 195 and 211, if such offences had come under its cognizance.—EMPRESS v. LACHMAN SING, I. L. R., 2 All. 398. [Stuart, C.J., and Spankie, J. June 11, 1879.]

A PERSON who makes a false statement upon oath before a police-patel acting under s. 13 of Bom. Act VIII. of 1867 gives false evidence within the meaning of s. 191 of the Penal Code, and is punishable under s. 193; but his trial for that offence requires no sanction, a police-patel not being a Criminal Court within the definition of s. 4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872), although offences under ch 10 of the Penal Code, committed before the same officer, cannot be tried without a sanction.—IMPERATRIX v. IBBASAPA, I. L. R., 4 Bom 479 [M. Melvill and F. D. Melvill, JJ. April 29, 1880.]

AN instruction to the Magistrate of the district by the Court of Session, contained in the concluding sentence of its judgment in a case tried by it to prosecute a person for giving false evidence before it in such case, does not amount to sanction to a prosecution of such person for such offence within the meaning of s 468 of Act X. of 1872, that section (468) supposing a complaint, or at least an application for sanction for a complaint. Where a Court thinks that there is sufficient ground for inquiring into a charge mentioned in s 467, 468, or 469 of Act X. of 1872, it should proceed under s. 471 of that Act (or s. 476 of the new Act). Attention of the Court of Session in this case directed to Queen v. Baijoo Lal (I. L. R., 1 Cal. 450).—EMPRESS v. GOBARDHAN DAS, I. L. R., 3 All. 62. [Pearson, J., June 26, 1880.] Referred to in In re Banarsi Lal, I. L. R., 18 All. 213, infra.

THE Courts that have jurisdiction to grant a sanction to proceedings under s. 468 of Act X. of 1872 are the Court before which the offence was alleged to have been committed, and the Courts to which such Court is subordinate. Per Garth, C.J.—Where a case is settled without evidence being gone into, the Court in which the suit was brought, even if it have power to sanction criminal proceedings against any of the parties to such suit under s. 468 of Act X. of 1872 is guilty of great impropriety and indiscretion in so doing, inasmuch as it can have had no opportunity of judging of the bonâ fides of the claim or defence. Semble. — A petition presented under Reg. XVII. of 1860, not requiring verification, cannot, from the fact of its being verified unnecessarily, be made the subject of a prosecution for giving false evidence.—IN THE MATTER OF KASI CHUNDER MOZUMDAR JUGGUT CHUNDER MOZUMDAR v. KASI CHUNDER MOZUMDAR, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 440; 7 C. L. R. 33. [Garth, C.J., and Maclean, J. Sep. 29, 1880.] Dissented from in Shashi Kumar Dey v Shashi Kumar Dey, I. L. THE Mamlatdars Court, constituted by Bom. Act III. of 1876, is a Civil Court within the meaning of s. 468 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872). Therefore a complaint of an offence mentioned in that section, when such offence is committed before or against the Mamlatdar's Court, shall not be entertained in the Criminal Courts except with the sanction of the Mamlatdar's Court, or of the High Court to which it is subordinate.—In re SAVANTA, I. L. R., 5 Bom 137. [Kemball and Melvill, JJ. Sep. 1880.]

WHEN a Sessions Judge on appeal annuls the conviction of a Magistrate for want of jurisdiction, and omits to order a re-trial at the time under s. 284 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872), he is not precluded, by virtue of s. 464 of the Code of 1872 (or s. 367 of the new Code), from passing such an order subsequently. The order annulling the conviction in such a case does not amount to an acquittal. Where sanction is given for a prosecution for perjury, and the case tried by an incompetent Court, and the conviction quashed on appeal, a competent Court may re-try the prisoner upon the subsisting sanction without any order of the Appellate Court by whom the conviction is quashed. The evidence of a witness, given in a proceeding pronounced to be coram non judice, cannot be used under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, if the witness is dead on a re-trial before a competent Court. R charged A with breach of trust, and S gave evidence in support of the charge. A being acquitted, R was tried for making a false charge, and S for perjury. Held (1) that the depositions given by witnesses in the first case could be used against R in the second case, but not against S, under s. 33, Evidence Act; (2) that the word "questions" in s. 33 does not mean "all the questions," and that, though additional issues were involved in the second trial, yet the evidence as to the issues common to both trials was properly admitted at the second trial against R. —In re RAMI REDDI, I. L. R., 3 Mad. 48. [Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. May 2 1881.]

ON an application to a Munsif for sanction to prosecute, the following order was made upon the petition: "If the petitioner thinks there is sufficient evidence against A, I have no objection to give such sanction." Held that the order was not a sufficient sanction to support a prosecution.—JADUNATH HAZRA v. ANNODA PROSAD SIRCAR, 11 C. L. R. 53. [Prinsep and O Kinealy, JJ. May 22, 1882.]

IT is competent for a Court which has granted sanction to a prosecution under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code to give a fresh sanction, if the one previously granted has expired by efflux of time. The limitation of six months mentioned in s. 195 means that a Magistrate shall not take cognizance of a case under a sanction which is more than six months old, not that the whole prosecution must be completed within that period. Held, therefore, where sanction to a prosecution had been granted under s. 195, and the prosecution had been instituted, and the Magistrate, in consequence of evidence of the complainant not being procurable, had ordered "the case to be shelved for the present," and the complainant, after the six months mentioned in s. 195 had expired, applied to the Magistrate to re-open the proceedings, that it was competent for the Magistrate, having once taken cognizance of the case, and it still remaining on his file undetermined, to take it up again at any moment, and proceed with the prosecution without fresh sanction. —IN THE MATTER OF GUTAB SINGH v. DEBI PROSAD, I. L. R., 6 All 45. [Straight, Offg. C.J. July 28, 1882.]

ON an application for sanction to prosecute under s. 468 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), it is not competent to the Court to go beyond the record in determining whether or not sanction should be granted when the record itself discloses no foundation for the charges. In re Kasi Chunder Mozumdar (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 440) approved.—ZAMINDAR OF SIVAGRI v. QUEEN, I. L. R., 6 Mad 29. [Innes, Offg. C.J., and Kernan, J. Aug. 30, 1882. Dissented from in Shashi Kumar Dey v. Shashi Kumar Dey, I. L. R., 19 Cal. 345, infra.

THE Court of an Assistant Collector is not subordinate to that of the Magistrate of the district within the meaning of s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Sanction to prosecution granted under s. 195 should specify the Court or other place in which, and the occasion on which, the offence was committed, and such sanction should not be granted without a preliminary inquiry, where such inquiry is "necessary" within the meaning of s. 476 of the Code. Where sanction to the prosecution of a person for the offence of using certain evidence known to be false was granted by a Court to which the Court in which such evidence was used was not subordinate, and such sanction did not specify the place in which, and the occasion on which, such offence was committed, and the Court granting the sanction did not make any preliminary inquiry, although such an inquiry was "necessary," in the sense of s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code: Held that the indispensable preliminary conditions of s. 195 of the Code being wanting to the prosecution, the committing Magistrate was incompetent to entertain the case and the commitment was illegal, and should be quashed. Held, also, that the fact that there was not any evidence to connect such person with the use of such false evidence was a defect in law sufficient to justify the quashing of the commitment.—EMPRESS v. NAROTAM DASS, I. L. R., 6 All. 98. [Tyrrell, J. Oct. 2, 1883.]

IN a suit on a bond instituted in the Court of a Munsif, the question whether the defendant had executed the bond or not was referred to arbitration. The arbitration decided that the defendant had not executed the bond, and that it was a forgery. The Munsif dismissed the suit in accordance with the award. The defendant then applied to the Munsif for sanction to prosecute the plaintiff without specifying in his application the offences in respect of which he desired to prosecute. The Munsif granted sanction, merely observing that there were sufficient grounds for sanctioning the prosecution without giving any reasons or specifying the offence or offences in respect of which sanction was granted. Held that the terms in which the Munsif had given his sanction to a prosecution were not sufficiently explicit and that he should have mentioned the section or sections of the Penal Code under which he authorized criminal proceedings to be taken, as also in a general way the offence or offences to be charged, the date of commission, and the place where committed. Further that, as the Munsif himself had not determined the question of forgery in the suit, he should have made some enquiry to satisfy himself that there were materials to justify a prosecution.—IN THE MATTER OF PARSOTAM LAL v. BIJAI, I. L. R., 6 All. 101. [Straight, J. Oct 23, 1883.]

A SANCTION to a prosecution for giving false evidence, granted under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, should specify the place where, and the time when, the alleged false evidence was given, and in substance the assignments of perjury, as also the sections of the Penal Code under which proceedings are authorized.—IN THE MATTER OF HARDIAL v. DURGA PRASAD, I. L. R., 8 All. 105. [Straight, J. Oct 27, 1883.]

BEFORE granting a sanction to prosecute under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Court is bound to satisfy itself that an offence has been committed; but it is not bound to hold any inquiry as to all the persons who may be implicated in such offence. —In re GOVINDAN, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 224. [Hutchins, J. Dec. 18, 1883.]

A DISTRICT COURT has jurisdiction, under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to revoke or grant a sanction granted or refused by a Subordinate Judge's Court.—VENKATA v. MUTTUSAMI, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 314. [Turner, C.J., and Brandt, J. Feb. 12, 1884.]

A SUB-DIVISIONAL MAGISTRATE, after perusing the calendar of a case tried by a Magistrate subordinate to him, send for the record, and passed an order under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, sanctioning the prosecution of a witness in the case for perjury. Held that the order was illegal.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KUPPU, I. A SANCTION to prosecute, when applied for subsequently to the termination of the proceedings in course of which the offence is alleged to have been committed, ought not to be granted, unless the person against whom the sanction is applied for had had notice of the application, and an opportunity of being heard.—ABHILAKH SINGH v. KHUB LALL, I. L. R., 10 Cal. 1100. Field and Norris, JJ. Aug. 19, 1884.] But see In the Matter of Krishnanund Das, I. L. R., 12 Cal. 58, infra.

SANCTION was granted to prosecute a defendant for forgery and perjury alleged to have been committed by him in a civil suit which was decided against him on the 22nd August 1882. The defendant then preferred an appeal, which was dismissed on the 9th August 1883. The plaintiff commenced criminal proceedings against the defendant under the sanction on the 23rd July 1884; but such proceedings having been commenced more than six months after the date of the sanction, the charge was dismissed. The plaintiff then, on the 20th August 1884, applied for a fresh sanction, which was granted on the 13th April 1885. Held that, assuming that the Munsif who granted the fresh sanction had power to do so, as to which the Court expressed no opinion, such fresh sanction should not have been granted, unless some explanation was given for the omission to commence proceedings within six months; and as no such explanation was given, or any special grounds shown why a fresh sanction should be given, the Munsif did not exercise a sound discretion in granting such fresh sanction, and consequently his order was set aside.—JOYDEO SINGH v. HARIHAR PERSHAD SINGH, I. L. R., 11 Cal. 577. [Mitter and Norris, JJ. May 22, 1885.]

ON the 2nd August 1884, a Munsif, who was of opinion that, in the course of a suit which had been tried before him, certain persons had committed offences under ss. 193, 463, and 471 of the Penal Code, and that the prosecution of these persons was desirable, made an order which he described as passed under s. 643 of the Civil Procedure Code, and in which he directed that the accused should be sent to the Magistrate, and that the Magistrate should inquire into the matter. In May 1885, upon an application by one of the accused to the District Court to "revoke the sanction for prosecution granted by the Munsif," it was contended that the "sanction" had expired on the 2nd February 1885, and had ceased to have effect. Held by the Full Bench that the Munsif's order, whether it was or was not a sanction, was a sufficient "complaint" within the meaning of s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the limitation period prescribed by that section was applicable to the case. Per Petheram, C.J., and Straight, J.—That, considering that s. 643 of the Civil Procedure Code was closely similar to s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Munsif's order might be taken as having been passed under the latter section. Also per Petheram, C.J., and Straight, J.—The words in s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, "except with the previous sanction or on the complaint of the public servant concerned," must be read in connection with s. 476, which was enacted with the object of avoiding the inconvenience which might be caused if a Munsif, or a Subordinate Judge, or a Judge, were obliged to appear before a Magistrate, and make a complaint on oath, like an ordinary complainant, in order to lay the foundation for a prosecution. The language of s. 476 indicates that, where a Court is acting under s. 195, a complaint in the strict sense of the Code is not required, and that the procedure therein laid down constitutes the "complaint" mentioned in s. 195.—ISHRI PROSAD v. SHAM LALL, I. L. R., 7 All. 871. [Petheram, C.J., and Straight, Brodhurst, and Tyrrell, JJ. July 4, 1885.]

NO notice is necessary to the person against whom it is intended to proceed, before the Court before which the alleged offence has been committed can, under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, sanction a complaint being made to a Magistrate regarding one of the offences specified in that section.—IN THE MATTER OF KRISHNANUND DAS; KRISHNANUND DAS v. HARI BERA, I. L. R., 12 Cal. 58. [Pigot and O'Kinealy, JJ. Sep. 22, 1885.] But see Abdulakh Sing v. Khub Lall, I. L. R., 10 Cal. 1100, infra.

IN cases not of the kind contemplated in s. 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882) it is not competent to a Magistrate holding a preliminary inquiry to tender a pardon to the accused, or to examine him as a witness. Statements made by the accused, in the course of such examination are irrelevant, and, if subsequently retracted, cannot be used against him, or subject him to a prosecution for giving false evidence under s. 193 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860). Reg v. Hemanta (I. L. R., 1 Bom. 610) followed. When a pardon is legally tendered to the accused under s. 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), and the accused makes a statement on oath which he retracts in a subsequent judicial proceeding, a proper sanction is necessary for a prosecution for giving false evidence on each branch of the alternative charges. In re Balaji Sitaram (11 Bom. H. C. R. 34) followed. Such sanction can only be granted before, and not after, the commencement of the prosecution.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DALA JIVA, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 190. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Dec. 10, 1885.]

A POLICE-CONSTABLE taking down a statement under s. 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not a Judge, nor is the place where he officiates a Court. His sanction is, therefore, not necessary, under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to a prosecution for a false statement made to him, whether the charge be framed singly or alternatively.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ISMAIL valad FATARU, I. L. R., 11 Bom. 659. [West and Birdwood, JJ. April 5, 1887.]

S. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882) distinguishes between the sanction granted by a Court to a prosecution by a private individual and a complaint made by the Court itself. A superior Court to which such Court is subordinate may revoke the sanction granted in the former case to the private prosecution, but it has no power in the latter case to set aside a complaint duly made by a subordinate Court.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RACHAPPA, I. L. R., 13 Bom. 109. [Birdwood and Parsons, JJ July 5, 1888.]

A CIVIL COURT granted sanction, under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to the defendant in a suit to prosecute certain witnesses for perjury. The defendant died without having preferred a complaint. His brother thereupon preferred a complaint, and the Magistrate dismissed it under s. 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, on the ground that the sanction died with the defendant. The Sessions Judge held that the sanction was alive, and directed the District Magistrate to make further inquiry under s. 437. Held that the Sessions Judge was right.—In re THATHAYYA, I. L. R., 12 Mad. 47. [Collins, C.J., and Parker, J. Sep. 5, 1888.]

A REGISTRAR, acting under the Registration Act, ss. 72-75, is a Court for the purposes of the Criminal Procedure Code, s 195.—ATCHAYYA v. GANGAYYA, I. L. R., 15 Mad. 138. [Collins, C.J., and Muttusami Ayyar, Parker, and Shephard, JJ. Jan. 22, Oct. 13, 1891; Jan. 8, 1892.]

IT is competent for a Civil Court before which a case may have been settled without any evidence being gone into, and which has grounds for supposing the offence of the nature referred to in s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has been committed before it during the pendency of such case, to make a preliminary enquiry, and thus satisfy itself whether a primâ-facie case has been made out for granting sanction, and, if so satisfied, to grant sanction for the prosecution of the person alleged to have committed such offence. A sanction granted after such preliminary enquiry, and based thereon, is not illegal. In re Kasi Chunder Mozumdar (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 440) and Zamindar of Sivagiri v. The Queen (I. L. R., 6 Mad. 29) dissented from on this point.—SHASHI KUMAR DEY v. SHASHI KUMAR DEV, I. L. R., 19 Cal. 345. [Norris and Beverley, JJ. Jan. 27, 1892.]

THE High Court has jurisdiction to interpose in the case of an order made by a Court under s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and has also the power to determine whether the discretion given by that section has or has not been properly exercised. In the Matter of the Petition of Khepu Nath Sikdar v. Girish Chunder Mukerjee (I. L. R., 16 Cal. 730) relied on.—CHAUDHARI MAHOMED IZHARUL HUQ v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 349. [Pigot and Rampini, JJ. Aug. 10, 1892.]

THE proceeding under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, by which an order granting or refusing to grant sanction to prosecute may be set aside, is a proceeding in revision, and not by way of appeal.—MEHDI HASAN v. TOTA RAM, I. L. R., 15 All. 61. [Knox, J. Nov. 19, 1892.]

THE Bengal Tenancy Act does not authorize a proceeding calling upon a person to show cause why he should not make over documents and papers belonging to an estate of which a common manager has been appointed. A person giving false evidence in such proceeding cannot be convicted under s 193 or s 199 of the Penal Code.—ABDUL MAJID v. KRISHNA LAL NAG, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 724. [Trevelyan and Rampini, JJ. April 13, 1893.]

A SANCTION to prosecute for giving false evidence should specify clearly the statement alleged to be false, so that the person sought to be charged may be definitely informed what is the criminal act alleged against him.—In re JIVAN AMBAIDAS, I. L. R., 19 Bom. 302. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. Mar. 29, 1894.]

SANCTION to prosecute R for offences under ss 193 and 471 of the Penal Code, committed in the course of a judicial proceeding, was granted on the 5th September 1893, and the prosecution was commenced before the Magistrate on the 7th March 1894, the 4th March being a Sunday, and the 5th and 6th Court holidays. R was committed to the Sessions. Held that as s 7 of Act I. of 1887 does not apply to the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1882, and there is no provision of law by which the period provided by s. 195 during which a sanction may remain in force can be extended by reason of the period expiring during Court holidays, the proceedings of the Magistrate were without jurisdiction, and the commitment must be quashed. Held, further, that s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was not intended to override the provisions of s. 195, nor can it be said that there has not been a failure of justice in the prosecution of a person after the period for which the sanction was in force has expired.—RAJ CHUNDER MOZUMDAR v. GOUR CHUNDER MOZUMDAR, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 176. [Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J. Sep. 5, 1894.]

WHERE sanction to prosecute is granted in respect of perjury committed in the course of a civil suit, the valuation of such civil suit is immaterial to the question of the Court to which an application under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for revocation of the order granting sanction will lie.—GANGA DEI v. SHER SINGH, I. L. R., 17 All. 51. [Blair, J. Oct. 22, 1894.]

IN matters relating to the grant of sanction to prosecution under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), a Court is regarded as "subordinate" to another Court where the latter is the Court to which appeals from the former ordinarily lie, i.e., lie in the majority of cases Though the decree in the present instance was appealable to "Her Majesty in Council," still, as appeals from the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon ordinarily lay to the High Court, the former was held to be subordinate to the latter Court within the meaning of the section. In re Anant Ramchundra Lotlikar (I. L. R., 11 Bom 438) followed.—MADURAY PILLAY v. ELDERTON, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 487. [Norris and Beverley, JJ. Feb. 12, 1895.]

THE District Forest Officer applied by letter to the District Magistrate to take such action as he deemed fit against one Subbaraya Pillai, who, for reasons stated by the District Forest Officer, was suspected of having abetted the offence of giving false evidence in the course of proceedings instituted on behalf of the Forest Department in the Court of a Second-class Magistrate. The District Magistrate had previously directed that all appeals from the Second-class Magistrate should be heard by the Deputy Magistrate, but he passed an order himself, whereby he (1) sanctioned the prosecution of Subbaraya Pillai, and (2) directed that it should take place in the Court of the Head Assistant Magistrate. Held (1) that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to sanction the prosecution for the reason that he was not the ordinary appellate authority; (2) that the second part of his order was irregular for the reasons that it was not authorized by the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 195, and he had no jurisdiction to act under s. 476, since the alleged offence was not brought to his notice in the course of a judicial proceeding.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SUBBARAYA PILLAI, I. L. R., 18 Mad. 487. [Collins, C.J., and Parker, J. Feb. 27, 1895.]

BOTH the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate are competent, under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to order a further enquiry; but the Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction to review an order made by the District Magistrate under that section refusing a further enquiry. It is open to the Sessions Judge to refer the matter to the High Court under s. 438. If six months expire after the grant of sanction under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and no prosecution is commenced under it within that time it is not open to the prosecutor to procure a fresh sanction, and to institute proceedings upon such fresh sanction. The words "six months from the date on which the sanction was given" must be taken to mean six months from the date on which it was given in the first instance, and not from any subsequent date on which the purport of the order might have been repeated. The Munsif who tried the suit out of which the application for sanction arose refused to sanction any prosecution; the Munsif who originally sanctioned the prosecution was a different officer, while the Munsif who gave the fresh sanction was neither the Munsif who tried the case, nor the Munsif who sanctioned the prosecution originally. Semble.—Under these circumstances, it is extremely doubtful whether the sanction was such as is contemplated by s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code.—DARBARI MANDAR v. JAGOO LAL, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 573. [Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J. April 8, 1895.]

AN application for sanction to prosecute for forgery or perjury must indicate precisely the document in respect of which forgery is said to have been committed, or must set forth in detail the statements alleged to be false, showing the place where, and the occasion on which, such alleged false statements were made.—BALWANT SINGH v. UMED SINGH, I. L. R., 18 All. 203 [Edge, C.J., and Banerjee, J. Jan 18, 1896.]

A SANCTION to prosecute under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure presupposes an application for sanction, and where no such application is made, a Court ought not to take upon itself to grant sanction, but should take action in the manner provided by s. 476 of the Code. Empress of India v. Gobardhan Das (I. L. R., 3 All. 62) referred to.—IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BANARSI DAS, I. L. R., 18 All. 213 [Aikman, J. Jan. 27, 1896.]

S. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898) runs as follows:—

No Court shall take cognizance—

(a) of any offence punishable under ss. 172 to 188 (both inclusive) of the Indian Penal Code, except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint of the public servant concerned, or of some public servant to whom he is subordinate;

(b) of any offence punishable under s. 193, 194, 195, 196, 199, 200, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, or 228 of the same Code, when such offence is committed in, or in relation to, any proceeding in any Court, except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint, of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate;

(c) of any offence described in s. 463, or punishable under s. 471, 475, or 476 of the same Code, when such offence has been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding, except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint, of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate.

(2) In clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1), the term "Court" means a Civil, Revenue, or Criminal Court, but does not include a Registrar or Sub-Registrar under the Indian Registration Act, 1877.

(3) The provisions of sub-section (1) with reference to the offences named therein apply also to the abetment of such offences, and attempts to commit them.

(4) The sanction referred to in this section may be expressed in general terms, and need not name the accused person; but it shall, so far as practicable, specify the Court or other place in which, and the occasion on which, the offence was committed.

(5) When sanction is given in respect of any offence referred to in this section, the Court taking cognizance of the case may frame a charge of any other offence so referred to which is disclosed by the facts.

(6) Any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate, and no sanction shall remain in force for more than six months from the date on which it was given, provided that the High Court may, for good cause shown, extend the time.

(7) For the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie, that is to say —

(a) where such appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate;

(b) where such appeals lie to a Civil and also to a Revenue Court, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Civil or Revenue Court according to the nature of the case in connection with which the offence is alleged to have been committed;

(c) where no appeal lies, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the principal Court of original jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such first-mentioned Court is situate.

The Courts of Small Causes in the presidency-towns shall be deemed to be subordinate to the High Court, and every other Court of Small Causes shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court of Session for the sessions division within which such Court is situate.

ON the trial of certain prisoners on a charge of dacoity, a witness gave false evidence, and was committed under s. 477, Criminal Procedure Code, for trial on a charge under s. 193, Penal Code. After such committal it was discovered that one of the jurors empannelled in the dacoity case was deaf and partly blind, and thereupon, under s. 282, Criminal Procedure Code, the case was tried de novo before a competent jury. The trial of the charge under s. 193, Penal Code, was fixed for the November sessions, but on the 17th October 1895, on prisoner's application, the trial was adjourned to 2nd December 1895. On 20th November the prisoner's vakil put in a petition, alleging that he had moved the High Court for a transfer of the case. On this petition coming on for disposal, the prisoner's vakil moved orally for an adjournment under s. 526A, Criminal Procedure Code, which was refused. On the 30th November the prisoner's vakil put in a petition in which he prayed for an adjournment under s. 526A. This petition was refused, and the trial began on 2nd December, and judgment was written and pronounced on 5th December. In the meantime application had been made to the High Court for a transfer, and that petition was disposed of on 4th December, granting the transfer prayed, the High Court apparently being not aware that the trial was at that time proceeding before the Sessions Court. On 5th December, after the trial in the Sessions Court was concluded, and before judgment was delivered, a fresh petition was presented for an adjournment on the ground that a telegram had been received from the High Court transferring the case but the Sessions Judge refused to act upon it in the absence of orders from the High Court, and delivered judgment convicting the prisoner. During the trial before the Sessions Court the prisoner applied for an adjournment on the ground that two witnesses for the defence were absent, one being too ill to attend, the other not having been served with the summons, but the Sessions Judge, considering the application was made merely for purposes of delay, and to defeat the ends of justice, and that their evidence would not be material, refused to adjourn for their evidence to be recorded: Held, first, that the fact that the trial for dacoity had to be commenced de novo did not exonerate the prisoner from the obligation to speak the truth imposed by s. 14 of the Indian Oaths Act (X. of 1873) in the first trial, which became abortive owing to the incompetency of one of the jurors. Secondly, that s. 526A, Criminal Procedure Code, is imperative, but that the object of ss. 344 and 526, when read together, is merely to give a party reasonable time to move the High Court and obtain its orders, and that in the present case there was sufficient time for such application to have been made, if due diligence had been observed. Thirdly, that the order for transfer made on 4th December, which, in fact, did not reach the Judge till after judgment was pronounced, did not vitiate the proceedings; and that the Sessions Judge was not wrong in refusing to adjourn the case on the strength of a telegram said to have been received by prisoner's vakil stating that the High Court has ordered a transfer. Fourthly, that the Sessions Judge ought not to have refused to adjourn the case in order to obtain the evidence of the two absent witnesses, that their evidence was material, and must be recorded and certified to the High Court under s. 428, Criminal Procedure Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VIRASAMI, I. L. R., 19 Mad. 375. [Collins, C.J., and Benson, J. Mar. 26, 27, 31, Aug. 3, 1896.]

TRANSFER OF CASE.

THE High Court does not exercise its power of transfer in a case of forgery or perjury solely on the ground that the Judge who is to try the case has formed an opinion that the document has been forged or the perjury committed. But when the transfer can be made without the risk of any improper interference with the course of justice, and without much inconvenience to the parties and witnesses, the transfer would be proper, not only as a fair concession to the accused person, but as a means of relieving the Judge from a position which he would himself desire to avoid.—Ex parte ARUNACHELLA REDDI, 5 Mad. H. C. R. 212. [Scotland, C.J., and Holloway, J. Mar 4, 1870.]

CERTAIN witnesses made statements in a preliminary inquiry before a Magistrate, in a case of alleged murder, and contradicted those statements at the trial before the Court of Session. The latter then sanctioned their prosecution for giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding, an offence punishable under s. 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and triable by a Magistrate of the first class. The Deputy Magistrate, by whom they were tried, convicted them, and the accused appealed, the appeals being transferred to another Sessions Court for hearing. The Sessions Judge held that, inasmuch as the false statements had been made in connection with a charge of murder, the offence for which the accused should have been tried fell under s. 194, Indian Penal Code, and that, in consequence, they could be tried only by a Court of Session and not by a Magistrate of the first class. He considered their trial by a First-class Magistrate to be void under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and set aside their conviction, committing one of them for trial by a Court of Session on a charge under s. 194 of the Indian Penal Code, and making no order in respect of the other accused as he considered the imprisonment already undergone was sufficient. Held that the order was wrong as the proceedings of the First-class Magistrate were not void within the meaning of s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen-Empress v. Gundya (I. L. R., 13 Bom. 502) referred to.—KING-EMPEROR v. AYYAN, I. L. R., 24 Mad. 675. [Arnold White, C.J., and Benson, J July 22, 30, 1901.]

THE prisoner was convicted under s. 195 of the Penal Code of fabricating false evidence with intent to procure the conviction of a certain person of an offence. The prisoner's act was committed in a most public manner, and was not calculated to lead to the conviction of the person; nor did it appear that the prisoner took any steps to secure his conviction. Held that the conviction of the prisoner could not be sustained.—QUEEN v. IT is not necessary, under s. 194, Penal Code, that the false evidence which is given should be evidence given in a Court of Justice. Such statement, if made to a police-officer, would amount to the offence of giving false evidence as defined by s. 191, taking s. 118 of the Code into consideration.—QUEEN v NIM CHAND MOOKERJEE, 20 W. NEITHER the words "shall answer all questions" in s. 118 of the Code of Criminal Procedure nor the words "shall be bound to answer all questions" in s. 119 of the same Code, constitute "an express provision of the law to state the truth" within the meaning of s. 191 of the Penal Code. Ss. 118 and 119 are merely intended to oblige persons to give such information as they can to the police in answer to the questions which may be put to them, and they impose no legal obligation on those persons to speak the truth.—EMPRESS v. KASSIM KHAN; and EMPRESS v. MUSSAMUT DAHIA, I. L. R., 7 Cal 121; 8 C. L. R. 300. [Garth, C.J., and Pontifex, Morris, Mitter, and McDonell, JJ. Using evidence known to be false.

Note to s. 187—Ct. of Ses., Presy. Mag., or Mag. of 1st class. Uncog. Warrant. According as offence of giving such evidence is bailable or not. Not comp. Sanction.

THE provision of the Penal Code (s. 196) against using false evidence is not ordinarily intended to apply to subornation of perjury. To establish an offence under s. 196 it must be shown that the accused made some use of the false evidence after it was in existence. —QUEEN v. SHEIK SUFFURUDEE, 1 Ind. Jur. O. S. 122. [Steer and Campbell, JJ. Nov. 24, 1862.]

A PERSON who uses in Court false documents as true, besides swearing to their authenticity, may be convicted under s. 196 of the Penal Code only, and not under s. 471 also.—QUEEN v. OODUN LALL, 3 W. R. 17. [Glover, J. May 23, 1865.]

USING and attempting to use false evidence are two distinct and separate offences, and should have been charged in separate heads of the charge. As the above offences are not punishable under s. 193 without the application of s. 196 of the Penal Code, both sections should have been entered in the charge.—2 W. R. Cr. L. 9, No. 94 of 1865.]

WHERE a prisoner produced as evidence an account-book, one page of which had been fraudulently abstracted, and another substituted for it, held that he was not guilty of the offence of attempting to use, as genuine, fabricated evidence, unless he knew of the forgery, and intended to use the forged evidence, for the purpose of affecting the decision on the point at issue when the book was tendered. — QUEEN v. MUDDOO SOODUN SHAW, 7 W. R. 23. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Jan. 26, 1867.]

THE offence imputed against an accused, who in a civil suit is alleged to have used as genuine a document which he knew to be a forged document, is one cognizable under s. 471 of Penal Code. Such accused should, therefore, be charged under that section, and not under s. 196 of the Code.—EMPRESS v. KHERODE CHUNDER MOZUMDAR, I. L. R., 5 Cal. 717; 8 C. L. R. 118. [Jackson and Tottenham, JJ. Mar. 2, 1880.]

WHERE several persons were accused of having given false evidence in the same proceeding, they should be tried separately. A, S, B, D, and P, were jointly tried: A in respect of three receipts for the payments of money, produced by him in evidence in a judicial proceeding, on three charges of falsely using as genuine a forged document, and on three charges of using evidence known to be false; S, B, D, and P on charges of giving false evidence in the same judicial proceeding as to such payments The Court (Straight, J.) being unable to say that the accused persons had not been prejudiced in their defence by having been improperly tried together, set aside the convictions, and ordered a fresh trial of each of the accused separately.—EMPRESS v. ANANT RAM, I. L. R., 4 All. 293. [Straight, J. Feb 13, 1882.]

THE vendees of a plot of land altered the number by which the land was described in the deed of sale, doing so because such number was not the right number. Having made this alteration, they used the deed of sale as evidence in a suit. Held that the alteration of the deed did not amount to "forgery" within the meaning of s. 463 of the Penal Code, nor could the deed, after the alteration, be designated a "forged document" as contemplated by s. 470, the intention to cause wrongful loss or wrongful gain, or to defraud, being wanting; nor could it be said that, in using the deed, the vendees were "dishonestly" or "fraudulently" using as genuine a "forged document," and therefore the use by vendees of the deed did not constitute an offence under s. 471 of the Penal Code. Further, that their use of it did not render them liable to conviction under s 196 of that Code.—EMPRESS v FATEH, I. L. R., 5 All. 217. [Mahmood, J. Oct 2, 1882.]

L BROUGHT a suit upon a bond, and at the trial sought to support his claim by a letter

fabricated probably for the purpose of enabling L to get the bond registered. L was convicted under s 196 of the Penal Code. Held that, if the letter was fabricated for use before the Registrar, it was no valid objection to the conviction.—LAKSHMAJI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 7 Mad, 289. [Kindersley and Hutchins, JJ. Jan. 18, 1884.]

A is convicted of an offence under s. 196 of the Indian Penal Code upon a charge which omits to state that he knew the evidence which he corruptly used or attempted to use as true or genuine was false or fabricated. If the Court thinks it probable that A had such knowledge, and that he was misled in his defence by the omission from the charge of the statement that he had it, it shall direct a new trial upon an amended charge; but if it appears probable from the proceedings that A had no such knowledge, it shall quash the conviction.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), s. 232, illus.

A SESSIONS JUDGE is not debarred by s. 487 of the Criminal Procedure Code from trying a person for an offence punishable under s. 196 of the Penal Code, when he has, as District Judge, given sanction for the prosecution under the provisions of s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Madhub Chunder Mozumdar v. Nobodeep Chunder Pundit (I. L. R., 16 Cal. 121) overruled. Empress v. D'Silva (I. L. R., 6 Bom. 479) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SARAT CHANDRA RAKHIT, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 766. [Petheram, C J., and Tottenham, Trevelyan, Ghose, and Beverley, JJ. July 15, 1889.]

197. Whoever issues or signs any certificate required by law to be given or signed, or relating to any fact of which such certificate is by law admissible in evidence, knowing or believing that such certificate is false in any material point, shall be punished in the same manner as if he gave false evidence.

Issuing or signing false certificate.

ABETMENT of the issue of a false certificate of summons. Although there was no chaukidar in the village of the name appearing on the receipt acknowledging due service, the prisoner was acquitted in the absence of proof of guilty knowledge or belief, it being probable that he (an utter stranger in the village) was deceived by the villagers.—QUEEN v. HISSAMUDDEEN, 3 W. R. 37 [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. June 27, 1865.]

ACCUSED, a copyist in the Small Cause Court office, framed an incorrect copy of a document filed with a certain record by adding a name not contained in the original. The incorrect copy was delivered duly certified to one L D, the applicant for it, and who was probably in collusion with the copyist. This copy was afterwards made use of in a suit against the person whose name had been fraudulently added, and then the fraud was detected. The Magistrate convicted accused under s. 167, and ordered him to pay a fine of Rs. 100. Held that s. 167 was not applicable to the case, as it was not shown that accused intended or knew it to be likely that he would cause injury to any person, but that the accused had committed the offence of "issuing or signing a false certificate" within the meaning of s. 197. Held also (per Barkley, J.) that making what purports to be a copy of a document is not included in the words "preparation or translation of any document," nor in the words "frames or translates that document," as used in s 167.—CROWN v. DEIVA SINGH, Panj. Rec., No 15 of 1879.

UNDER the Burma Steam-boilers and Prime-movers Act (XVIII of 1882), s 15, any engineer signing any report under s. 9 of that Act which he either knows or believes to be false in any material point shall be deemed to have committed an offence punishable under s. 197 of the Penal Code.

Ditto.

which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false, or does not believe to be true, touching any point material to the object for which the declaration is made or used, shall be punished in the same manner as if he gave false evidence.

A HINDU who has become a convert to Christianity is not under a legal obligation to speak the truth, unless his evidence be given under the sanction of an oath on the Holy Gospels, so as to justify a conviction under s. 193 of the Penal Code. A statement made by a witness in a criminal trial not upon oath or solemn affirmation is not a declaration within the meaning of s. 199 of the Penal Code, nor is the witness bound to make a declaration under s. 191.—In re A. VEDAMUTTU, 4 Mad. H. C. R. 185. [Scotland, C.J., and Ellis, J. Dec. 21, 1868.]

A PETITION not bearing the signature of the accused, and therefore not a declaration, made or subscribed by him, cannot be made the foundation of a charge or conviction under s. 199 of the Penal Code, but a deposition on oath supporting such a petition, if false, justifies a charge under s. 193 of the Code —IN THE MATTER OF RAM REWAZ KOOER, 7 C. L. R. 536. [Garth, C.J., and Maclean, J. Oct. 22, 1880.]

S. 199 of the Penal Code (XLV. of 1860) does not apply to applications for execution containing false averments.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BAPUJI DAYARAM, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 288. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Feb. 18, 1886.]

A DEPUTY MAGISTRATE has no power to administer an oath to a person making a declaration in the shape of an affidavit, and such person cannot, on the facts stated in such declaration, be prosecuted for committing an offence either under s. 193 or s. 199 of the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF ISWAR CHUNDER GUHO, I. L. R., 14 Cal. 653. [Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J. June 30, 1887.]

THE Bengal Tenancy Act does not authorize a proceeding calling upon a person to show cause why he should not make over documents and papers belonging to an estate of which a common manager has been appointed. A person giving false evidence in such proceeding cannot be convicted under s. 193 or s. 199 of the Penal Code.—ABDUL MAJID v. KRISHNA LAL NAG, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 724. [Trevelyan and Rampini, JJ. April 13, 1893.]

ON the 5th May 1894, C applied in writing, under the provisions of s. 133 of Act III. of 1884, to a municipality for a license to be granted to him in respect of two carriages and six ponies, and filled up and signed the usual statement required by the section. The sum payable in respect of the license was received, and the license asked for by C was granted to him, and at the same time the statement was sent to an overseer of the municipality for verification. On the 7th May the overseer reported that C had in his possession eight ponies and one horse. On the 8th May the chairman of the municipality passed an order, directing C to be prosecuted for making a false statement in the schedule to his statement regarding the number of animals in respect of which he applied for the license. On the 9th May, C presented a petition asking that the tax on the three animals might be received, and stating that he did not think he was liable to take out a license for them, as they were old and diseased, and unfit for work. On the 13th May the chairman passed an order on this application that he had no power to interfere, as the prosecution of C had already been ordered. Meanwhile, on the 11th May, a paper was sent to the Magistrate, headed "List of municipal cases under Act III. of 1884," in which C appeared as charged with an offence under s. 199 of the Penal Code for "filing a false statement, that is to say, putting down in the schedule six ponies only instead of eight ponies and one horse." On the 12th May the Deputy Magistrate directed a summons to issue to C, returnable on the 23rd. On the 18th May the District Magistrate passed an order to the effect that the municipality could not institute a prosecution under the Penal Code, but that the Deputy Magistrate had power to do so, and that he should consider the provisions of ss. 182 and 417, read with 511 of the Penal Code, as applicable to the facts of the case. On the 19th May the summons was issued, and the case was heard on the 23rd and 24th May and 19th June, on which date formal charges under ss. 199, 182, and 417-511 of the Penal Code were framed. Thereafter the hearing proceeded till the 10th July, when, on an application to the High Court, the proceedings were stayed, and a rule issued to show cause why they should not be quashed. It was contended at the hearing of the rule that the High Court should not interfere at that stage of the proceedings under its revisional jurisdiction. Held that the High Court has power to interfere at any stage of a case, and that, when it is brought to its notice that a person has been subjected as in this case, for over two months, to the harassment of an illegal prosecution, it is its bounden duty to interfere.

Held, further, that it was quite clear that the municipality had no power to institute the proceedings, and that, having regard to the provisions of s. 191 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it did not appear that the Deputy Magistrate, having no private complainant before him, had power, of his own motion, to institute them; but that, whether he had such power or not, the admitted facts of the case did not in law constitute any of the offences with which C was charged, and that the whole proceedings must be quashed. The Municipal Act is intended to be complete in itself as regards offences committed against the Municipal Commissioners, and there is no indication of any intention to render a delinquent also liable to punishment under the Penal Code. There is no penalty in the Act attached to the omission to make a return under s. 133, and no words in the Act constituting the making a false return a penal offence; and as there are no such words in the Act as are necessary to make the provisions of the Penal Code applicable, the Court has no power to import them. The Municipal Commissioners in such a case have the remedy provided by the Act itself.—CHANDI PERSHAD v. ABDUR RAHMAN, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 131. [Petheram, C J., and Beverley, J. Aug. 13, 1894.]

A, knowing that B has murdered Z, assists B to hide the body with the intention of screening B from punishment. A is liable to imprisonment of either description for seven years, and also to fine.

* In s. 201, the word "offence" has the same meaning when the thing punishable under the special or local law is punishable under such law with imprisonment for a term of six months or upwards, whether with or without fine.—See s. 40, supra.

The word "offence" in s. 201 includes any act committed in any place out of British India, which, if committed in British India, would be punishable under any of the following sections, namely: 302, 304, 382, 392 to 399, 402, 435, 436, 449, 450, 457 to 460.—See explanation to s. 203, infra.

IN this section the word "offence" has the same meaning when the thing punishable under the special or local law is punishable under such law with imprisonment for a term of six months or upwards, whether with or without fine.—S. 40, Penal Code.

CHARGE.—That you, on or about , at , believing or having reason to believe that an offence punishable with death had been committed, caused evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment, and that you have thereby committed an offence punishable, &c.—8 W R. Cr. L. 7, No. 734 of 1867.

A SESSIONS JUDGE, in his address to the jury during the trial of a prisoner charged with offences under ss. 201, 202, and 203 of the Penal Code, made the following remarks: "The two essential points which remain to be proved before a conviction can pass on any of the three sections referred to are, first, the substantial fact of an offence having been committed; and, secondly, the knowledge or reasonable belief on the part of the accused that such was the case: both these are essential parts of the offences specified in the charges against the accused." The High Court pointed out that both these points were not absolutely necessary in order to constitute a legal conviction under s. 201, 202, or 203 of the Penal Code; for if a person had reason to believe (s. 26) that an offence had been committed, and acted in the manner described in either of those sections, he would be liable to punishment, even although it might subsequently transpire that he was mistaken in his belief.—2 W. R. Cr L. 1, No. 11 of 1865.

A COMMITS no offence, if, in the exercise of the right of private defence of his property against B, whom he finds near a hole in A's house, and, on being attacked by B, he strikes a blow at random and in the dark, with a stick in his hand, whereby B is killed. C and D, by assisting A in removing the body of B, cannot be convicted (under s. 201 of the Penal Code) of having caused evidence to disappear, they having no knowledge or belief that an offence had been committed, nor any intention of screening an offender.—QUEEN v. PELKO NUSHYO, 2 W. R. 43. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 15, 1865.]

PRISONER was present at a murder without being aware that such an act was to be committed. Through fear, he not only did not interfere to prevent the commission of the crime, but joined the murderers in concealing the body. Held that he was guilty, not of abetment of murder, but causing the disappearing of evidence of a crime under s. 201 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. GOBURDHUN BERA, 6 W. R. 80. [Loch and Pundit, JJ. Oct. 4, 1866.]

PRISONER was charged under s. 102 of the Penal Code, for that he, knowing or having reason to believe that an offence punishable with death had been committed, with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment, gave information respecting the offence which he knew or believed to be false. Held that the proper order of proof on the part of the prosecution in the present case was to prove (1) that A N was murdered; (2) that the prisoner gave information respecting the offence, (3) that such information was false, and known by him to be so; (4) that he then knew of the commission of the murder, and (5) that his intention was to screen the murder. Held, also, that it was essential to the completeness of the case for the prosecution to show, not only that the information was given, but also that it was false, and known to be so by the prisoner. Further inquiry directed under s. 422, Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861).—REG. v. SUBRAMANYA PILLAI, 3 Mad. H. C. R. 251. [Collet and Ellis, JJ. Dec. 17, 1866.]

S. 201 applies to the causing of disappearance of evidence of an offence committed by another, not by one's self.—5 W. R. Cr. L. 5, No. 242 of 1866.

A CONVICTION on a charge of causing the disappearance of evidence of an offence, which amounted to culpable homicide not amounting to murder, may be good, though there be no proof of who committed the culpable homicide.—QUEEN v. MUDDUN MOHUN BOSE, 7 W. R. 22. Kemp and Markby, JJ. Jan. 26, 1867.

S. 201 of the Penal Code refers to prisoners other than the actual criminals, who, by their causing evidence to disappear, assist the principals to escape the consequences of their offence. But the person who commits an offence, and afterwards conceals the evidence of it, cannot be punished on both heads of the charge.—QUEEN v. RAMSOONDAR SHOOTAR, 7 W. R. 52. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. April 6, 1867.

THE above section refers to persons (other than the actual criminals), who, by their causing evidence to disappear, assist the principal to escape the consequences of his offence. Thus, in Reg. v. Kashinath Dinkar (8 Bom. H. C. R. 126), Lloyd, J., observed: "This and the two following sections commence with precisely the same words. Now, as there is no law which obliges a criminal to give information which would convict himself, it is evident that ss. 202 and 203 could not apply to the person who committed the offence, i.e., the offence which, he knew, had been committed." A prisoner pushed a woman, who fell into a boat, and died then and there. Afterwards he set the boat, with the corpse in it, afloat down the river, and so concealed the evidence of his offence. It was held that he was not guilty of the offence of causing evidence to disappear.—QUEEN v. RAMSOONDER SHOOTAR, 7 W. R. 52. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. April 6, 1867.] Referred to in Queen-Empress v. Dungar, I. L. R., 8 All. 252, infra.

WHERE a person is charged (s. 218, Penal Code) with framing a report incorrectly, or (s. 201, Penal Code) giving false information with intent to save offenders from punishment, the issue to be tried is, not whether such alleged offenders were in fact guilty or not, but merely the belief and intention of the prisoners in respect to their guilt. Police-diaries cannot be legally used as substantive evidence or read to the jury.—QUEEN v. HURDUT SURMA, 8 W. R. 68. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. Sep. 7, 1867.

A PERSON cannot be convicted, under s. 201 of the Penal Code, of causing evidence of the commission of an offence by himself to disappear; nor can he be convicted of the abetment of such an act.—REG. v. KASHINATH DINKAR, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 126. [Westropp, C.J., and Lloyd, Melvill, Green, and Kemball, JJ. April 12, 1871.] Referred to in Queen-Empress v. Dungar, I. L. R., 8 All. 252, infra.

A PERSON cannot be punished under s. 201 of the Penal Code, where the act which caused the disappearance of the evidence of the commission of an offence was not done with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment. It is not sufficient that the disappearance of evidence was likely to have the effect of screening the offender.—QUEEN v. TOOLSHEE RAI, 5 N.-W. P. 186. [Jardine, J. June 7, 1873.]

THE accused, on his arrest, denied all knowledge of an offence in which he really took part. Held that he could not be convicted, under s. 201, of giving false information respecting an offence.—FAKIR-UD-DIN v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 4 of 1877.

K AND B, having caused the death of J in a field belonging to B, removed J's dead body from that field to his own field with the intention of screening themselves from punishment. K was convicted on these facts of an offence under s. 201 of the Penal Code. Held that that section referred to persons other than the actual offenders, and K could not, therefore, properly be punished under that section for what he had done to screen himself from punishment. Also that, as a matter of fact, he did not, by removing J's corpse from one field to another, cause any evidence of J's murder, which that corpse afforded, to disappear, and his act, although his object may have been to divert suspicion from himself and B, did not constitute the offence defined in that section.—EMPRESS v. KRISHNA, I. L. R., 2 All. 713. [Pearson, J. Feb. 18, 1880.] Referred to in Queen-Empress v. Dungar, I. L. R., 8 All. 252, infra.

IT is necessary, in order to justify a conviction under s. 201 of the Penal Code, that an offence for which some person has been convicted or is criminally responsible should have been committed.—EMPRESS v. ABDUL KADIR, I. L. R., 3 All. 279. [Stuart, C.J., and Pearson, Oldfield, and Straight, JJ. Nov. 11, 1880.] Followed in Matuki Misser v. Empress, I. L. R., 11 Cal. 619, infra.

A WOMAN who, with her infant child, eloped from her husband's house, was afterwards arrested on a charge of murdering the child, which was missing. She made three different statements: (1) that she had left it with her husband; (2) that she had been enticed away by one R, who had taken the child from her; (3) that one H had drowned the child. The Sessions Judge believed the last statement, and convicted her under s. 201 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction was wrong, and must be set aside. S. 201 of the Penal Code does not apply to a case where the person who is the probable or possible offender makes statements exculpating himself by inculpating another.—IN THE MATTER OF BEHALA BIBEE, EMPRESS v. BEHALA BIBEE, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 789: 8 C. L. R. 207. Pontifex and Field, JJ. Mar. 7, 1881.] Referred to in Queen-Empress v. Dungar, I. L. R., 8 All. 252, infra.

IN a trial upon a charge under s. 201 of the Penal Code, the accused made a statement to the effect that he was present at the commission of a murder by two other persons, that he himself took no part in the act; that, before the murder was committed one of the persons named pulled off a razai from the bed on which the deceased was sleeping; and that, in his presence, the razai was subsequently concealed in a stack. It was proved that the razai belonged to the deceased, that it was found concealed in a stack; and that it was pointed out by the accused to the police. The accused was convicted of concealing evidence of the murder, with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment, under s. 201 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction must be quashed, inasmuch as, if the razai had not been concealed or destroyed, its presence or existence would have been no evidence of the murder. A person who is concerned as a principal in the commission of a crime cannot be convicted of the secondary offence of concealing evidence of the crime.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. LALLI, I. L.

R., 7 All. 749. [Petheram, C.J., and Brodhurst, J. April 11, 1885.] Referred to in Queen-Empress v. Dungar, I L. R, 8 All 252, infra.

BEFORE an accused can be convicted of an offence under s. 201 of the Penal Code, it must be proved that an offence, the evidence of which he is charged with causing to disappear, has actually been committed, and also that the accused knew, or had information sufficient to lead him to believe, that the offence had been committed. Empress v. Abdul Kadir (I. L. R., 3 All. 279) followed. —MATUKI MISSER v. EMPRESS, I. L. R., 11 Cal. 619. [Mitter, Macpherson, and Prinsep, JJ. May 13, 1885.]

S. 201 of the Penal Code does not apply to the case of a criminal causing disappearance of evidence of his own crime, but only to the case of a person who screens the principal or actual offender Queen v. Ram Soonder Shuter (7 W. R. 52), Reg. v. Kashinath Dinkar (8 Bom. H. C. R. 126), Empress v Krishna (I. L. R., 2 All. 713), Empress v. Behala Bibee (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 789), and Queen-Empress v. Lalli (I. L. R., 7 All. 749), referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DUNGAR, I. L. R., 8 All. 252. [Brodhurst, J. April 5, 1886.]

S. 201 of the Penal Code applies merely to the person who screens the principal or actual offender, and not the principal or actual offender himself. The accused were charged with murder, and also with causing the disappearance of the corpse of the deceased with the intention of screening the murderer from punishment under s 201 of the Penal Code. Evidence for the prosecution pointed conclusively to one or other of them being the actual murderer; but it was impossible upon the evidence to say which of them caused the death. They were acquitted on the charge of murder, but convicted on the charge under s. 201. Held that the conviction could not stand.—TORAP ALI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 638. [Norris and Beverley, JJ. June 3, 1895.]

IN this section the word "offence" has the same meaning when the thing punishable under the special or local law is punishable under such law with imprisonment for a term of six months or upwards, whether with or without fine.—S. 40, Penal Code.

WHERE the corpus delicti is not established, there can be no conviction for culpable homicide not amounting to murder, nor for intentional omission to give notice of an offence which has not been proved to have been committed.—QUEEN v. RAM RUCHEA SINGH, 4 W. R. 29. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Nov. 28, 1865.]

A KARNAM is a private person in respect of ss. 176 and 202 of the Penal Code, there being no law binding him in any special way to report or prevent crime. He is therefore not liable to punishment for not reporting the commission of a crime not enumerated in ch. 4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882.—Mad. H. C Rul., Mar 12, 1867; 2 Mad. Jur. 289.

AN omission to give information that a crime has been committed does not, under s. 107 of the Penal Code, amount to abetment, unless such omission involves a breach of a legal obligation. A private individual is not bound by any law to give information of any offence which he has seen committed.—QUEEN v. KHADIM SHEIKH, 4 B. L. R. A. Cr. 7 [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov. 23, 1869.]

Per KEMP, J.—Before a person can be convicted of an offence under s. 202, Penal Code, there must be legal evidence (1) that he has knowledge, or reason to believe, that some offence has been committed; (2) that an intentional omission to give any information respecting that offence; and (3) that he is legally bound to give information of that offence. In this case, the Sessions Judge, having found that there was no evidence at all, s. 422, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), did not apply, as that section only authorizes an Appellate Court to direct additional evidence to be taken where there is some primâ facie evidence bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the accused, but not where there is no evidence at all. Per Glover, J.—The Sessions Judge having found that an offence was committed, and that the accused were bound by law to give information respecting it, but that there was not, on the record, evidence of their omission to give that information, was competent, under s. 422, to order the deficiency to be supplied, the object of that section being the prevention of a guilty person's escape through some careless or ignorant proceedings of a Magistrate, or the vindication of a wrongfully accused person's innocence where the same carelessness or ignorance has omitted to record the circumstance essential to the elucidation of truth.—IN THE MATTER OF WOODOY CHAND MOOKHOPADHYA. 18 W. R. 31; 9 B. L. R. Ap. 31. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 22, 1872.]

To warrant a conviction under s. 202, Penal Code, the prosecution must prove that the accused knew, or had reason to believe, that an offence had been committed of which he was bound to give information. Mere omission to inquire into the truth of rumours that reached him, or statements that were made to him, does not constitute an offence under that section. Held, also, that where an act is capable upon the evidence of two constructions, the accused is entitled to the benefit of that one which is most favourable to his innocence.—IN THE MATTER OF BEEMBADHUR DASS. 1 Shome's Rep. 29.

203. Whoever, knowing or having reason to believe that an offence† has been committed, gives any information respecting that offence which he knows or believes to be false, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Giving false information respecting an offence committed.

Explanation.†—In sections 201 and 202, and in this section, the word 'offence' includes any act committed in any place out of British India, which, if committed in British India, would be punishable under any of the following sections, namely, 302, 304, 382, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 402, 435, 436, 449, 450, 457, 458, 459, and 460.

IN this section the word "offence" denotes a thing punishable under this Code, or under any special or local law as defined in this Code.—S. 40, Penal Code.

A PRISONER'S intention is immaterial to his conviction under s. 203 of the Penal Code of having given false information respecting an offence committed. Thus, where a chaukidar, having found a corpse with wounds on the throat and jaw, gave information at the thana that the deceased had died of cholera, and that there was nothing suspicious in the matter, he was convicted under s. 203 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. CHERIOUR CHOWKIDAR, 1 W. R. 18. [Glover, J. Sep. 26, 1864.]

THE elements of an offence under s. 203 of the Penal Code are, 1st, that the accused should know, or have reason to believe, that an offence has been committed; 2nd, the giving of information respecting such offence which the accused knew or believed to be false. Therefore, in order to constitute this offence, it would not be necessary that the accused should be aware of the circumstances attending the death of M, but only that he should know, or have reason to believe, that M had been killed by criminal means, or that otherwise some offence had been committed; and if, with such knowledge or belief, the accused gave any information in relation thereto which he knew or believed to be false, he would commit the offence.—9 W. R. Cr. L. 2, No. 135 of 1868.

TO JUSTIFY a conviction for giving false information with respect to an offence under s. 203 of the Penal Code, it must be proved, not only that the person charged had reason to believe that an offence had been committed, but that the offence had actually been committed, and that the accused knew, or had reason to believe, that the offence had been actually committed.—QUEEN v. JOYNARAIN PATRO. 20 W. R. 66. [Jackson and Mitter, JJ. Sep 15, 1872.]

WHERE the plaintiff, in a suit referred to arbitration by consent, with a view to prevent a witness from referring to an endorsement on a bond (which tended to show that defendant had paid more than it was alleged had been paid by him), snatched up the bond which was lying besides the arbitrator, ran away, and refused to produce it, held that the offence committed was not theft, but secreting a document under s. 204 of the Penal Code.—SUBRAMANIA GHANAPATI v. REG., I. False personation for purpose of act or proceeding in suit or prosecution.

UNDER s. 205 of the Penal Code it is criminal to personate an imaginary person —QUEEN v. BITTO KAHAR, 1 Ind. Jur. O. S. 123. [Seton-Karr and Campbell, JJ. Nov. 20, 1862.] Dissented from in In re Kadar Ravuttan and Ayangana Ravuttan, 4 Mad. H. C. R. 18.

FRAUDULENT gain or benefit to the offender is not an essential element of the offence of false personation under s. 205 of the Penal Code, and a conviction for false personation may be upheld, even where the personation is with the consent of the person personated. —Ex-parte SUPPAKON, 1 Mad. H. C. R. 450. [Scotland, C.J., and Frere, J. Nov. 23, 1863.]

IT is necessary to a conviction for false personation, under s. 205 of the Penal Code, that the accused should have assumed the name and character of the person he is charged with having personated. The fact that he presented a petition in Court in the name of that individual, held, under the circumstances of this case, to be insufficient to show any intention of falsely personating such person.—QUEEN v. NARAIN ACHARJ, 8 W. R. 80. [Glover and Hobhouse, JJ. Nov. 13, 1867.]

To constitute false personation under s. 205, it is not enough to show the assumption of a fictitious name. It must also be shown that the assumed name was used as a means of representing some other known individual. A mere "alias" or "incog" is no crime, for it is no uncommon thing for men to pass under names not their own for the purpose of disguise, in some instances from blameless, in others from indifferent or bad, motives. But, whatever the motive, the use of an assumed name is not in itself a criminal offence. The gist of the offence under s. 205 is the feigning to be another known person. The whole language of the section clearly imports the acting the part of another person, the actor pretending that he is that person. There are sections of the Penal Code (for instance, ss. 140, 170, 171, and 415) under which the false assumption of appearance or character may be an offence, though no particular individual is meant to be represented, or only an imaginary person; but it is not so here. Reg v. Bitoo Kahar (1 Ind. Jur. 123) dissented from.—In re KADAR RAVUTTAN AND AYANGANA RAVUTTAN, 4 Mad. H. C. R. 18; 3 Mad. Jur. 146. [Scotland, C.J., and Collett, J., Mar. 9, 1868.]

A PERSON who fraudulently removes property, intending thereby to prevent that property from being taken in execution of a decree made by a Collector, commits an offence, and is punishable under s. 206 of the Penal Code, and not under s. 145, Act X. of 1859.—GOUR CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY v. KISHEN MOHUN SINGH, 10 W. R. 65. [Kemp and Pontifex, JJ. Nov. 19, 1872.]

A JUDGMENT-DEBTOR, whose standing crops were attached, harvested them while the attachment was in force, and was convicted of theft. Held that the accused was not guilty of theft, but of the offence of dishonestly removing the property under the Penal Code, s. 424. Per Benson, J.—The offence was also criminal misappropriation within the meaning of Indian Penal Code, s. 403.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. OBAYYA, I. L. R., 22 Mad. 151. [Davies and Benson, JJ. Sep. 13, 1898.]

THE cutting and carrying off crops, which the accused knew to be under attachment in execution of a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act of 1895, is an offence under the latter part of s. 206 of the Penal Code. The amount due under the certificate cannot be regarded as a forfeiture or fine, but is money due under a decree, the certificate having the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court. Where such an offence was taken cognizance of by a Magistrate without sanction for the prosecution being given, as should have been the case, but there is nothing in the proceeding to show that the want of such sanction had in fact occasioned a failure of justice, held that the conviction was not bad only on that account.—SUNDAR DASADH v. SITAL MAHTO, I. S. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that no payment or adjustment of a decree not certified to the Court as in the said section provided shall be recognized by any Court, does not debar a Criminal Court from recognizing such payment where the decree-holder is charged with fraudulently executing a satisfied decree. —QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PILLALA, I. L. R., 9 Mad. 101. [Hutchins, J. Oct. 6, 1885.]

IN s. 210 of the Indian Penal Code the word "satisfied" is to be understood in its ordinary meaning, and not as referring to decrees, the satisfaction of which has been certified to the Court.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BAPUJI DAYARAM, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 288. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Feb. 18, 1886.]

S. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882) distinguishes between the sanction granted by a Court to a prosecution by a private individual and a complaint made by the Court itself. A superior Court to which such Court is subordinate, may revoke the sanction granted in the former case to the private prosecution, but it has no power in the latter case to set aside a complaint duly made by a subordinate Court.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RACHAPPA, I. L. R., 13 Bom. 109. [Birdwood and Parsons, JJ. July 5, 1888.]

A COMPLAINANT applied to a Munsif for sanction to prosecute a decree-holder for an offence under s. 210 of the Penal Code, and, upon the Munsif's refusing such application, preferred an appeal to the District Judge, who granted the sanction asked for. The decree-holder, having been prosecuted and convicted before a Deputy Magistrate, preferred an appeal, which came on for hearing before, and was disposed of by, the same District Judge who had granted the sanction. Held that the words "shall try any person," as used in s. 487 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, include the hearing of an appeal, and that the hearing of the appeal from the order of the Munsif refusing sanction was a judicial proceeding within the meaning of the Code, and consequently that, under the provisions of s. 487, the District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal against the judgment and sentence passed by the Deputy Magistrate.—IN THE MATTER OF MADHUB CHUNDER MOZUMDAR v. NOVODEEP CHUNDER PUNDIT, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 121. Macpherson and Trevelyan, JJ. Nov. 10, 1888.]

A DECREE-HOLDER having proceeded to execute his decree against his judgment-debtor, the latter objected, stating that the decree had been already satisfied, although the adjustment thereof had not been certified to the Court as required by s. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The judgment-debtor, being under the circumstances compelled to deposit the amount of the decree in Court, applied for and obtained sanction to prosecute the decree-holder for an offence under s. 210 of the Penal Code. It was contended that the case did not fall within that section, as the satisfaction, not having been certified to the Court, could not be recognized by the Court executing the decree, and that consequently no offence had been committed. Held that the words "after it has been satisfied" used in s. 210 of the Penal Code indicate only the fact of the satisfaction of the decree. The fact that the satisfaction is of such a nature that the Court executing the decree could not recognize it, does not prevent the decree-holder from being properly convicted of an offence under that section.—MADHUB CHUNDER MOZUMDAR v. NOVODEEP CHUNDER PUNDIT, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 126. [Mitter and Macpherson, JJ. Dec. 18, 1888.]

A DECREE-HOLDER applied for execution of his decree against the judgment-debtor. The application was dismissed on the ground that the decree had been satisfied out of Court. The judgment-debtor then applied for and obtained sanction to prosecute the decree-holder under s. 210 of the Penal Code. Held that such sanction must be revoked, because the decree had not been caused to be executed, and therefore no offence under s. 210 of the Penal Code had been committed.—SHAMA CHARAN DAS v. MEANING OF "OFFENCE."

IN this section the word "offence" denotes a thing punishable under this Code or under any special or local law as defined in this Code.—S. 40, Penal Code.

MAKING FALSE CHARGE.

No charge of making a false charge can be proved while the original charge is still under investigation, as it may turn out that the Court conducting the investigation may say that it is a true charge: but it is not necessary that the charge should be heard and dismissed; it is sufficient if it be not pending at the time of the trial.—REG. v. WHEN a prisoner is convicted of having made a false charge of an offence, the nature of the false charge should be stated in the finding, and entered in the calendar.—REG. v. ARJUN, 1 Bom. H. C. R. 87. [Forbes and Westropp, JJ. Nov. 4, 1863.]

Ss. 182 and 211 of the Penal Code distinguished. ABBAS KHAN, 8 W. R. 67. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. Sep. 3. 1867.]

S. 211 of the Penal Code applies, not only to a private individual, but also to a police-officer who brings a false charge of an offence with intent to injure.—IN THE MATTER OF NABOODEEP CHUNDER SIRCAR, 11 W. R. 2. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. Jan. 12, 1869.]

WHERE a Deputy Magistrate instituted proceedings against a complainant and his witnesses for preferring a false charge of theft before him, it was held that he could not merely rely on the decision in the theft case, but was bound to prove the falsity of the complaint of theft in the presence of the accused.—QUEEN v. RAM DASS BOISTUB, 11 W. R. 35. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. April 6, 1869.]

IF a Magistrate considers a complaint false and groundless, he is not bound to issue a summons or warrant. The law vests him with a discretion, which discretion it is incumbent on him to exercise. At the same time the Magistrate should always take the examination of the complainant.—In re RAMCHURN, 3 N.-W. P. 272. [Turner, J. Aug. 25, 1871.]

IF the charge of voluntarily causing hurt, contained in a petition of complaint, is wilfully false, and made with intent to injure, then the complainant is legally chargeable with the offence described in s. 211 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. MATA DYAL, 4 N.-W. P. 6. [Pearson, J. Jan. 13, 1872.]

THE lower Criminal Courts cannot punish, as abettors, persons who gave evidence in support of false charges—or rather, charges found by such Courts to be false. S. 108 of the Penal Code does not contemplate any acts of subsequent abetment, or provide for the punishment of such offences, except when they are such as are defined in ss. 212 to 218.—QUEEN v. PAUN PUNDAH, 18 W. R. 28; 9 B. L. R. Ap. 16. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 11, 1872.]

WHERE the charge is one of instituting a false charge of an offence with intent to injure, the actual information which the prisoner made at the thana ought to be given in evidence, and form part of the record.—QUEEN v. HOOLAS alias SUTTOO, 23 W. R. 32. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Jan. 30, 1875.]

AN offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code includes an offence under s. 182; it is therefore open to a Magistrate to proceed under either section, although, in cases of a more serious nature, it may be that the proper course is to proceed under s. 211.—BHOKTERAM v. HEERA KOLITA, I. L. R., 5 Cal. 184. [Ainslie and Broughton, JJ. April 26, 1879.]

THERE is nothing in s. 211 of the Penal Code which limits the penalty there imposed to cases in which attempts have been made to substantiate false charges in a Court of Justice. A false charge made before the police is, therefore, punishable under this section.—ASHROF ALI v. EMPRESS, I. L. R., 5 Cal. 281. [Mitter and Tottenham, JJ. June 24, 1879.]

IT is necessary for a conviction under s. 211 of the Penal Code that the false charge should have been made to a Court or officer having jurisdiction to investigate and send it up for trial.—IN THE MATTER OF JAMOONA; EMPRESS v. JAMOONA, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 620. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Jan. 22, 1881.]

A CRIMINAL prosecution for an offence under s. 211 is not a condition precedent to the right to sue for damages. The bringing of a civil suit imports no corrupt agreement or compounding of the offence in such a case. Shama Churn Bose v. Bhola Nath Dutt (6 W. R., Civ. Ref., 9) followed.—VIRANNA v. NAGAYYAH, I. L. R., 3 Mad. 6. [Innes and Kernan, JJ. Mar. 14, 1881.]

A PRISONER, charged under s. 211 of the Penal Code with having brought a false charge with intent to injure, by accusing A of having caused the death of a person by doing a rash or negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide, under s. 304A, stated at the trial that the original complaint made by him was false, and that he made it unthinkingly. The Sessions Judge treated this statement as a plea of guilty, and sentenced the prisoner to rigorous imprisonment. No record of the prisoner's plea, as required by s. 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872), appeared on the proceedings; nor did it appear that the charge had been explained as well as read to the prisoner, and the Judge considered that the original complaint did not amount to a false charge of an offence under s. 304A. Held that the conviction was bad—EMPRESS v. GOPAL DHANUK, I. L. R., 7 Cal. 96; 8 C. L. R. 471. [Morris and Tottenham, JJ. April 21, 1881.]

R CHARGED A with breach of trust, and S gave evidence in support of the charge. A being acquitted, R was tried for making a false charge, and S for perjury. Held (1) that the depositions given by witnesses in the first case could be used against R in the second case, but not against S, under s. 33, Evidence Act; (2) that the word "questions" in s. 33 does not mean "all the questions;" and that, though additional issues were involved in the second trial, yet the evidence as to the issues common to both trials was properly admitted at the second trial against R.—In re RAMI REDDI, I. L. R., 3 Mad. 48. [Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. May 2, 1881.]

THE fact that an offence alleged to have been committed has been compounded is no conclusive answer to a charge made against the prosecutor under s. 211 of the Penal Code. A laid a charge against M for wrongful confinement. The police reported the case as a false one; and A not appearing to prove the complaint, the District Magistrate ordered him to be prosecuted under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and made over the case to a Deputy Magistrate. Upon the hearing of such charge, A pleaded that he had compounded the original charge laid by him against M, and that therefore the charge against him under s. 211 could not lie. The Deputy Magistrate, without hearing any evidence, dismissed the case. Held that the course so taken was illegal, as such plea was no conclusive answer to a charge under s. 211.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ATAK ALI, I. L. R., 11 Cal. 79. [Wilson and Macpherson, JJ. Nov 3, 1884.]

A PROSECUTION under s. 182 of the Penal Code may be instituted by a private person, provided that he first obtains the sanction of the public officer to whom the false information was given, or of his official superior. Queen v. Radha Kishan (I. L. R., 5 All 36) overruled. Where a specific false charge is made, the proper section for proceedings to be adopted under is s. 211 of the Penal Code. —QUEEN-EMPRESS v. JUGAL KISHORE, I. L. R., 8 All. 382. [Straight, Offg. C.J. May 28, 1886.]

A FALSE charge before the police is a false charge falling within the first portion of s. 211 of the Penal Code. The latter portion of s. 211 of the Penal Code is confined to cases in which criminal proceedings have been instituted, and does not apply to false charges merely. Empress of India v. Pitam Rai (I. L. R., 5 All. 215) and Empress v. Parahu (I. L. R., 5 All 598) followed.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KARIM BUKSH, I. L. R., 14 Cal. 633. [Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J. June 10, 1887.]

WHAT CONSTITUTES MAKING OF A FALSE CHARGE.

TO constitute the offence of preferring a false charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code, the charge need not be made before a Magistrate; nor need the charge have been fully heard and dismissed: it is enough if it is not pending at the time of trial.—REG. v. SUBBANNA GAUNDAN, 1 Mad. H. C. R. 30. [Scotland, C.J., and Phillips, J. Oct. 27, 1862.] Distinguished in Empress v. Abul Hasan, I. L. R., 1 All. 497, infra.

TO prefer a complaint to the police in respect of an offence which they are competent to deal with, and thereby to set the police in motion, is to institute a criminal proceeding within the meaning of s. 211 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. BONOMALLY SOHAI, 5 W. R. 32. [Campbell and Phear, JJ. Feb. 20, 1866.

INSTITUTING a criminal proceeding with intent to injure, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such proceeding, may be treated as a distinct offence from that of falsely charging a person with having committed an offence. A police-officer, though acting upon the information of an informer, may be said to institute a criminal proceeding against the person charged by him; and the consent of his superior officer to such charge will be no guarantee against the consequences of bad faith on his part. The prosecution, when establishing the fact that a police-officer acted knowing there to be no just grounds for proceeding, is bound to call all those on whose statements such officer said he acted—QUEEN v. NOBOKISTO GHOSE, 8 W. R. 87. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. Dec. 31, 1867.]

A FALSELY, and with intent to injure, informed the police that B had stolen property in his house. The police searched B's house and the information proved to be false. Held that A had instituted criminal proceedings, and that he was therefore guilty of an offence under s. 211, and not under s. 182.—MUTHRA v. ROORA, Panj. Rec., No. 16 of 1870.

WHERE a charge of theft was reported by the police to be false, held that the Magistrate ought first to have enquired into the charge of theft, and pass some orders upon it before proceeding under s. 211 of the Penal Code to enquire into the offence of false charge.—In re BISHOO BARIK, 16 W. R., (77) 67. [Kemp and Jackson, JJ. Dec. 16, 1871.] Distinguished in Empress v. Abul Hasan, I L. R., 1 All 497, infra.

IF the charge of voluntarily causing hurt, contained in a petition of complaint, is wilfully false, and made with intent to injure, then the complainant is legally chargeable with the offence described in s. 211 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. MATA DYAL, 4 N.-W. P. 6. [Pearson, J. Jan. 13, 1872.]

WHERE a person who is interested in the matter, or has a certain official responsibility, says to a police-officer, "A tells me that X has committed a certain offence, and B and C confirm the statement, and I accordingly suspect X," and follows up that statement by an application to have X's house searched, he prefers a charge against X. If such charge be false, he may be convicted under s. 211 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. HUNOOMAN LALL, 19 W. R. 5. [Jackson, J. Dec. 4, 1872.]

To constitute the offence of making a false charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code, it is enough that the false charge is made, though no prosecution is instituted thereon. Queen v. Subbanna Gaundan (1 Mad. H. C. R. 30) followed. Reference in the Case of Bishoo Barik (16 W. R. 67) distinguished.—EMPRESS v. ABUL HASAN, I. L. R., 1 All. 497. [Turner and Spankie, JJ. Nov. 9, 1877.]

WHERE A and F were convicted of culpable homicide, and one G H petitioned the Lieutenant-Governor for their release, on the ground that the accusation was a false one, got up by one S K from enmity, whereupon S K charged G H with making a false charge with intent to injure, and procured his conviction under s. 211, held that G H was wrongly convicted under that section. To constitute the offence of "falsely charging a person with having committed an offence" within the meaning of s. 211, something more is necessary than to impute against a person that he has committed an offence The "charge" contemplated in the section means a charge made in order to the institution of criminal proceedings.—GHULAM HUSSAIN v CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 14 of 1879.

THE actual institution of criminal proceedings on a false charge is essential to the application of the latter part of s 211 of the Penal Code, and if a person only makes a false charge, his case falls under the first part of the section irrespective of the fact that the false charge relates to "an offence punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for seven years or upwards."—EMPRESS v. PITAM RAI, I. L. R., 5 All. 215. [Mahmood, J. Sep. 25, 1882.] Concurred in Empress v. Parahu, I. L. R., 5 All 598. Followed in Queen-Emprress v. Bisheshar, I. L. R., 16 All 124, infra.

WHERE a person specifically complains that another man has committed an offence, and does so falsely with the object of causing injury to that person he is guilty of making a false charge of an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and not under s 182.—EMPRESS v. ARJUN, I. L R., 7 Bom. 184. [West and Pinhey, JJ. Nov. 2, 1882.]

WHERE no criminal proceeding is instituted on a false charge of an offence of the nature described in the latter part of s. 211 of the Penal Code, the person making such charge is punishable only under the first part of that section.—EMPRESS v. PARAHU, I. L. R., 5 All 598. [Brodhurst, J. May 22, 1883.] Concurs in Empress v. Pitam Rai, I. L. R., 5 All. 215, supra. Followed in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar, I. L. R., 16 All. 124, infra.

A PERSON who sets the criminal law in motion by making a false charge to the police of a cognizable offence institutes criminal proceedings within the meaning of s. 211 of the Penal Code; and if the offence fall within the description in the latter part of the section, he is liable to the punishment there provided.—KARIM BUKSH v QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 17 Cal. 574. [Petheram, C.J., and Wilson, Tottenham, O'Kinealy, and Macpherson, JJ. Sep. 5, 1888.] Dissented from in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar, I. L. R., 16 All. 124, infra.

To constitute the offence defined in the second paragraph of s. 211 of Act XLV. of 1860, it is necessary that criminal proceedings should be instituted. Where the offence committed does not go further than the making of a false charge to the police, the making of such charge does not amount to the institution of criminal proceedings, and the offence committed will fall within the first paragraph of s. 211, notwithstanding that the offence so falsely charged may be one of those referred to in the second paragraph of that section. Queen-Empress v. Pitam Rai (I. L. R., 5 All. 215) and Queen-Empress v. Parahu (I. L. R., 5 All. 598) followed. Karim Buksh v. The Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 17 Cal. 574) dissented from.—QUEEN-EM-

PRESS v. BISHESHAR, I. L. R., 16 All. 124. [Knox and Burkitt, JJ. Dec. 4, 1893.]

A FALSE charge of dacoity was made to a police-station-house officer, who, after some investigation, referred it to the Magistrate as false, and the Magistrate ordered the charge to be dismissed without taking any action against the parties implicated. The person who preferred the charge was now tried under the Penal Code, s. 211, and was found to have acted with the intent and the knowledge therein mentioned, and he was convicted and sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment. Held that the prisoner had instituted criminal proceedings within the meaning of that section, and that the conviction and sentence were in accordance with law.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NANJUNDA RAU, I. L. R., 20 Mad. 79. [Collins, C.J., and Benson, J. Oct 29, 1896.]

WHERE a Magistrate after having examined the complainant and without hearing his witnesses or dismissing the complaint, ordered the complainant to be prosecuted under s 211 of the Penal Code. Held that the Magistrate's order was without jurisdiction. Where a complainant, whose complaint had been reported false by the police, complained to the Magistrate, and asked him to try the complaint, and the Magistrate did not examine the complainant himself, but made over the case to a Subordinate Magistrate for judicial inquiry or report. Held that the Magistrate had no authority for this procedure. A complainant must be examined by the Magistrate who receives the complaint, or by some Magistrate to whom he has transferred the case. When a complainant has been examined he is entitled to have the person accused brought before the Magistrate, and it is only when the Magistrate has reason not to believe the truth of the complaint from his examination that this can properly be refused and an investigation held.—MAHADEO SINGH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 921. [Prinsep and Handley, JJ. May 11, 1900.]

JURISDICTION.

WHERE the Sessions Judge, on appeal, reversed a conviction passed by a Magistrate, F. P., of an offence under s. 182 of the Penal Code (which the Magistrate, F. P., was competent to try), and directed the Magistrate, F. P., to institute proceedings against the accused under s. 211, considering that, on the complaint which had been made to him, the Magistrate, F. P., was bound to institute proceedings under the latter section, the High Court reversed that part of the order of the Sessions Judge which directed the Magistrate, F. P., to institute proceedings, as the case did not fall within s. 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861), and there was no provision of law giving the Judge jurisdiction to make such an order.—REG. v. GOPAL LAKSHUMAN, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 25. [Couch, C J., and Newton, J. Mar. 10, 1868.]

A MAGISTRATE has no jurisdiction to convict in a case in which the accused is charged, under s. 211 of the Penal Code, with having falsely instituted a criminal charge of the offence of dacoity.—IN THE MATTER OF KADER BUKSH, 21 W. R. 34. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 26, 1874.]

WHERE accused preferred a false charge against complainant under s. 342, and was in consequence tried and convicted by the same Court under s. 211, held by a majority of the Court (Campbell, J., dissenting) that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the offender.—CROWN v. HASSAN ALI, Panj. Rec., No. 7 of 1877. This ruling is enacted in s. 476, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

IT is only if the compensation ordered to be paid under s. 250, proviso (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be recovered that imprisonment can be awarded; therefore an order of imprisonment passed before any attempt is made towards recovery of the sum ordered to be paid as compensation is bad. S. 250 of that Code does not contemplate that compensation shall be awarded because a case is found to be false, but where the Magistrate is satisfied that the accusation is frivolous and vexatious. The words "frivolous and vexatious" in that section indicate an accusation merely for the purpose of annoyance, not an accusation of an offence which is absolutely false. The conviction by a Magistrate of a person of an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code in a summary proceeding is improper.—PARSI HAJRA v. BANDHI DHANUK, I. L. R., 28 Cal 251. [Prinsep and Handley, JJ. Aug 17, 1900.]

JUST AND LAWFUL GROUND.

WHERE a person is charged, under s. 211 of the Penal Code, with having, with intent to injure, falsely charged another with an offence, knowing that there is no just and lawful ground for the same, the party accused should be allowed to show the information on which he acted, and the Judge ought not only to be satisfied that the facts alleged as the ground for making the charge are in themselves untrue and insufficient, but also that they were known to be such to the accused when the charge was made by him.—REG. v. NAVALMAL VALAD UMEDMAL, 3 Bom. H. C. R. 16. [Couch, C.J., and Newton, J. June 20, 1866.]

MERE rashness in making a charge, which is in fact believed, is not an offence under s. 211. If an accused person does not know at the time he makes the complaint that there are no just and lawful grounds for making the complaint, he cannot be convicted under s. 211. It is not sufficient for a charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code that a person to whom a wrong has been done, or who conceives that a wrong has been done to him, makes a charge or complaint upon evidence or statement which is not, or ought not to be, sufficient to satisfy a reasonable mind, if in truth he did not know, at the time he made the complaint, that there was no just and lawful ground for making it. The fact that information upon which a false charge was preferred was not carefully tested by the complaint is not a ground for indictment under s. 211.—QUEEN v. PRAN KISHEN BID, 6 W. R. 15; 2 Wyman's Rev., Civ., and Crim. Reporter 11. [Norman and Campbell, JJ. June 25, 1866.]

UNDER s 211, Penal Code, "instituting a criminal proceeding" may be treated as an offence in itself apart from "falsely charging" a person with having committed an offence Where a person is charged with instituting a criminal proceeding with intent to cause injury, knowing that there was no just or lawful ground for such proceeding, it is for the prosecution to make out a distinct case against him; not for the prisoner in the first instance to show that he had just or lawful grounds. The deposition of a witness in a former case is not evidence in a subsequent case in which he is examined, except when put in to contradict him. Where certain portions of a police-officer's diary are used as evidence against him, s. 154 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), does not bar the admission of other portions of the diary as explaining the portions so used Where facts are as consistent with a prisoner's innocence as with his guilt, innocence must be presumed, and criminal intent or knowledge is not necessarily imputable to every man who acts contrary to the provisions of the law. A Judge should not discuss points of law in summing up to the jury, and he should avoid all the extraneous and unnecessary argument, merely summing up the evidence, and showing how the law applies to it.—QUEEN v. NOBOKISTO GHOSE, 8 W. R. 87. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. Dec. 31, 1867.]

A PERSON may, in good faith, institute a charge which is subsequently found to be false, or he may, with intent to cause injury to an enemy, institute criminal proceedings against him, believing there are good grounds for them, but in neither case has he committed an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code. To constitute this offence it must be shown that the person instituting criminal proceedings knew there were no just or lawful grounds for such proceedings. The averment that the accused knew that there were no lawful grounds for the charge instituted is a most material one.—QUEEN v. CHIDDA, 3 N.-W. P. 327. [Turner, J. Dec. 1, 1871.]

THE complainant was Deputy Collector and First-class Magistrate of Bijapur. Certain petitions, said to emanate from the accused, were received by Government, charging the complainant with bribery and corruption. Government thereupon ordered Mr. Monteath, Collector and Magistrate of the district, to inquire into the matter. Mr. Monteath enforced the attendance of the accused by writing to the police, who brought the accused before him. In answer to questions put to him, the accused denied having sent any petition to Government, but stated that he had paid a bribe to the complainant to secure the acquittal of his son, who was then on his trial on a charge of theft before him. Mr. Monteath examined other witnesses, and reported the result of his inquiry to Government. Government permitted the Deputy Collector to prosecute the accused, and he accordingly lodged a complaint against the accused for defamation, under s. 500 of the Penal Code, in having stated to Mr. Monteath, in the course of the inquiry, that he (the complainant) had accepted a bribe from him. The trying Magistrate was of opinion that the offence fell under s. 211 of the Penal Code. He at first framed charges both under ss. 211 and 500. But subsequently he struck out the charge of defamation under s. 500, and convicted the accused under s. 211 of making a false charge. On appeal, the joint Sessions Judge was of opinion that the charge under s. 211 could not be maintained, as the accused had not made any "false charge" to a Court or officer having jurisdiction to investigate it. As regards the charge of defamation, he was of opinion that the fact of bribery was not proved. But he held that, in making the statement to Mr. Monteath, the accused had acted in good faith, and that his case fell under excep. 8 to s. 499 of the Penal Code. He, therefore, reversed the conviction under s. 211, and acquitted the accused of defamation under s. 500 of the Code. Against this order of acquittal Government appealed to the High Court. Held that the accused was guilty of defamation. Held, also, that s. 211 of the Penal Code had no application to the present case. The accused was brought before Mr. Monteath against his will. He did not make any complaint before that officer; and though what he stated, in answer to questions put to him, was defamatory, the imputations did not constitute a "false charge" within the meaning of s. 211, as he did not intend to set the criminal law in motion. Per Ranade, J.—The words "falsely charging" in s. 211 must be construed along with the words which speak of the "institution of proceedings." These latter words are obviously used in a technical and exclusive sense, and the same restricted sense must be given to the words which relate to a false charge as implying a false complaint. Karim Buksh v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 17 Cal. 574) followed. Held, also, that, in the absence of sanction from Government, the inquiry held by Mr. Monteath, the District Magistrate, was not a taking cognizance of the offence. Held, also, that, as Mr. Monteath was not sitting as a "Court" when he made the enquiry, and examined the accused, the accused was not entitled to claim an absolute protection from a charge of defamation as a witness in a judicial proceeding. The accused was only entitled to a qualified privilege depending on the exceptions to s. 499 of the Penal Code. Per Ranade, J.—The High Court, in exercising jurisdiction in the matter of appeals against acquittals, should confine its exercise to the particular grounds of objection which are raised by Government against the acquittal complained of.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KARIGOWDA, I. L. R., 19 Bom. 51. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. Jan. 18, 1894.]

OPPORTUNITY OF SUBSTANTIATING CHARGE.

A DEPUTY MAGISTRATE was held to have acted irregularly in dismissing a complaint, and directing the trial of the complainant under s. 211 of the Penal Code, without recording his reasons for doing so, and without examining all the witnesses tendered by the complainant, or allowing a reasonable time for the attendance of such of the witnesses as were not present.—QUEEN v. HERRA LALL GHOSE, 13 W. R. 37. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. April 1, 1870.] Followed in Bishoo Barik, 16 W. R. 67, infra.

UNDER s. 249, Act VIII. of 1869, which extends the provisions of s. 180 to trials of offences under ch. 14, a Deputy Magistrate may dismiss a complaint under that chapter without calling evidence, if, in his judgment, there is no sufficient ground for proceeding under it. Under the circumstances of this case, however, the High Court considered that the Deputy Magistrate should have made inquiries before charging the complainant with making a false charge under s. 211, Penal Code.—QUEEN v. GOUR MOHUN SINGH, 16 W. R. 44; 8 B. L. R. Ap. 11. [Kemp and Ainslie, JJ. Sep. 9, 1871.]

WHERE a charge of theft was reported by the police to be false, held that the Magistrate ought first to have inquired into the charge of theft, and passed some order upon it before proceeding under s. 211 of the Penal Code, to inquire into the offence of false charge.—BISHOO BARIK, 16 W. R 67. [Kemp and Jackson, JJ. Dec. 16, 1871.]

WHERE a charge, made against a peshkar and the police, was dismissed upon the statements of persons examined by the police, and without complainant's witnesses being examined, the order of dismissal was held to be illegal. It was also held to be illegal for the Magistrate to sanction a prosecution under the Penal Code, s. 211, against the complainant without giving him an opportunity to prove his charge.—SYED NISSAR HOSSEIN v. RAMGOLAM SINGH, 25 W. R. 10. [Kemp and Pontifex, JJ Jan. 6, 1876.]

A PETITION was presented to the Joint-Magistrate, charging the police with having made a false report of an investigation which they had been directed to make at the instance of the petitioner. The Joint-Magistrate, after reading the police-report, rejected the petition, and directed the petitioner to be prosecuted under s. 211 of the Penal Code for having made a false charge. Held that the Joint-Magistrate should not have made the order without first instituting an inquiry into the truth of the complaint, such as is required by s. 471 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872).—IN THE MATTER OF CHOOLHAIE TELEE, 2 C. L. R. 315. [Markby and Prinsep, JJ. April 8, 1878.]

A MAGISTRATE is not competent to discharge the accused in a warrant-case, and order the complainant to be prosecuted for making a false complaint, until he has examined all the witnesses cited by the complainant.—IN THE MATTER OF GANGOO SINGH, 2 C. L. R 389. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. May 21, 1878.]

A CHARGE of burglary and theft having been preferred against two persons, the Magistrate, before whom the charge was laid, after comparing the petition of complainant with the papers submitted to him by the police, who had made an inquiry, and reported the charge to be false, directed, without having taken the examination of the complainant, that the case should be struck out, and that proceedings should be instituted against the complainant under s. 182 of the Penal Code. Proceedings were accordingly taken, and the complainant was ultimately tried and found guilty of an offence under s. 211. Held on appeal that the proceedings had been irregular, and should be quashed; that the Magistrate should be directed to re-open the inquiry into the charge of burglary and theft, first examining the complainant; and that, if after such examination, he should be of opinion that the charge was false, the appellant might be proceeded against under s. 211 of the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF BIYOGI BHAGUT, 4 C. L. R. 134. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. Mar. 18, 1879.]

A CHARGE of theft was preferred by the petitioner on the 7th October 1878 before the police, who thereupon instituted inquiries which subsequently resulted in their finding the charge unproved. Meanwhile, on the 15th October, the charge was repeated in a complaint before the Magistrate of the district, who directed the complainant and his witnesses to attend on a particular day, but subsequently, without having examined them or the complainant, referred the matter to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate. The officer having reported the charge to be false, the Magistrate, on the 9th November, wrote upon the police-report, which had meanwhile, on the 26th October, been submitted to him, the following direction, viz., "Show as false." On the 19th November a counter-prosecution under ss. 211, 182, and 500 of the Penal Code was sanctioned, and eventually, on the 22nd May 1879, resulted in the petitioner being convicted. While the counter-prosecution was pending, the petitioner, on the 22nd April, applied to the Magistrate to proceed with his complaint according to law, but was informed that his complaint was dismissed. On the following day the Magistrate recorded the following order. "Dismissed in accordance with my decision recorded in the police-report under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code" (Act X. of 1872). Held that the complaint had been improperly dismissed, and that the order of the Magistrate, dated 23rd April 1879, must be set aside.—SHEIKH IRAD ALI v. NUSSIBUNNISSA BIBEE, 4 C. L. R. 534. [Morris and White, JJ. June 13, 1879.]

WHERE a person has instituted a charge found to be false by the police, a Magistrate, except under exceptional circumstances, is not justified, merely on a perusal of a police-report, which has found a charge made to be false, in prosecuting the person by whom such charge was preferred, summarily under s. 182 of the Penal Code, but should proceed under s. 211. When a charge is pronounced false by the police, no proceedings should be taken by a Magistrate suo motu, until a reasonable interval has shown that the complainant accepts the result of the investigation.—IN THE MATTER OF RUSSICK LAL MULLICK, 7 C. L. R. 382. [Garth, C.J., and Maclean, J. Nov. 17, 1880.]

BEFORE a person can be put upon his trial for making a false charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code, he must be allowed an opportunity of proving the truth of the complaint made by him; and such an opportunity should be afforded to him, if he desires to take advantage of it, not before the police, but before the Magistrate. Magistrates should clearly understand that, whilst the police perform their proper duty in collecting evidence, it is the function of the Magistrate alone to decide upon the sufficiency or credibility of such evidence when collected.—GOVT. v. KARIMDAD, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 496; 7 C. L. R. 467. [Garth, C.J., and Field, J. Dec. 9, 1880.] Concurred in Empress v. Radha Kishan, I. L. R., 5 All. 36, infra.

A COMMITMENT for trial, under the provisions of s. 211 of the Penal Code, for knowingly instituting a false charge with intent to injure the persons accused, is not illegal, merely because the complaint which the accused made has not been judicially inquired into, but is based on the report of the police that the case was a false one.—EMPRESS v. SALIK ROY, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 582, 8 C. L. R. 255. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Jan. 13, 1881.]

A CHARGE laid against certain persons before the police having been reported false by that body, the person who made the charge complained to the Magistrate of the district, who directed a fresh investigation. The charge was again reported false. The complainant thereupon filed a petition, in which he alleged that the second investigation had not been properly conducted, and asked that further evidence might be taken by a specified officer. No further investigation having taken place, the complainant was ordered to be prosecuted under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and, on trial, was convicted and sentenced. On appeal to the High Court, it was held that the conviction was illegal, inasmuch as an opportunity had not been afforded to the accused of producing all his evidence in support of the charge made by him. Per Maclean, J.—The proper principle which should guide a Magistrate is that, if no complaint is made before him after a reasonable time has elapsed from the conclusion of a police-inquiry, he would be justified in proceeding against a person who has made a complaint to the police which has been found to be false; but if a complaint is made, that complaint must be dealt with judicially. It is unfair even then to proceed against the complainant without hearing any witnesses whom he may wish to examine. Per Mitter, J.—Although a Magistrate has power, under

s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872), to dismiss a complaint without examining witnesses, yet in such a case no sanction for prosecution under s. 211 of the Penal Code should be granted.—IN THE MATTER OF CHUCKRODHUR POTTI, 8 C. L. R. 289. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Jan. 20, 1881.]

WHERE a charge had been preferred against a person, and the Magistrate, before whom it was heard, after hearing the statement of the complainant, but not those of the witnesses, dismissed the complaint, and subsequently, on the application of the person, charged, granted him leave under s. 470 of Act X. of 1872 to prosecute the complainant for bringing a false charge, held that the proceedings were not irregular, and that the Magistrate was justified in acting as he had done. Held also, that there is a distinction in the proceedings to be adopted when a sanction is given under s. 470 of Act X. of 1872 (or s. 195 of X. of 1882), and the institution by the Court of its own motion of proceedings under s. 471 of the Act of 1872 (or s. 195 of the Act of 1882).—IN THE MATTER OF GYAN CHUNDER ROY; GYAN CHUNDER ROY v. PROTAB CHUNDER DASS, I. L. R., 7 Cal. 208; 8 C. L. R. 267. [Cunningham and Prinsep, JJ. April 6, 1881.]

UPON a trial for bringing a false charge with intent to injure, it appeared that the original complaint was lodged in the Court of the Extra-Assistant Commissioner, and a local inquiry by a competent police-officer was directed. The officer reported that the charge was false, and recommended that the prisoner should be prosecuted. The Extra-Assistant Commissioner ordered the papers to be sent to the Deputy Commissioner, who ordered the prosecution; and the prisoner was convicted. Held that the conviction was bad. The Extra-Assistant Commissioner should, on receipt of the report of the police, have communicated its contents to the prisoner, and afforded her an opportunity of substantiating her complaint, and should then have decided the case.—IN THE MATTER OF SAKHINA BIBEE; EMPRESS v. GRISH CHUNDER NUNDI, I. L. R., 7 Cal. 87; 8 C. L. R. 387. [Norris and Tottenham, JJ. April 26, 1881.]

A MAGISTRATE should not direct a prosecutor to be put upon his trial under s. 211 of the Penal Code without first giving him an opportunity of obtaining a judicial inquiry into the charge originally preferred by him. The sanction to prosecute contemplated in s. 468 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872 is not a direction to prosecute, but is a permission granted to a private person to exercise his own unfettered discretion as to whether he will take proceedings or not.—IN THE MATTER OF GRIDHARI MONDUL; GRIDHARI MONDUL v. UCHIT JHA, I. L. R., 8 Cal. 435; 10 C. L. R. 46. [Pontifex and Field, JJ. Dec. 7, 1881.]

WHERE a Magistrate dismisses a complaint as a false one under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872, and decides to proceed against the complainant under s. 471 of the Code of 1872 for making a false charge, he is not bound, before so proceeding, to give the complainant an opportunity of substantiating the truth of the complaint by being allowed to produce evidence before him.—EMPRESS v. BHOWANI PERSAD, I. L. R., 4 All. 182. [Oldfield, J. Dec. 24, 1881.]

K MADE a report at a police-station accusing R of a certain offence. The police having reported to the Magistrate having jurisdiction in the matter that, in their opinion, the offence was not established, the Magistrate ordered the case to be "shelved." K then preferred a complaint to the Magistrate, again accusing R of the offence. The Magistrate rejected the complaint with reference to the police-report. Subsequently R, with the sanction of the police-authorities, instituted criminal proceedings against K, under s. 182 of the Penal Code, in respect of the report which he had made at the police-station, and K was convicted under that section. Held that, before proceeding against K, the Magistrate should have fully investigated and sifted his complaint for himself, and should not have abrogated the functions imposed on him by law, because the police had reported against the entertainment of the case. The views expressed in the Government v. Karimdad (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 496) concurred in. Held also that K's conviction under s. 182 of the Penal Code was illegal, as the Magistrate had no power to entertain a complaint under that section at the instance of R, the application of s. 182 and the institution of prosecutions under it being limited to the public servant against whom the offence has been committed or to his official superior, as mentioned in s. 467 of Act X. of 1872, and it not being intended that those provisions should be enforced at the instance of private persons. Moreover, if K's complaint was false, his offence was against R and not against the public servant to whom the complaint was made, and fell within s. 211 of the Penal Code. Ordered that the complaint made by K should be investigated.—EMPRESS v. RADHA KISHAN, I. L. R., 5 All 36. [Straight, J. July 5, 1882.] Concurs in Govt. v. Karimdad, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 496. J COMPLAINED to the police that she had been raped by a certain person. The police having reported the charge to be false, criminal proceedings were instituted against her under s. 182 of the Penal Code. In the meantime J made a complaint in Court, again charging R with rape. This complaint was not disposed of, but the proceedings against her under s. 182 of the Penal Code were continued, and she was eventually convicted under that section. Held, setting aside the conviction, and directing that J's complaint should be disposed of, that such complaint should have been disposed of before proceedings were taken against her under s. 182.—EMPRESS v. JAMMI, I. L. R., 5 All. 387. [Oldfield, J. Mar. 9, 1883.]

R MADE a complaint of theft against S to the police. The police referred the case as false to the Magistrate. The Magistrate summoned R, and examined him, but gave him no opportunity to prove the charge by calling the witnesses named by him. The Magistrate then ordered the case to be struck off the file, and gave sanction to prosecute R. R was subsequently brought before the same Magistrate, and committed to the Sessions, and convicted by the Sessions Court under s. 211 of the Penal Code. Held that, although R had no opportunity of proving his case before he was himself tried, the conviction was not illegal.—RAMASAMI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 292. [Kernan and Kindersley, JJ. Feb. 4, 1884.]

A COMPLAINT of offences under ss. 323 and 379 of the Penal Code was referred to the police for inquiry. The police reported that the charge was a false one, and thereupon the Magistrate of the district passed an order, under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directing the prosecution of the complainants for making a false charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code. Held that the order under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not have been passed until the complainants had been afforded an opportunity of proving their case, which had been thrown out merely on the report of the police. Govt. v. Karimdad (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 496; 7 C. L. R. 467) referred to. — QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GANGA RAM, I. L. R., 8 All. 38. [Brodhurst, J. Dec. 2, 1885.]

A PERSON having laid an information before the police, the police reported the case as false; the informant then appeared before a Magistrate, asking that his case might be investigated, and his witnesses summoned. This application was refused, and the Magistrate, after perusing the police-report, passed an order directing him to be prosecuted under s 211 of the Penal Code. Held that the application to the Magistrate was "a complaint" within the meaning of s. 191 of the Criminal Procedure Code, into which the Magistrate was bound to have inquired. A Magistrate may take cognizance, under ss. 291 and 292 of the Criminal Procedure Code, of an offence brought to his notice by a police-report which affords ground for a suspicion that an offence has been committed; but, as a matter of sound judicial discretion, a Magistrate should not so proceed, and direct that the person suspected be tried until some person aggrieved has complained, or until he has before him a police-report on the subject based on an investigation directed to the offence to be tried, and in cases of alleged false charges, until it is clear that the original charge has been either heard and dismissed or abandoned. And before the order to prosecute for the false charge is made, the person who made the original charge should be offered an opportunity of supporting it or abandoning it.— QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SHAM LALL, I. L. R., 14 Cal. 707. [Petheram, C.J., and Wilson, Tottenham, Norris, and Ghose, JJ. June 22, 1887.]

SANCTION TO PROSECUTE.

WHERE the sanction to a prosecution accorded under s. 169, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV of 1861), extended only to one of the persons charged, the High Court quashed the commitment, and directed the discharge of the persons to whom the sanction did not apply.—QUEEN v. WOODURNUL SINGH, 10 W. R. 24A. [Phear and Hobhouse, JJ. Aug. 4, 1868.]

A COLLECTOR, to whom an application is made for a new stamp under cl. 2, s. 50, Act X. of 1862, does not sit as a Court, Civil or Criminal, and the application, therefore, not being a document given in evidence in any proceeding of a Court, s. 170 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), does not apply to such a case.—QUEEN v. GOUR MOHUN SEIN, 11 W. R. 48; 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 6. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. May 5, 1869.]

IN a case against the accused under s. 211, Penal Code, the Joint-Magistrate, in the course of the trial, altered the charge from a private one under s. 211 to a public one under s. 182, and convicted the accused on the facts. There being no sanction to prosecute under s. 182, the Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court. The High Court altered the conviction to one under s. 211, as the accused was not prejudiced in his trial.—KIRTI OJHA v. RAJKUMAR,

7 B. L. R. 29n; 13 W. R. 67. [Loch and Hobhouse, JJ. April 30, 1870.]

SANCTION was given by the Magistrate for the institution of criminal proceedings against the defendant for having made a false charge against the complainant. The Magistrate dismissed the complaint on the ground that the complainant had taken no step to prosecute for three months after the sanction was obtained. Held that the Magistrate had power to dismiss the complaint.—PRO., Jan. 9, 1871, 6 Mad. H. C. Rep. Ap. 15. No sanction shall remain in force for more than six months from the date on which it was given.— Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), s. 195.

THE words, "appellate judgment of acquittal," in s. 272 of Act X. of 1872, were meant to include all judgments of an Appellate Court by which a conviction is set aside. A complaint made at a police-station is not made before any Civil or Criminal Court; and, if it proves false, prosecution for it does not require the sanction of any Court under s. 468, Code of Criminal Procedure.—GOVT. OF BENGAL v. GOKOOL CHUNDER CHOWDRY, 24 W. R. 41. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. Aug. 10, 1875.]

WHERE sanction has been given under s. 468 of Act X. of 1872 by a Deputy Magistrate to a person to prosecute another for bringing a false charge, and such sanction is not proceeded under, it is open to the District Magistrate to take up the case under s. 142 of the Act of 1872 without complaint.—EMPRESS v. NIPCHA, I. L. R., 4 Cal. 713. [Jackson and Tottenham, JJ. Dec. 2, 1878.]

A CHARGE of theft was made before the police, and while inquiries, which afterwards resulted in the charge being found by the police not to be proved, were pending, the charge was repeated in a complaint before the Magistrate of the district, by whom the matter was handed over to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, who reported the charge as false. Whereupon the Magistrate directed the police to enter the charge as false, but without ordering the formal dismissal of the petition of the complainant. On the application of the accused, a counter-prosecution under ss. 211, 182, and 500 of the Penal Code was then sanctioned, and the case sent to the Deputy Magistrate for trial. That officer discharged the accused on the ground that the sanction of the Magistrate was illegal, as there had been, he alleged, (1) no judicial investigation as to the original charge; (2) no formal dismissal of the complaint; and (3) the witnesses produced by the complainant had not been all examined. Held that the Deputy Magistrate was bound to accept the sanction made by a superior Court as valid, and to leave the accused to question it before a competent Court, if so advised; that a prosecution may be maintained in respect of a false charge made to the police, or contained in a complaint which has been dismissed under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872), although there has been no judicial investigation; and that, accordingly, the Deputy Magistrate ought to have tried the charge before him.—NUSIBUN-NISSA BIBEE v. SHEIK ERAD ALI, 4 C. L. R. 413. [Ainslie and Broughton, JJ. April 3, 1879.]

B CHARGED certain persons before a police-officer with theft. Such charge was brought by the police to the notice of the Magistrate having jurisdiction, who directed the police to investigate into the truth of such charge. Having ascertained that such charge was false, such Magistrate took proceedings against B on a charge of making a false charge of an offence, an offence punishable under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and convicted him of that offence. Held that, as such false charge was not preferred by B before such Magistrate, the offence of making it was not a contempt of such Magistrate's authority, and the provisions of ss. 468 and 473 of Act X. of 1872 were inapplicable, and such Magistrate was not precluded from trying B himself, nor was his sanction or that of some superior Court necessary for B's trial by another officer. Empress v. Kashmiri Lal (I. L. R., 1 All 625) distinguished Observations by Stuart, C.J., on the careless manner in which the charge in this case was framed.—EMPRESS v. BALDEO, I. L. R., 3 All. 322. [Stuart, C.J., and Pearson, J. Nov. 16, 1880.]

A SANCTION for a prosecution for making a false charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code, without hearing all the witnesses whom the person accused of making the false charge wishes to produce, is illegal. The High Court has power to quash an illegal commitment at any stage of the case.—EMPRESS v. SHIBO BEHARA, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 584; 8 C. L. R. 265. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Jan. 20, 1881.]

THERE being nothing in the law requiring that sanction to prosecute under s. 211 of the Penal Code should only be granted upon application by a private prosecutor, a District Magistrate is competent, under s. 468 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), of his own motion, to direct a prosecution where a complaint has been entertained and found to be false by a Magistrate subordinate to him. There being no abetment of an offence after it has been committed, a person cannot be convicted of abetting the offence of instituting a false charge, on evidence which shows only that he gave evidence in support of a charge found to be false. Duty of of Judge in charging a jury discussed.—IN THE MATTER OF JUGUT MOHINI DASSI, 10 C. L. R. 4. [McDonell and Tottenham, JJ. Dec. 13, 1881.]

IT is competent for a Court which has granted sanction to prosecution under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code to give a fresh sanction, if the one previously granted has expired by efflux of time. The limitation of six months mentioned in s. 195 means that a Magistrate shall not take cognizance of a case under a sanction which is more than six months old, not that the whole prosecution must be completed within that period. Held, therefore, where sanction to a prosecution had been granted under s. 195 and the prosecution had been instituted, and the Magistrate, in consequence of evidence of the complainant not being procurable, had ordered "the case to be shelved for the present," and the complainant, after the six months mentioned in s. 195 had expired, applied to the Magistrate to re-open the proceedings, that it was competent for the Magistrate, having once taken cognizance of the case, and it still remaining on his file undetermined, to take it up again at any moment, and proceed with the prosecution without fresh sanction.—IN THE MATTER OF GULAB SINGH v. DEBI PROSAD, I. L. R., 6 All. 45. [Straight, Offg. C.J. July 28, 1882.]

A MAGISTRATE of the first class, after considering the result of an investigation of a police-officer under s. 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, dismissed a complaint as false, and passed an order sanctioning the prosecution of the complainant for an offence punishable under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and directed a Third-class Magistrate to hold a preliminary inquiry, the offence being cognizable by the Court of Session only. Held that, as there was no application before the First-class Magistrate for sanction to prosecute, the order must be taken to be a complaint made by the said Magistrate, and therefore, under s. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Third-class Magistrate had no jurisdiction to hold any inquiry. Held also that the First-class Magistrate ought to have held a preliminary inquiry under s. 476, in order that the complainant might have an opportunity of showing the truth or bona fides of the complaint.—QUEEN v. CHANDRAMMA, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 189. [Turner, C.J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J. Oct. 26, 1883.]

A PROSECUTION of a charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code should not be granted under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code as a matter of course, but only when the complainant can satisfy the Court that the interests of justice require a prosecution, and there is a strong primâ-facie case against the accused. Held, therefore, where S, who had been tried before the Court of Session for an offence, and acquitted, applied to the Court, in respect of the criminal proceedings which had been instituted against him, for sanction to prosecute G for abetment of an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and the Sessions Judge granted the sanction, and there was nothing on the record of the criminal case or of the Judge's proceedings to show on what grounds G was accused of abetting a false charge, or on what grounds the Judge gave the sanction; that, before the Judge gave the sanction, he should have satisfied himself, by examination of S or other inquiry, whether S had sufficient grounds in fact for accusing G, and whether there were good primâ-facie grounds for suspecting G of abetting a false charge, and permitting a prosecution.—IN THE MATTER OF GAURI SAHAI, I. L. R., 6 All. 114. [Oldfield, J. Nov. 23, 1883.]

A DISTRICT COURT has jurisdiction, under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882), to revoke or grant a sanction granted or refused by a Subordinate Judge's Court.—VENKATA v. MUTTUSAMI, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 314. [Turner, C.J., and Brandt, J. Feb. 12, 1884.]

A SANCTION to prosecute, when applied for subsequently to the termination of the proceedings in course of which the offence is alleged to have been committed, ought not to be granted, unless the person against whom the sanction is applied for had had notice of the application and an opportunity of being heard.—ABBILAKH SINGH v. KHUB LALL, I. L. R., 10 Cal. 1100. [Field and Norris, JJ. Aug. 19, 1884.] But see the following ruling:—

No notice is necessary to the person against whom it is intended to proceed before the Court, before which the alleged offence has been committed, can, under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, sanction a complaint being made to a Magistrate regarding one of the offences specified in that section. —IN THE MATTER OF KRISHNANUND DAS; KRISHNANUND DAS v. HARI BERA, I. L. R., 12 Cal. 58. [Pigot and O'Kinealy, JJ. Sep. 22, 1885.]

WHEN Subordinate Courts grant sanction to prosecute under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is incumbent on them so to frame the proceedings before them as to enable the High Court to satisfy itself from the record whether the application for sanction has been properly granted or not. A Magistrate, in disposing of a charge of theft, delivered the following judgment: "The charge of theft of doors and windows is not proved at all against the accused. They are acquitted." There was no further record of the proceedings. Immediately on the judgment being delivered, the pleader appearing for the accused applied for sanction to prosecute the complainant under ss. 182 and 211 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate refused to hear the application then, on the ground that it was not the proper time fixed by him to hear applications. The attorney for the complainant, who had expressed his willingness to have the application heard and disposed of there and then, intimated that he was prepared to show cause why sanction should not be granted, and asked that notice of any future application might be given to the complainant. The accused renewed the application the following day without notice to, and in the absence of, the complainant or his attorney, and the Magistrate granted the sanction asked for. On an application to the High Court to revoke the sanction, held that the Magistrate did not exercise a proper discretion, under the circumstances, in neglecting to give the complainant notice of the application, and an opportunity of being heard. Held, further, that the mere fact of the charge laid by the complainant not having been proved was not in itself sufficient ground for granting sanction to prosecute him under ss. 182 and 211 of the Penal Code, and as, beyond the judgment of the Magistrate, there was nothing on the record to show that there were sufficient grounds for granting the sanction, it should be revoked.—KEDAR NATH DAS v. MOHESH CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 661. [Prinsep and Hill, JJ. May 13, 1889.]

WHERE a Deputy Commissioner issued a sanction to prosecute the accused upon an express application made on behalf of a certain person against whom a charge of torture had been made, and which he found, for reasons stated in his judgment, to be false, held, taking the order to have been one made under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that it was a proper sanction, inasmuch as it was given to a contemplated prosecution by a definite person. Semble, on the supposition that the order was one under s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that it was not necessary for the validity of an order under that section that there should be any evidence on the record contradicting the case which was thought to be false, or that there should be a preliminary inquiry. Although it may sometimes well be that a preliminary inquiry ought to be held, the adoption of a rigid rule to that effect is neither rendered imperative by the law, nor is it desirable. In the Matter of Mutty Lall Ghose (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 308), The Queen v. Baijoo Lall (I. L. R., 1 Cal. 450), and Khepu Nath Sikdar v. Girish Chunder Mukerjee (I. L. R., 16 Cal. 370), referred to and distinguished. — BAPERAM SURMA v. GOURI NATH DUTT, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 474. [Pigot and Hill, JJ. Nov. 2, 1892.]

THE proceeding under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, by which an order granting or refusing to grant sanction to prosecute may be set aside, is a proceeding in revision, and not by way of appeal.—MEHDI HASAN v. TOTA RAM, I. L. R., 15 All. 61. [Knox, J. Nov. 19, 1892.]

A COMPLAINT was made before a Magistrate which involved a charge of dacoity against the accused person and others. The Magistrate, in dealing with the case, proceeded under s. 209 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and finding no case of dacoity primâ facie established, proceeded to frame charges under s. 254 of the Code, charging the accused with offences under ss. 380 and 448 of the Penal Code, viz., theft in a building and criminal trespass. Having heard the whole of the evidence, he then acquitted the accused under s. 258 of the Code, and gave him sanction under s. 195 to prosecute the complainant under s. 211 of the Penal Code. The complainant then applied to the Sessions Judge to revoke that sanction. The Sessions Judge proceeded to consider the whole case, and finding that a proper inquiry had not been made, and all evidence available not taken, and that, had this been otherwise, a Sessions case might have been established, directed the Magistrate to hold a further inquiry, and to proceed, in accordance with the result of such inquiry, either to commit the accused to the Sessions, or grant the sanction, as the case might be. Held that the Sessions Judge had exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law. Acting as a Revision Court, he could send for the record for any purpose mentioned in s. 436, but he was not competent under s. 436 to direct a fresh inquiry, inasmuch as the accused had not been improperly discharged of an offence triable exclusively by a Court of Session, but had been acquitted of an offence within the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The Sessions Judge had, in fact, exercised the jurisdiction vested in him as an Appellate Court under s. 423 as if an appeal had been presented to him from an order of an acquittal; such powers in revision cases are only conferred on the High Court. —BAIJANATH PANDEY v. GAURI KANTA MANDAL, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 633. [Prinsep and Ameer Ali, JJ. Feb. 3, 1893.]

A HEAD ASSISTANT MAGISTRATE sanctioned a prosecution under the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 195, on the charge of preferring a false complaint, and forwarded his proceedings to the Deputy Magistrate of another division of the district, who ordinarily had no jurisdiction to try offences committed in the division under the Head Assistant Magistrate. Held that the Deputy Magistrate had jurisdiction to try the charge.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NAGAPPA, I. L. R., 16 Mad. 461. [Shephard and Best, JJ. Mar. 28, 1893.]

Section 195, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898), runs as follows :—

(1) No Court shall take cognizance—

(a) of any offence punishable under ss. 172 to 188 (both inclusive) of the Indian Penal Code, except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint of the public servant concerned, or of some public servant to whom he is subordinate;

(b) of any offence punishable under s. 193, 194, 195, 196, 199, 200, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, or 228 of the same Code, when such offence is committed in, or in relation to any proceeding in any Court, except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint, of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate;

(c) of any offence described in s. 463, or punishable under ss. 471, 475, or 476 of the same Code, when such offence has been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding, except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint, of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate.

(2) In clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1), the term "Court" means a Civil, Revenue, or Criminal Court, but does not include a Registrar or Sub-Registrar under the Indian Registration Act, 1877.

(3) The provisions of sub-section (1) with reference to the offences named therein apply also to the abetment of such offences, and attempts to commit them.

(4) The sanction referred to in this section may be expressed in general terms, and need not name the accused person; but it shall, so far as practicable, specify the Court or other place in which, and the occasion on which, the offence was committed.

(5) When sanction is given in respect of any offence referred to in this section, the Court taking cognizance of the case may frame a charge of any other offence so referred to which is disclosed by the facts.

(6) Any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate; and no sanction shall remain in force for more than six months from the date on which it was given, provided that the High Court may, for good cause shown, extend the time.

(7) For the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie, that is to say,—

(a) where such appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate;

(b) where such appeals lie to a Civil and also to a Revenue Court, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Civil or Revenue Court according to the nature of the case in connection with which the offence is alleged to have been committed;

(c) where no appeal lies, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the principal Court of original jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such first-mentioned Court is situate.

CHARGING ON SUSPICION.

NIHALA informed a police-sergeant that a burglary had been committed, and that he suspected Ramkishen. In consequence of this information, Ramkishen's premises were searched, and some property belonging to Nihala was found. Ramkishen was arrested, but upon investigation the Magistrate found that Nihala had himself placed the property where it was discovered. Ramkishen was accordingly discharged, and he then brought a charge against Nihala under s. 211, who was committed to the Deputy Commissioner for trial, but acquitted on the ground that he (Nihala) had never made any charge against Ramkishen, but had merely stated that he suspected him. On the revision side, the Chief Court held that the facts disclosed an offence under s. 211, and directed a new trial.—CROWN v. NIHALA, Panj. Rec., No. 14 of 1872.

WHERE a person who is interested in the matter, or has a certain official responsibility, says to a police-officer, "A tells me that X has committed a certain offence, and B and C confirm the statement, and I accordingly suspect X," and follows up that statement by an application to have X's house searched, he prefers a charge against X. If such charge be false, he may be convicted under s. 211 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. HUNOOMAN LALL, 19 W. R. 5. [Jackson, J. Dec. 4, 1872.]

A STATEMENT made to the police of a suspicion that a particular person had committed an offence is not a "charge" within the meaning of s. 211 of the Penal Code, nor does it amount to the institution of a criminal proceeding, and the person making the statement cannot, on the suspicion being proved to be unfounded, be convicted under that section.—IN THE MATTER OF BRAMANUND BHATTACHERJEE, 8 C. L. R. 233. [Pontifex, Mitter, and Maclean, JJ. Mar. 10, 1881.]

THE principle of the following ruling, which was one delivered under s. 182 of the Penal Code, would also apply to s. 211 of the same Code: "S. 182 of the Penal Code must be read as entire section, and, when so read, it applies to those cases in which the police are induced, upon information supplied to them, to do or omit to do something which might affect some third person, and which they would not have done had they known the truth of the matter laid before them. The facts of the case appear in the following judgment, which is reproduced in full: 'Petheram, C.J.'—We think that this rule must be made absolute to set aside the conviction. The facts of the case are that a person went on one occasion and informed the police that he had been robbed in the street of a shawl, but in the statement which he made to the police he did not indicate any particular person, or describe any person in such a way as by any possibility could be supposed to implicate any one as the person who committed the robbery. All he said was that he was robbed by a person whom he did not see. So that in the statement that he made he did not say anything to cast suspicion on any one in particular. Under these circumstances there was no offence within the meaning of s. 182 of the Penal Code. That section provides that any person who gives any information to a public servant with the intention of inducing him to put his powers in force to the injury or annoyance of any person, or to do or omit anything which such public servant would not have done or omitted to do if the true state of facts respecting which such information was given had been known to him, shall be punished in a certain way there specified. As it seems to us, that section must be read as a whole, and, taken as a whole, we think it applies to those cases in which the police are induced, upon the information supplied to them, to do or omit to do something which might affect some third person, and which they would not have done if they had known the true state of things. Upon the information which was given to these police-constables, all that they could be justified in doing was to examine the informant as to what had happened to him, and then make such inquiries as the result of that examination might render desirable, but they would have no right to interfere with any one or search any one's house, because there were no circumstances brought to their knowledge by the information which this man gave which entitled them to suppose that any particular individual was guilty of any offence. Under the circumstances, the most that the statement of the accused amounts to is, that it was untrue, and was made for the purpose of hoaxing the police. No doubt, that is a very wrong thing for any man to do. In the first place, it is wrong to tell lies; and, in the second place, it is extremely wrong to take up the time of Government servants by putting them to useless inquiries under circumstances of this kind; but I do not think myself that such conduct comes within the meaning of this section, or amounts to anything more than a hoax, for which no punishment is provided by the Code. Under these circumstances, we cannot make a crime when it is not made one by the Code, or provide a punishment for it. The rule will, therefore, be made absolute to set aside the conviction; the prisoner will be discharged.— IN THE MATTER OF GOLAM AHMED KAZI, I L. R., 14 Cal. 314. [Petheram, C J., and Beverley, J. Feb. 19. 1887.] [S. 182 as originally enacted has since been superseded by a new section.]

PUNISHMENT FOR MAKING FALSE CHARGE.

A PRISONER convicted under the second clause of s. 211 of the Penal Code should be sentenced to imprisonment, with or without fine, and not to fine alone.—REG. v. RAMA BIN RABHAJI, 1 Bom. H. C. R. 34. [Forbes and Warden, JJ. Aug. 5, 1863.]

DISCUSSION as to the punishment sufficient for women charged with bringing a false charge of dacoity.—QUEEN v. NATHOO DOSS, 3 W. R. 12. [Campbell, Jackson, and Glover, JJ. May 15, 1865.]

THE offence of making a false charge, and the offence of intentionally giving false evidence, are not cognate offences, or parts of the same offence, but may be punished separately.—QUEEN v. ABDOOL AZEEZ, 7 W. R. 59. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. April 27, 1867.]

REMARKS on the comparatively light sentence passed without any reason in a case where a false charge of murder was preferred and persisted in.—QUEEN v. PEELUMLOLL PUDDHUN, 7 W. R. 75. [Seton-Karr, J. May 28, 1867.]

WHERE no criminal proceeding is instituted on a false charge of an offence of the nature described in the latter part of s. 211 of the Penal Code, the person making such charge is punishable only under the first part of that section.—EMPRESS v. PARAHU, I. L. R., 5 All. 598. [Brodhurst, J. -May 22, 1883.] Concurs in Empress v. Pitam Rai, I. L. R., 5 All. 215.

WHERE the accused, who was a head-constable, was found guilty of making a false charge under s. 211, and of giving false evidence under s. 193 of the Penal Code, and the Sessions Judge passed sentences of three months' simple imprisonment for each offence, and, taking into consideration the accused's past conduct, directed that the sentences should run concurrently, held that the sentences were inadequate and illegal. Accordingly, the sentences were enhanced to three months' rigorous imprisonment for each offence; and, as the two offences were distinct, the High Court directed, under s. 35 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), one sentence to commence after the expiration of the other. Queen v. Abdool Azeez (7 W. R 59) followed.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PIR MAHOMED, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 254. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Dec. 10, 1885.]

THE complainant was directed to pay Rs. 50 as compensation to the accused, or, in default, to suffer simple imprisonment for one month under s. 560 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and sanction was also granted to prosecute him for offences under ss. 211 and 193 of the Penal Code. Held that, if the Magistrate thought that this was a case in which a prosecution under ss. 211 and 193 of the Penal Code should be sanctioned, he ought not to have taken action under the provisions of s. 560 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held also that the order for imprisonment in default of payment of the compensation awarded was illegal. Ramjeevan Koormi v. Durga Churn Sadhu Khan (I. IT is only necessary for a conviction under s. 217 of the Penal Code to show that the prisoner knew that the person he released was in danger of punishment, and that the prisoner released such person with the intention of saving him.—QUEEN v. ABDOOL JALEEL, W. R., Gap., 1864, 5. [Jackson, J. Feb. 2, 1864.]

UNDER the latter portions of ss. 217 and 218, the actual guilt or innocence of the alleged offender is immaterial, if the prisoner believes he is guilty, and intends to screen him.—QUEEN v. HURDUT SURMA, 8 W. R. 68; 3 Mad. Jur. 53. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. Sep. 7, 1867.]

SEVERAL persons were apprehended at night time on suspicion of having committed culpable homicide. The police-officer tied them together by the hands, and kept them in the village in which they had been arrested, instead of at once taking them to the nearest police-station. The prisoners escaped in the course of the night. To render s. 217 applicable two conditions must be fulfilled: 1st, there must be an intentional disobedience of a rule of law; 2nd there must be a knowledge that the offender, by disobedience, will save a person from legal punishment. If the police-officer's intention in keeping the prisoners in the village was merely to wait until it was more convenient to start, the disobedience of this rule of law was not such a disobedience as this section contemplates. In this case it was held that the police-officer had not committed an offence under s. 217.—REG v. WOOTUM CHUSO Panj Rec., No. 18 of 1871

WHERE a village-accountant and a village-munsif's peon had been convicted, under s. 217 of the Penal Code, of having disobeyed the direction of law contained in Act X. of 1872, s. 90, held that they were wrongfully convicted as not bearing the character which raises the obligation under the latter section. The direction of the law mentioned in s. 217, Penal Code, means a positive direction of law, such as those contained in ss. 89 and 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872 and cannot be made to extend to the more general obligation on every subject not to stifle a criminal charge.—In re RAMINIHI NAYAR, I. L. R., 1 Mad. 266. [Innes and Kernan, JJ. Mar. 7. 1877.]

THE accused was charged under s. 217 of the Penal Code; but the charge did not distinctly state what the direction of the law was which he disobeyed, and how he disobeyed it. Held that, when accused has been convicted on a charge expressed in vague terms, the prosecution on appeal should be limited to the particular sense in which the charge has been understood at the trial.—IMPERATRIX v. BABAN KHAN, I. L. R., 2 Bom. 142. [West and Pinhey, JJ. Aug 1, 1877.]

IT is sufficient, for the purpose of a conviction under s. 217 of the Penal Code, that the accused has knowingly disobeyed any direction of the law as to the way in which he is to conduct himself as a public servant, and that he has done this with the intention of saving a person from legal punishment; it is not necessary to show that, in point of fact, the person so intended to be saved had committed an offence, or was justly liable to legal punishment.—EMPRESS v. AMIRUDDEEN, I. L. R., 3 Cal. 412, 1 C. L. R. 483. [Jackson and Cunningham, JJ. Feb. 12, 1878.]

THE intention is an essential ingredient in the offence contemplated in s. 218.—QUEEN v. SHAMA CHURN ROY, 8 W. R. 27. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. June 25, 1867.]

WHERE a person is charged under s. 218 with framing a report incorrectly, or under s. 201 with giving false information with intent to save offenders from punishment, the issue to be tried is, not whether such alleged offenders were, in fact, guilty or not, but merely the belief and intention of the prisoner in respect to their guilt.—QUEEN v. HURDUT SURMA, 8 W. R. 68. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. Sep. 7, 1867.]

A KULKARNI who makes a false report with reference to an offence committed in his village with intent, &c., is punishable under s. 218 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. MALHAR RAMCHUNDRA, 7 Bom. H. C. R. 64. [Gibbs and Melvill, JJ. Aug. 11, 1870.]

A POLICE-OFFICER negligently or improperly submitting an incorrect report of a local investigation may be punished under s. 29, Act V. of 1861, in cases where the proof is insufficient to bring the case under s. 218, Penal Code.—BORODA KANT MOOKHOPADHYA, 15 W. R. 17. [Norman, Offg. C.J., and Loch, J. Feb. 11, 1871.]

S. 108 of the Penal Code does not contemplate any acts of subsequent abetment or provide for the punishment of such offences, except when they are such as are defined in ss. 212 to 218.—QUEEN v. PAUN PUNDAH, 18 W. R. 28; 9 B. L. R. Ap. 16. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 11, 1872.]

WHERE a chaukidar was charged under s. 218, Penal Code, with having made a false entry in a chaukidari attendance book with a view to support a charge which was made against a sub-inspector of having made a false report regarding the length of absence from duty of another chaukidar, and thereby to cause loss or injury to the sub-inspector, it was held that the intention was too remote to fall within s. 218.—QUEEN v. JUNGLE LALL, 19 W. R. 40. [Kemp and Pontifex, JJ. Mar. 1, 1873.]

S WAS charged with the preparation of a certain record, and was in the habit of preparing it from certain abstracts made and read to him by D. D made and read false abstracts, whereby an incorrect record was prepared. The Court was of opinion that D could not strictly be held to have committed the offence described in s. 218 of the Penal Code. He was guilty, however, of abetment of the offence described in that section, and not the less so that S had no guilty knowledge or intention in the matter.—QUEEN v. BRIJ MOHUN LAL, 7 N.-W. P. 134. [Pearson, J. Jan. 25, 1875.]

L was charged by S with offences under ss. 193 and 218, Penal Code, and also accused of acts amounting to offences punishable under s. 466 with seven years imprisonment. The Magistrate directed his discharge, whereupon L applied to the Court of Session, and S was committed for trial charged under s. 218, and acquitted by the Court of Session. The Court of Session then, under Act X. of 1872, s. 472, charged L with offences punishable under ss. 193, 195, 211, and 211 and 109, Penal Code, and committed him for trial. Held that such commitment was not bad, because it included the charge under s. 493, such an offence not being exclusively triable by a Court of Session.—EMPRESS v. LACHMAN SINGH, I. L. R., 2 All. 398. [Stuart, C.J., and Spankie, J. June 11, 1879.]

A PUBLIC SERVANT in charge, as such, of certain documents, having been required to produce them, and being unable to do so, fabricated and produced similar documents with the intention of screening himself from punishment. Held that such fabricated documents, not being records or writings with the preparation of which such public servant, as such, was charged, he could not legally be convicted under s. 218 of the Penal Code; nor, such documents not being forgeries, as they were not made with the intent specified in s. 463, could he be legally convicted under s. 471.—EMPRESS v. MAZHAR HUSAIN, I. L. R. 5 All. 553. [Stuart, C.J., and Straight, Oldfield, Brodhurst, and Tyrrell, JJ. Mar. 19, 1883.]

A POLICE-OFFICER, who had suppressed a document entrusted to him to forward to his superior officer, made a false entry in his official diary that the document had been so forwarded, intending that, if he were prosecuted under the Police Act for suppressing the document, such entry might be used as evidence in his behalf that he had so forwarded the document. Held that, inasmuch as to constitute the offence of fabricating false evidence, defined in s. 192 of the Penal Code, the evidence fabricated must be admissible evidence, and as, if such police-officer had been prosecuted under the Police Act, the entry in the diary would not have been admissible in his behalf though contrary to his intention it might have been used against him, such police-officer was improperly convicted in respect of such entry of fabricating false evidence punishable under s. 193 of the Penal Code. Held also that, such police-officer's intention in making such entry being to screen himself from punishment, he was not punishable under s. 218 of the Code.—EMPRESS v. GAURI SHANKER, I. L. R., 6 All. 42. [Straight, J. July 24, 1883.]

A TREASURY-ACCOUNTANT was convicted of offences under ss. 218 and 465 of the Penal Code under the following circumstances: A sum of Rs. 500 which was in the treasury, and was payable to a particular person through a Civil Court, was drawn out and paid away to other persons by means of forged cheques. After the withdrawal of the Rs. 500, but before such withdrawal had been discovered, the representative of the payee applied for payment. The prisoner then, upon two occasions, wrote reports to the effect that the Rs. 500 in question then stood at the payee's credit as a revenue-deposit, and that it was about to be transferred to the Civil Court. Upon the first of these reports an order was signed by the treasury-officer for the transfer of the money to the Civil Court concerned, and to effect such transfer a cheque was prepared by the sale-muharrir, which, as originally drawn up, related to the sum of Rs. 500 already mentioned. The signature of the cheque by the treasury-officer was delayed for some time, and meanwhile the cheque was altered by the prisoner in such a manner as to make it relate to another deposit of Rs 500 which had been made subsequently to the above, and to the credit of another person. The result of this was the transfer of the second payee's Rs 500 to the Civil Court, as if it had been the first Rs. 500, and to the credit of the first payee's representative. The prisoner was convicted under s. 465 of the Penal Code in respect of the cheque, and under s. 218 in respect of the two reports above referred to Held, with respect to the charge under s. 465, that the prisoner's immediate and more probable intention—which alone, and not his remoter and less probable intention, should be attributed to him—was not to cause wrongful loss to the second payee by delaying payment of the Rs. 500 due to her, though the act might have caused her loss, but to conceal the previous fraudulent withdrawal of the first payee's Rs. 500; that, under these circumstances, he could not be said to have acted "dishonestly" or "fraudulently" within the meaning of s 24 or s. 25 of the Penal Code; and that, therefore, his guilt under s 465 had not been made out, and the conviction under that section must be set aside. Held also that prisoner's intention in making the false reports was to stave off the discovery of the previous fraud, and save himself or the actual perpetrator of that fraud from legal punishment, and that, having prepared the reports in a manner which he knew to be incorrect, he was rightly convicted under s. 218 of the Penal Code. Held further that, as the prisoner, who was a public servant, made these reports, and assumed to make them in due course and as a part of his duty, and held them out as reports which were made by the proper officer, and as no question was put in the examination of the witnesses from the office which suggested that it was not his business to make such reports, it must be inferred that he made them because it was his business to do so, and as a public servant within the meaning of s. 218 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GRIDHARI LAL, I. L. R., 8 All. 653. [Edge, C.J. Aug 24, 1886;

A PUBLIC servant who does that which, if done to save another from legal punishment, would bring the public servant within s 218 of the Penal Code, has equally committed the offence punishable under s. 218, if the person whom he intends to save from legal punishment is himself. Queen-Empress v. Gauri Shankar (I. L. R., 6 All. 42), quoad hoc overruled. Queen-Empress v. Girdhari Lal (I. L. R., 8 All. 653) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NAND KISHORE, I. L. R., 19 All. 305. [John Edge, C.J., and Blair, J. Feb. 12, 1897.]

A REPORT of the commission of a dacoity was made at a thana. The police-officer in charge of the thana at first took down the report which was made to him, but subsequently destroyed that report, and framed another and a false report—of the commission of a totally different offence—to which he obtained the signature of the complainant, and which he endeavoured to pass off as the original and correct report made to him by the complainant. Held that, on the above facts, the police-officer was guilty of the offences punishable under s 204 and s. 218 of the Indian Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MUHAMMAD SHAH KHAN, I. L. R., 20 All. 307. [John Edge, C.J., and Burkitt, J.J. Feb. 11, 1898.]

THE District Superintendent of Police gave a warrant under the Gambling Act (Ben. Act II. of 1897) to D, a sub-inspector, to arrest persons found gambling in a certain house. In order to save two persons from legal punishment for having committed an offence under the Gambling Act in that house, D framed a first information and a special diary incorrectly. Held, he was properly charged with, and found guilty of, having committed an offence under section 218 of the Penal Code. The word "charged" in that section is not restricted to the narrow meaning of "enjoined by a special provision of law." An offence under the Gambling Act, being an offence for which the District Superintendent of Police may arrest or by warrant direct an arrest, is a cognizable offence within the meaning of s. 4, cl. (f), of the Criminal Procedure Code. The words "a police-officer," in that clause do not mean "any and every police-officer," it is sufficient if the Legislature by any law limits the power of arrest to any particular class of police-officers. D, and F, a head constable, were also charged under section 161, and section 161 read with s. 114, of the Penal Code, respectively, and it was contended that these charges were not sustainable, because they rested entirely on the testimony of persons alleged to have been accomplices, who had not been corroborated in material particulars. Held, the mere presence of a person on the occasion of the giving of a bribe, and his omission to promptly inform the authorities, do not constitute him an accomplice, unless it can be shown that he somehow co-operated in the payment of the bribe, or was instrumental in the negotiations for the payment. Queen v. Chundo Chundalinee (24 W. R. Cr. 55); Queen-Empress v. Magantal (I L. R., 14 Bom. 115); Queen-Empress v Chagan Dayaram (I. L R., 14 Bom. 331); Queen-Empress v. O'Hara (I. L R., 17 Cal. 642); Ishan Chundra v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 21 Cal 328); Jogendro Nath Bhaumik v. Sangat Garo (2 C. W. N. 55); Rajoni Kanto Bose v. Asan Mullick (2 C. W. N 672); and Alimuddin v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 23 Cal. 361) distinguished.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DEODHAR SINGH, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 144. [Rampini and Pratt, JJ. Sep. 5, 1899.]

219. Whoever, being a public servant, corruptly or maliciously makes or pronounces, in any stage of a judicial proceeding, any report, order, verdict, or decision, which he knows to be contrary to law, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both. Ct. of Ses. Uncog. Warrant. Bailable. Not comp.

Public servant in judicial proceeding corruptly making report, &c., contrary to law.

220. Whoever, being in any office which gives him legal authority to commit persons for trial or to confinement, or to keep persons in confinement, corruptly or maliciously commits any person for trial or to confinement, or keeps any person in confinement, in the exercise of that authority, knowing that, in so doing, he is acting contrary to law, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both. Ditto.

Commitment for trial or confinement by person having authority who knows that he is acting contrary to law.

PROOF of an unlawful commitment to confinement will not of itself warrant the legal inference of malice. Knowledge that such commitment is contrary to law is a question of fact, and not of law, and must be proved in order to satisfy the requirements of s. 220 of the Penal Code.—REG v. NARAYAN BABAJI, 9 Bom. H. C. R 346 [Lloyd and Kemball, JJ. Aug. 28, 1872.]

S. 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882) authorizes the arrest by the police, not only of persons against whom a reasonable complaint has been made, or a reasonable suspicion exists of their having been concerned in a "cognizable offence," but also of persons against whom "credible information" to that effect has been received. Semble.—Where the arrest is legal, there can be no guilty knowledge "superadded to an illegal act," such as it is necessary to establish against the accused to justify a conviction under s 220 of the Penal Code. It is only where there has been an excess by a police-officer of his legal powers of arrest, that it becomes necessary to consider whether he has acted corruptly or maliciously, and with the knowledge that he was acting contrary to law.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. AMARSANG JETHA, I. L. R, 10 Bom. 506. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Dec. 7. 1885.]

Intentional omission to apprehend on the part of public servant bound to apprehend.

An offence falling under the Police Act and also under the Penal Code should be punished under the Code. Where a police-constable allowed a prisoner to escape from the hawalat while the former was on duty as sentry, and was sentenced, on conviction by the Magistrate, to forfeit three months' pay under s. 29, Act V. of 1861, the Chief Court held that the conviction must be quashed, and the accused tried under s. 221.—CROWN v. FUTTEH KHAN, Panj. Rec., No. 11 of 1874.

A CHAUKIDAR, or village-watchman, is not legally bound as a public servant to apprehend a person accused of committing murder outside the village of which he is chaukidar, such person not being a proclaimed offender, and not having been found by him in the act of committing such murder; and consequently such chaukidar, if he refuses to apprehend such person on such charge at the instance of a private person, is not punishable under s. 221 of the Penal Code.—EMPRESS v. 223.† Whoever, being a public servant, legally bound as such public servant to keep in confinement any person charged with, or convicted of, any offence, "or lawfully committed to custody,"* negligently suffers such person to escape from confinement, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

CONVICT-WARDERS are "public servants" within the meaning of s. 223 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. KALLY CHAND MOITREE, 7 W. R. 63; 3 Wym. 35. Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. May 6, 1867.

WHILE a case was being investigated by A, a police-officer under the provisions of ch. 14 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, T presented a petition to the Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the case, in which he accused W of being concerned in the commission of the offence, and prayed that he might be arrested and sent to the police-officer investigating the case. W was accordingly arrested and brought before the Magistrate who, having examined T on oath, and taken W's statement, made an order on the petition to the following effect: "As no police-report has been made in this matter, and the petitioner only has presented this petition, ordered that these papers of W be sent to the District Superintendent of Police, and if a report of this matter be made, the case may be sent up according to rule with the papers." In accordance with this order, W was taken to the District Superintendent of Police, and was sent by that officer to A. Held that the Magistrate's order might be taken to have been passed under s. 167 of the Code, and therefore W was lawfully committed to the custody of the police and A was bound to detain him in such custody until released therefrom by due course of law; and that, consequently, A, having negligently suffered W to escape, had been properly convicted under s 223 of the Penal Code.—EMPRESS v. ASHRAF ALI, I. L. R., 9 All. 129. Straight, J. Dec 13, 1883.

S. 223 of the Penal Code applies only to cases where the person who is allowed to escape is in custody for an offence, or has been committed to custody, and not to cases where such person has merely been arrested under civil process.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. TAFAULLAH, I. L. R., 12 Cal 190. Wilson and Ghose, JJ. Aug. 24, 1885.

224.† Whoever intentionally offers any resistance or illegal obstruction to the lawful apprehension of himself for any offence with which he is charged, or of which he has been convicted, or escapes, or attempts to escape, from any custody in which he is lawfully detained for any such offence, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

ESCAPING from lawful custody is not obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions within the meaning of s. 186 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. POSHU BIN DHAMBAJI PATIL, 2 Bom. H. C. R. 128. [Couch, C.J., and Newton and Warden, JJ. Jan. 25, 1865.]

ESCAPES by parties detained for offences not punishable under the Penal Code are punishable under the Penal Code.—PRO., Dec. 22, 1866, 3 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 11. [Bittleston, Offg. C.J., and Holloway, Collett, Ellis, and Innes, JJ.]

THE punishment for escape from lawful custody (s. 224), in a case in which that is one of the offences of which the prisoner is convicted, must be "in addition" to any punishment awarded for the substantive offence.—QUEEN v. DHOONDA BHOOYA, 8 W. R. 85; 5 Wym. 7. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 2, 1867.]

To constitute the offence of escaping from transportation under s. 226 of the Penal Code, it is essential that the convict should have been actually sent to a penal settlement, and have returned before his term of transportation had expired or been remitted. Where a prisoner had escaped from custody whilst on his way to undergo sentence of transportation, held that he had committed an offence punishable under s. 224, and not under s. 226 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. RAMASAMY, 4 Mad. H. C. R. 152. [Scotland, C.J., and Collett, J. Dec. 2, 1868.]

To escape from custody under civil process is not a criminal offence within the meaning of s. 8 of the Presidency Towns' Police Amendment Act of 1860. Quære.—Whether such an escape, without force, is a misdemeanour at Common Law?—In re DAVID TURNBULL STUART; REG. v. JOHN CONNON, 6 Bom. PRISONER, whilst under trial before the Sessions Court upon a charge framed under s. 436 of the Penal Code (mischief by fire, &c., with intent to destroy a house), was charged under s. 224 with escaping from lawful custody. The Magistrate, being too late to make the latter offence the subject of another charge in the same case, made a separate commitment of the prisoner, after he had been convicted of the former offence, for the latter offence, which was one cognizable by the Magistrate. The commitment was cancelled, and the Magistrate directed to deal with the case himself.—In re ANUNTO KOYBURT, 17 W. R. 14. [Kemp and Jackson, JJ. Feb. 10, 1872.]

A PERSON who is detained in custody for the purpose of giving security for good behaviour, and escapes from the custody, has not committed an offence under s. 224, as he was not lawfully detained in custody for an offence.—PRO., Oct. 28, 1874, 7 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 41. He is liable to be punished under s. 225A.

WHERE a person apprehended on a charge of a cognizable offence escapes from lawful custody, his liability to punishment is not affected by the circumstance that a competent Court determines his offence to be other than that with which he has been charged. But, if charged with a non-cognizable offence, the police-officer, who apprehends him without warrant, does not have him in lawful custody, and his escape is not punishable under the Indian Penal Code, s 224.—QUEEN v. RAM SARAN TEWARY, 24 W. R. 45 [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. Aug. 19, 1875.]

WHERE a party was sentenced to ten months' imprisonment for escaping from a confinement, which he was undergoing without warrant of law, and without having committed an offence, the High Court, in the exercise of its powers of interference, set aside the sentence.—QUEEN v. RUGHOOBUR SINGH, 25 W. R. 1. Jackson and McDonell, JJ. Dec. 2, 1875.

ESCAPE from the custody of a village-watchman by a person wanted by the police on a charge of theft, and arrested on suspicion by the village-watchman, is no offence under s. 224.—REG. v. BOJJIGAN (I. L. R., 5 Mad. 22), following Reg v. M. Sinnadu Padiyachi (Weir, p. 68), in which the facts were as follow: "A prisoner, caught stealing limes, was brought by the owner to the village-magistrate, who put him into the stocks and put the talyari and vettiyan in charge over him. They went to sleep, and the prisoner released himself. Held that the confinement in the stocks of the accused before conviction was not lawful custody (Mad. Reg. XI. of 1816), and that the village-watchman was not a police-officer within the meaning of Act XXIV. of 1859, because he had not been enrolled or invested with power under s. 11 of that Act. Conviction for escaping from lawful custody. Sep. 23, 1878."

AN escape from custody when being taken before a Magistrate for the purpose of being bound over to be of good behaviour is not punishable under either s. 224 or s. 225 of the Penal Code.—EMPRESS v. SHASTI CHURN NAPIT, I. L. R., 8 Cal 331; 10 C. L. R. 290. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Feb. 22, 1882.] Followed in Queen-Empress v. Kandhaia, I. L. R., 7 All. 67, infra.

AN order was issued to a police-officer, directing him to arrest K under s. 55 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as a person of bad livelihood. K, with the assistance of three others, resisted apprehension, and escaped. Held that K was not charged with an "offence" within the meaning of that term as defined in s. 40 of the Penal Code, and that consequently no offence made punishable by s. 224 or s. 225 of the Penal Code had been committed in connection with his evasion of arrest. Empress v. Shasti Churn Napit (I. L. R., 8 Cal. 331) followed.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KANDHAIA, I. L. R., 7 All. 67. [Mahmood and Duthoit, JJ. Aug. 7, 1884.]

THE accused was arrested in the act of stealing, and was handed over to the village-magistrate, who forwarded him in custody of the village-servants to a police-station. The accused escaped on the way. He was convicted under s. 224 of the Penal Code. On appeal the conviction was reversed, on the ground that the custody was not legal. Held that the conviction was right. S. 59 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which requires a private person who arrests a thief in the act to take the thief to the nearest police-station, is sufficiently complied by sending the offender in custody of a servant.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. POTADU, I. L. R., 11 Mad. 480. [Muttusami Ayyar and Parker, JJ. Sep. 4, 1888.] Referred to in King-Emperor v. Johri, I. L. R., 23 All. 166, infra.

ON a charge under the Penal Code, s. 226, it appeared that the accused had been apprehended on a hue and cry being raised as he was running away after committing robbery, and that he was handed over to the village-magistrate, and was by him placed in the charge of taliyaries for detention till the next morning, when he was to be taken to the police-station, and that he escaped from the custody of the taliyaries. Held, distinguishing Queen v. Bojjigan (I. L. R., 5 Mad. 22), that the accused was rightly convicted of the offence charged.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. FAKIRA, I. L. R., 17 Mad. 103. [Muttusami Ayyar and Best, JJ. Oct. 25, 1893.]

AN offence was committed in 1866. In 1893 a person of the same name as the offender was arrested, tried, and acquitted. Whilst under arrest, the accused escaped from custody. Held that he was not liable to conviction under s. 224 of the Penal Code. An escape from custody, when such detention is not for an offence, is not punishable under that section.—GANGA CHARAN SINGH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 21 Cal. 337. [Prinsep and Ameer Ali, JJ. Dec. 21, 1893.]

THE accused, having been legally arrested, was subsequently left unguarded, and he escaped. He was then re-arrested, and was tried and convicted under the Penal Code, s. 224. Held that the conviction was right.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MUPPAN, I. L. R., 18 Mad. 401. [Shephard and Subramania Ayyar, JJ. July 23, 1895.]

THE Madras Salt Act, 1889, only authorizes searches for contraband salt, and arrests of the parties concerned in the keeping of such salt, to be made by officers of the Salt Department without search-warrant in cases where the delay in obtaining such search-warrant will prevent the discovery of such contraband salt. Held that, where the circumstances did not justify the officer in believing that the delay in obtaining a search-warrant would prevent the discovery of contraband salt, he had no power to search or arrest persons without such warrant, and the escape by the persons so arrested from custody was no offence within the meaning of s. 224, Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KALIAN, I. L. R., 19 Mad. 310. [Collins, C.J., and Benson, J. Mar 31, April 15, 1896.]

THERE is nothing extending s. 80 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to an arrest made by the police on an order in writing under s. 56 of that Code, so as to require that any information as to the authority under which the police are acting must be given to the person arrested in order to make it an arrest warranted by law. It may be desirable, or even obligatory, that, if called upon, the police-officer making such an arrest should show the person arrested the authority under which he is acting, but to hold that he is bound to do so before he can properly arrest and detain in custody such a person, so as to make the arrest and the detention lawful, would be to extend the law beyond what the Legislature has thought proper to declare it. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BASANT LALL, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 320. [Prinsep and Stanley, JJ. Jan. 26, 1900.]

S. 411 of the Indian Penal Code does not apply to the person who is the actual thief. Where, therefore, a person whose bullock had been stolen in his absence traced it to the house of the thief, and there and then arrested him, and made him over to a chaukidar, from whose custody he escaped, it was held that this was not an escape from lawful custody within the meaning of s. 224 of the Code. Semble, that if the owner of the bullock had himself been entitled to make the arrest, the subsequent custody of the prisoner by the chaukidar would have been a lawful custody. Queen-Empress v. Potadu (I. L. R., 11 Mad. 480) referred to.—KING-EMPEROR v. JOHRI, I. L. R., 23 All. 266. [Blair and Aikman, JJ. Mar. 14, 1901.]

WHERE substantially but one offence has been committed, and the acts, which are the basis of one charge, are the same which form the basis of another charge on which the prisoner has also been convicted; cumulative sentences on each charge should not be passed. Where prisoners were convicted under s. 224 for escape, under s. 225 for rescuing from lawful custody, and under s. 353 for using criminal force in so doing, and sentenced to separate punishments under each section, it was held that the prisoners had only done one act, and were guilty of only one offence, and should only have been found guilty under ss 224 and 225 of "escape" and "rescuing" respectively and sentenced accordingly.—QUEEN v. KALISANKAR SANDYAL, 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 14; 12 W. R. 2. [Macpherson and Jackson, JJ. June 11, 1869.]

WHERE a police-officer, duly appointed under Act V. of 1861, was engaged in the discharge of his duty as such police-officer at a time when an unlawful assembly took place, it was held that he was competent to apprehend any of the members of such unlawful assembly; and a person who rescued the party apprehended was convicted of rescuing from lawful custody within the meaning of s. 225 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. tant Court determines his offence to be other than that with which he has been charged. But, if charged with a non-cognizable offence, the police-officer who apprehends him without warrant does not have him in lawful custody, and his escape is not punishable under the Penal Code, s. 224.—QUEEN v. RAM SARAN TEWARY, 24 W. AN escape from custody when being taken before a Magistrate for the purpose of being bound over to be of good behaviour is not punishable under either s. 224 or 225 of the Penal Code.—EMPRESS v. SHASTI CHURN NAPIT, I. L. R., 8 Cal. 331; 10 C. L. R. 290 [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Feb. 22, 1882.] Followed in Queen-Empress v. Kandhaia, I. L. R., 7 All. 67, infra. But see s. 225B, which is a new section.

AN order was issued to a police-officer directing him to arrest K under s. 55 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as a person of bad livelihood. K, with the assistance of three others, resisted apprehension, and escaped. Held that K was not charged with an "offence" within the meaning of that term as defined in s. 40 of the Penal Code, and that consequently no offence made punishable by s 224 or s. 225 of the Penal Code had been committed in connection with his evasion of arrest. Empress v. Shasti Churn Napit (I. L. R., 8 Cal. 311) followed.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KANDHAIA, I. L. R., 7 All. 67 [Mahmood and Duthoit, JJ. Aug. 7. 1884.] But see new section 225B

To support a conviction under s. 225 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that the custody from which the offender is rescued should be that of a policeman it is enough that the custody is one which is authorized by law. Held, therefore, that rescue from the custody of a private person who had arrested a thief in the act of stealing was an offence. A Magistrate tried A for theft, and B and C for rescuing A from lawful custody, and convicted A, B, and C in one trial. A appealed, and B and C, appealed separately. No objection was taken in the petitions of appeal to the procedure of the Magistrate. Held, on revision, that the convictions might stand. —QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KUTTI, I. L. R., 11 Mad. 441. [Muttusami Ayyar and Parker, JJ. July 18, 1888.]

S, who was alleged to have committed theft, was unlawfully arrested by a private person, and made over to the custody of the village-chaukidar. The theft was not committed in view of such private person. S was rescued from the custody of the village-chaukidar by the accused The accused were convicted under section 225 of the Penal Code, and sentenced each to two months' rigorous imprisonment. Held that a village chaukidar cannot be properly regarded as a police-officer within the terms of s. 59 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that S, therefore, was not in lawful custody at the time of his rescue Conviction and sentence set aside.—KALAI v. KALU CHOWKIDAR, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 366 [Trinsep and Stanley, JJ. Jan. 11, 1900.]

A WARRANT of arrest which contains a wrong description of the accused is not a valid warrant, and a conviction under ss. 225B and 353 of the Penal Code of such accused person, who resisted or used criminal force upon his being arrested under such warrant, is illegal. In order to have a conviction for an illegal disobedience of a warrant, the onus is on the prosecution to show that the accused is the person, against whom the warrant has issued. It is not for the accused to show that he is not the person against whom the warrant was issued.—DEBI SINGH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 28 Cal. 399. [Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ. Feb 8, 1901.]

Resistance or obstruction to lawful apprehension, or escape, or rescue in cases not otherwise provided for.

A REVENUE COURT is a "Court of Civil Judicature" within the meaning of s 651 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A person, therefore, who escapes from custody under the process of a Revenue Court, is punishable under that section. S. 642 of the Civil Procedure Code only protects an accused person while he is attending a Criminal Court from arrest "under that Code." Held, therefore, where a person who had been convicted by a Magistrate, and had been fined, was arrested in execution of the process of a Revenue Court while waiting in Court until the money to pay such fine was brought, that such person was not protected from such arrest by the provisions of that section, and that, having escaped from custody under such arrest, such person had properly been convicted under s. 651 for escaping from "lawful custody."—EMPRESS v. HARAKH NATH SINGH, I. THE apprehension of a judgment-debtor in execution of a decree without the officer making the apprehension having the warrant of the Court executing the decree in his possession at the time of making the apprehension is illegal; and therefore, in such a case, the judgment-debtor does not render himself liable to punishment under s. 651 of the Civil Procedure Code, if he escapes from the custody of the officer making the apprehension. Quære.—Whether a person convicted under s. 651 of the Civil Procedure Code of escaping from lawful custody, who is sentenced to one month's imprisonment only, can, under s. 588 (29) of that Code, appeal?—EMPRESS v. AMAR NATH, I. Unlawful return from transportation.

To constitute the offence of escaping from transportation under s. 226 of the Penal Code, it is essential that the convict should have been actually sent to a penal settlement and have returned before his term of transportation had expired or been remitted. A PERSON convicted by the Recorder's Court of Prince of Wales's Island, Singapore, and Malacca, of the crime of burglary, and sentenced to transportation for ten years, at a place to be appointed by the Governor-General of India in Council, was released from the Ratnagiri jail on the ticket-of-leave after having been in confinement for more than eight years. At Karedar he committed theft in a dwelling-house before his sentence had expired. Held that the F. P. THE procedure laid down in s. 480 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be strictly followed. The provisions of the section should be applied then and there, at any rate before its rising, by the Court in whose view or presence a contempt has been committed, which it considers should be dealt with under s. 480. Where a Magistrate in whose presence contempt was committed took cognizance of the offence immediately, but, in order to give the accused an opportunity of showing cause postponed his final order for some days, held that such action, though it might be irregular, was not illegal; and as the accused had not been in any way prejudiced was covered by s. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Held also that, under the circumstances, it was doubtful whether there was any necessity for the Magistrate to postpone the final order until the accused had had an opportunity of showing cause against it and that he should have directed the detention of the accused, and dealt with the matter at once or before his rising.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ## CHAPTER XII.*

OF OFFENCES RELATING TO COIN AND GOVERNMENT STAMPS.

REPORT OF THE INDIAN LAW COMMISSIONERS ON OFFENCES RELATING TO COIN.

MOST of the provisions in this chapter appear sufficiently intelligible without any explanation.

We have proposed that the Government of India should follow the general practice of Governments in punishing more severely the counterfeiting of its own coin than the counterfeiting of foreign coin. It appears to us peculiarly advisable, under the present circumstances of India, to make this distinction. It is much to be wished that the Company's currency may supersede the numerous coinages which are issued from a crowd of mints in the dominions of the petty Princes of India. It has appeared to us that this object may be, in some degree, promoted by the law as we have framed it. That coinage, the purity of which is guarded by the most rigorous penalties, is likely to be the most pure; and that coinage which is likely to be the most pure will be the most readily taken in the course of business.

It is not very probable that any person in this country will employ himself in making counterfeit sovereigns or shillings, but, should so improbable an event occur, we think that the King's coin should have the same protection which is given to the coin of the Local Government. It may perhaps be thought that, in proposing laws for the protection of the King's coin, we have departed from the principle which we laid down in our note on the law of offences against the State, and that we should have acted more consistently in leaving the British currency to the care of the British Legislature. It appears to us, however, that the offence of coining though, in an arbitrary classification, it may be called by the technical name of treason, is in substance an offence against property and trade, and that it is an offence of very nearly the same kind with the forging of a bank-note, and that it would be an offence of exactly the same kind, if the bank-note, like the notes of the Bank of England formerly, were, in all cases, legal tender, or if the coin, like the Company's gold-mohur at present, were not legal tender. We do not, therefore, conceive that, in proposing a law for punishing the counterfeiting of the King's coin, we are proposing a law which can reasonably be said to affect any of the royal prerogatives.

The distinction which we propose to make between two different classes of utterers is marked in the French Code; and it is so obviously agreeable to reason and justice that we are surprised that, having been marked in that Code, it should not have been adopted by Mr. Livingstone. We are glad to perceive that the Code of Bombay makes this distinction.

An utterer by profession, an utterer who is the agent employed by the coiner to bring counterfeit coin into circulation, is guilty of a very high offence. Such an utterer stands to the coiner in a relation not very different from that in which a habitual receiver of stolen goods stands to a thief. He makes coining a far less perilous, and a far more lucrative, pursuit than it would otherwise be. He passes his life in the systematic violation of the law, and in the systematic practice of fraud in one of its most pernicious forms. He is one of the most mischievous, and is likely to be one of the most depraved, of criminals. But a casual utterer, an utterer who is not an agent for bringing counterfeit coin into circulation, but who, having heedlessly received a bad rupee in the course of his business, takes advantage of the heedlessness of the next person with whom he deals to pay that bad rupee away, is an offender of a very different class. He is undoubtedly guilty of a dishonest act, but of one of the most venial of dishonest acts. It is an act which proceeds, not from greediness for unlawful gain, but from a wish to avoid, by unlawful means, it is true, what to a poor man may be a severe loss. It is an act which has no tendency to facilitate or encourage the operations of the coiner. It is an occasional act, an act which does not imply that the person who commits it is a person of lawless habits. We think, therefore, that the offence of a casual utterer is, perhaps, the least heinous of all the offences into which fraud enters.

We considered whether it would be advisable to make it an offence in a person to have in his possession at one time a certain number of counterfeit coins without being able to explain satisfactorily how he came by them. It did not, after much discussion, appear to us advisable to recommend this or any similar provision. We entertain strong objections to the practice of making circumstances which are, in truth, only evidence of an offence part of the definition of an offence; nor do we see any reason for departing in this case from our general rule.

Whether a person who is possessed of bad money knows the money to be bad, and whether, knowing it to be bad, he intends to put it in circulation, are questions to be decided by the tribunals according to the circumstances of the case, circumstances of which the mere number of the pieces is only one, and may be one of the least important. A few bad rupees which should evidently be fresh from the stamp would be stronger evidence than a greater number of bad rupees which appeared to have been in circulation for years. A few bad rupees, all obviously coined with the same die, would be stronger evidence than a greater number obviously coined with different dies. A few bad rupees placed by themselves, and unmixed with good ones, would be far stronger evidence than a much larger number which might be detected in a larger mass of treasure.

"Coin" defined.

Queen's coin is metal stamped and issued by the authority of the Queen, or by the authority of the Government of India, or of the Government of any Presidency, or of any Government in the Queen's dominions, in order to be used as money; and metal which has been so stamped and issued shall continue to be the Queen's coin for the purposes of this chapter, notwithstanding that it may have ceased to be used as money.†

(d) The coin denominated as the Company's rupee is the Queen's coin.

(e) The 'Farukhabad' rupee, which was formerly used as money under the authority of the Government of India, is Queen's coin, although it is no longer so used ‡

IT is not necessary, in order to satisfy the ordinary definition of money, that a coin should be a legal tender receivable at a value in rupees fixed by law. Gold-mohurs, which, although they do not pass at an absolutely fixed value, yet have a current value not ascertainable merely by weighing them as lumps of gold, but attaching to them as coin, are coins "for the time being used as money" within the meaning of Act XIX. of 1872.—QUEEN v. KUNJ BEHAREE, 5 N.-W. S. 230 is an amended section. Cl. 1 has been amended by Act XIX. of 1872. The following are Mr. Hobhouse's object and reasons for the amendment: "The primary object of this Bill is to check the practice of counterfeiting the copper coin of Native States. These counterfeits are freely circulated in parts of British India, and the result is stated to be injurious to our currency. The Penal Code prohibits the counterfeiting of coin. But 'coin' is defined as 'metal stamped and issued by the authority of some Govern-

It has thus happened (accidentally, no doubt) that the coin of Native States is not coin within the meaning of the Act. This defect it is desired to amend. The opportunity has been taken to make another amendment. S. 230 defines coin as metal 'used' as money. It has been suggested that the definition may possibly be held to include old coin, such as the Græco-Bactrian stater, formerly used as money but now regarded only as a curiosity. The bill therefore proposes to introduce before 'used' the words 'for the time being.'"

Counterfeiting coin.

Explanation.—A person commits this offence, who, intending to practise deception, or knowing it to be likely that deception will thereby be practised, causes a genuine coin to appear like a different coin.

THOUGH there may be an absence of apparent resemblance, which may possibly arise from the process being imperfectly carried out, yet there would still be an offence under s. 231. And, even if the metal in which the counterfeit was made was completely different from that of the coin represented, it would still be a question of fact whether this difference did not arise merely from the manufacture having been interrupted in an early stage.—Mad. H. C. Rul., Nov. 17, 1863.

WHERE a medal was fraudulently represented to an ignorant person as being money, it was held that the representation did not render the medal counterfeit coin.—Mad. H. C. Rul. 1864.

MERCHANTS in various parts of the country had been in the habit for many years of sending copper to the Nawab of Loharoo, who turned the metal in mints established for the purpose, into small round pieces, upon which a certain stamp was impressed, the stamp not purporting to resemble the mark on any legal coin. These pieces of copper were then sold in the bazars in British India by weight, and used as money. It was generally believed that the Nawab had authority to establish the mints, and issue this copper as coin. Held that the pieces of copper were not counterfeit coin.—PREMSOOKH DASS v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 38 of 1870. But see the amended definition of "coin."

THE test of whether a coin is money or not is the possibility of taking it into the market, and obtaining goods of any kind in exchange for it. For this its value must be ascertained and notorious. Held, therefore, that to counterfeit a coin of the Emperor Akbar's time was not an offence under ss. 230 and 231 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. BAPUYADAV AND RAMA TULSIRAM, 11 Bom. Counterfeiting the Queen's coin.

To constitute the offence described in s. 232, there must be an intention that the coins made will be used as Queen's coin, or a knowledge that they are likely to be used as such. Such knowledge or intention will be inferred from the mere fact of counterfeiting, except under circumstances which conclusively negative it; but a distinction must be drawn between a deception practised for show merely, and one practised for wrongful loss or gain, and the former is not an offence under the Penal Code.—SHUMSOODEEN v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 26 of 1868.

IT is not an offence under s. 232 of the Indian Penal Code to remove the ring from a coin which has been used to form part of a necklace or other ornament, and to work up the face of the coin where the ring has been, it not being shown that any material part of the coin has at any time been removed.—KING-EMPEROR v. MUHAMMAD HUSAIN, I. Fraudulent use of false instrument for weighing.

264. Whoever fraudulently uses any instrument for weighing, which he knows to be false, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

INTENTION is an essential part of the offence of fraudulently using false instruments for weighing, and in any evidence of the absence of such intention in this case the Court quashed the conviction, and directed the return of the fines.—GOVT. v. KANGALEE MUDUK, 18 W R 7. Kemp and Glover. JJ June 3 1872

Fraudulent use of false weight or measure.

265. Whoever fraudulently uses any false weight or false measure of length or capacity, or fraudulently uses any weight or any measure of length or capacity, as a different weight or measure from what it is, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Ditto.

Being in possession of false weights or measures.

266. Whoever is in possession of any instrument for weighing, or of any weight, or of any measure of length or capacity, which he knows to be false, and intending that the same may be fraudulently used, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

* S. 263A has been added by the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act (III. of 1895), s. 2.

THE mere possession of weights in excess of the authorized standard will not support a conviction under s. 266 of the Penal Code. A fraudulent intent must be charged and proved.—REG. v. DAMODHAR DALJI, 1 Bom. H. C. R. 181. [Couch and Tucker, JJ. Jan. 27, 1864.]

THE mere possession of false weights or measures will not in itself raise any strong presumption of fraud, as they may have been put away so as not to be used. The fraudulent intent will be shown greatly by the place where they are found. Suppose a false balance was found fixed to a tradesman's counter where he was accustomed to sell his goods, and there was no other in the place. There would be, in the case, the strongest possible presumption that the possession was not innocent. On the other hand, suppose he had true balances in his shop, but an untrue one stowed away in an attic with a lot of lumber, there the presumption would be against fraud. A farmer had in his house a balance or portable weighing machine and two iron weights which were found by the inspector to be light. The inspector saw no produce about the premises, and could not prove that the farmer exposed or kept for sale, or weighed for conveyance or carriage any goods or produce, and it was held that the conviction of the farmer was wrong.—GRIFFITHS v. PLACE, 20 L. T., N. S., 484.

267. Whoever makes, sells, or disposes of any instrument for weighing, or any weight, or any measure of length or capacity, which he knows to be false, in order that the same may be used as true, or knowing that the same is likely to be used as true, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

CHAPTER XIV.

OF OFFENCES AFFECTING THE PUBLIC HEALTH, SAFETY, CONVENIENCE, DECENCY, AND MORALS.

268. A person is guilty of a public nuisance, who does any act, or is guilty of an illegal omission, which causes any common injury, danger, or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity, or which must necessarily cause injury, obstruction, danger, or annoyance to persons who may have occasion to use any public right.

Public nuisance.

A common nuisance is not excused on the ground that it causes some convenience or advantage.

KEEPING dogs which make noises in the night amounts to a public nuisance.—2 Chit. Crim. Law 647; 1 Russ. 452.

WHERE, upon an indictment against a tinman for the noise made by him in carrying on his trade, it appeared in evidence that the noise only affected the inhabitants of three sets of chambers in Clifford's Inn, and that by shutting the windows the noise was, in a great measure, prevented, it was ruled by Lord Ellenborough, C.J., that the indictment could not be sustained, as the annoyance was, if anything, a private nuisance.—REX. v. LLOYD, 1 Russ. 318.

NUISANCES punishable under the Penal Code may still be made the subject of civil action, before or without prosecution.—JINA RANCHHOD v. JODHA GHELLA, 1 Bom. H. C. R. 1. [Forbes and Newton, JJ. June 30, 1863.]

A COMMON gaming-house is one which is kept or used for profit or gain, and may constitute a public nuisance; but it cannot be held, in the absence of evidence of any actual annoyance to the public, that every person who admits gamblers into his house, and all persons who game therein, are guilty of a public nuisance within the meaning of s. 268 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. HAU NAGJI, 7 Bom. H. C. R. 74. [Gibbs and Melvill, JJ. Dec. 1, 1870.

* The definition of "public nuisance" here given applies in the case of all Acts of the Governor-General in Council and Regulations under 33 Vict., c. 3, s. 1, made after 14th January 1887.—See the General Clauses Act (X. of 1897), s. 3 (44) and s. 4 (2).

AT a certain village where a fair was annually held, the lambardars made arrangements, at the time of the fair, every year for the public sanitation of the place. In March 1875, the Deputy Commissioner, going to the place, found that the usual arrangements had not been made for the fair, and that the public road was for several hundred yards covered with fœtid matter. The Deputy Commissioner tried the lambardars for committing a public nuisance and convicted them. Held (by the Chief Court) that the conviction was bad, as there was no legal omission on the part of the lambardars.—CROWN v. GUJ SING, Panj. Rec., No. 11 of 1875.

PERSONS placing a bamboo stockade across a tidal navigable river for the purpose of fishing, although leaving in such stockade a narrow opening for the passage of boats, which passage was, however, kept closed except on the actual passage of a boat, were charged at the instance of a sub-divisional officer with causing an obstruction under s. 283 of the Penal Code. Held that, although it was doubtful whether s. 283 applied to the case, they had committed an offence under s. 268 of the Penal Code, and were punishable under s. 290 of that Code.—IN THE MATTER OF UMESH CHANDRA KAR, I. L. R., 14 Cal. 656. [Petheram, C. J., and Beverley, J. July 9, 1887.] Considered and commented on in Jugal Das Dalal v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 665 infra.

THE accused cut up, on his verandah, meat that was to be cooked for a dinner-party, exposing it to the sight of persons passing along the road, among whom were some Jains, whose temple was close by. The Jains complained to the Magistrate that the accused had made the air offensive, and caused annoyance. The Magistrate found that the meat was not in an offensive state, but convicted the accused of committing a public nuisance, under s. 268 of the Penal Code, on the ground that he had done an act by which several persons, being Jains were much annoyed, it being a well-known fact that they had great repugnance to the killing of animals of every sort. Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that in this case no real damage or injury was caused to the public or to the people in general dwelling in the vicinity, and that it was a case of private rather than of public nuisance, and, therefore, not one falling within the purview of the criminal law. The applicant's act was an annoyance merely by reason of its hurting the feelings of the Jains, who have a repugnance to the killing of animals, and did not constitute an offence under s. 291 of the Penal Code. Muttumira v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 7 Mad. 590) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BYRAMJI EDALJI, I. L. R., 12 Bom. 437. [Birdwood and Parsons, JJ. Dec. 1, 1887.] For Muttumira v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 590, see under s. 290, infra.

THE mere fact of an encroachment on a tidal navigable river does not necessarily amount to a public nuisance so as to render a person causing such encroachment liable to punishment under s. 290 of the Penal Code, but there must be evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in s. 268. In the Matter of the Petition of Umesh Chandra Kar (I. L. R., 14 Cal. 656) considered and commented on. The rule laid down in that case, to the effect that any encroachment, however slight, on a tidal navigable river, constitutes an offence under s. 290, is too widely stated. Each case should be determined on its own merits, and a decision arrived at as to whether the encroachment has caused an obstruction or not. The petitioner was charged with having erected a jag in a tidal navigable river, constructed of trees and dams, and thereby having committed offences under ss. 283 and 290 of the Penal Code. There was evidence to show that the jag was about 45 cubits long and 20 cubits broad, and that it was erected on the silted side of the river, where it was about 300 hats broad, and that it did not obstruct the ordinary navigation of the river. The lower Court held that the jag could not but cause an obstruction, and convicted the petitioner under s. 283. Held that, as there was no evidence to show that the petitioner had caused any danger, obstruction, or injury to any person in any public way or line of navigation, the conviction under that section could not be sustained. Held further that he could not be convicted under s. 290, as there was no evidence of any obstruction to the ordinary navigation of the river.—JUGAL DAS DALAL v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 665. [Prinsep and Ameer Ali, JJ. Feb. 9, 1893.]

WHOEVER appropriates any part of a street by building over it, infringes the right of the public quoad the part built over, and thereby commits an offence punishable under the Penal Code, s. 290, if not one punishable under s. 283.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VIRAPPA

WHERE a mother refused to allow her daughter suffering from small-pox to be removed to a hospital, in accordance with an order made by the District Magistrate, unless she accompanied her, and was convicted of an offence under s. 269 of the Penal Code by the District Magistrate, held that no unlawful or negligent act had been committed within the meaning of s. 269 of the Penal Code.—CAHOON v. MATHEWS, I. L. R., 24 Cal. 494 [Ghose and Gordon, JJ. Mar. 3, 1897.]

Held that the soliciting for purposes of prostitution of passers-by on a public road is not a public nuisance as that term is defined in s. 268 of the Indian Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NANNI, I. L. R., 22 All. 113. [Knox and Aikman, JJ. Nov. 6, 1899.]

269. Whoever unlawfully or negligently does any act which is, and which he knows or has reason to believe to be, likely to spread the infection of any disease dangerous to life, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

* Negligent act likely to spread infection of any disease dangerous to life.

INOCULATION in itself is not an illegal or negligent act; and unless it is proved that the act was done negligently, with the knowledge or belief that it was likely to spread the infection of a disease dangerous to life, or that there was negligent dealing with the patient after inoculation, with the knowledge or belief as aforesaid, there can be no conviction in respect of such an act under s. 269.—Mad. H. C. Rul., July 10, 1867; 2 Mad. Jur. 324.

ACCUSED were convicted under s. 269 for allowing accumulation of filth and manure in their villages. Held that this could not be construed into an act likely to spread infection of dangerous disease within the meaning of the section.—CROWN v. BUTA SINGH, Panj. Rec., No. 25 of 1872.

K, KNOWING that he was suffering from cholera, entered a train as a passenger without informing the Railway Company's servants of his condition. M, knowing of K's condition, bought K's ticket, and travelled with him. Held that K was properly convicted under s. 269 of the Penal Code of negligently doing an act which was, and which he had reason to believe was, likely to spread infection of a disease dangerous to life, and M of abetment of K's offence.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KRISHNAPPA, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 276. [Turner, C.J., and Kernan, J. Dec. 14, 1883.]

A PROSTITUTE who, while suffering from syphilis, communicates the disease to a person who has sexual intercourse with her, is not liable to punishment under s. 269 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) "for a negligent act and one likely to spread infection of any disease dangerous to life." Semble—She may be charged with cheating under s. 417 or 420, if the intercourse was induced by any misrepresentation on her part.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ACCUSED sold a quantity of atta at the rate of 18 seers per rupee, the price of atta of good quality being a rupee for fifteen seers. A medical officer deposed that the atta was "old and gritty," and "would be bad for the health if eaten." Accused told the purchaser at the time of the sale that the atta was being sold cheap, because it was "bad" or of an inferior quality. Held that the facts did not warrant a conviction under s. 273.—CROWN v. GUNESH, Panj. THE actual driver, and not the owner, of a carriage is liable under s. 279 of the Penal Code in case of a collision and injury to another arising out of rash driving.—LARKMORE (A. W.) v. PERNENDOO DEO RAI, 14 W. R. 32. [Bayley and Kemp, JJ. Aug. 13, 1870.]

DEFENDANT was convicted under s. 338 of the Penal Code of causing grievous hurt. The evidence showed that the defendant was being driven in a carriage to her house through the streets of the town between the hours of 7 and 8 P. M.; that the carriage was being driven at an ordinary pace and in the middle of the road; that the night was dark and the carriage without lamps, but that the horse-keeper and coachman were shouting out to warn foot-passengers; that the defendant's carriage came into contact with the complainant's father, an old deaf man, and that complainant's father was thereupon knocked down, run over, and killed. Held, upon a reference, that the question for the Court was whether there was any evidence that the death of the deceased was induced by an act negligently and rashly directed by the accused, and that there was no such evidence. The conviction was accordingly quashed.—PRO., Aug. 17, 1871, 6 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 31.

THE accused was convicted of rash riding on a public way under s. 279 of the Penal Code. He contended that his conviction was bad, on the ground that there was no proof that any person was on the road in question at the time when he was alleged to have ridden in a rash or negligent manner. Held that, though there was no such proof, it was competent to the Court to take into its consideration the probability of persons using the public way being placed in danger by the act of the accused. The accused's act came within the mischief struck at by s 279 of the Penal Code, and was included within its terms.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. HORMUSJI NOWROJI LORD, I. L. 283. Whoever, by doing any act, or by omitting to take order with any property in his possession or under his charge, causes danger, obstruction, or injury to any person in any public way or public line of navigation, shall be punished with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees.

WHERE an accused, for having repaired a public road without having previously asked for leave to repair it, was, on a simple petition, charged with having obstructed the road, and the complainant never appeared, held that the Deputy Magistrate ought to have dismissed the complaint.—QUEEN v. BHOLANATH BANERJEE, 7 W. R. 31. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Feb. 16, 1867.]

To spread fishing nets by the side of a thoroughfare in a town is neither an offence punishable under cl. 3, s. 48, Act XXIV., 1859, nor, without proof of obstruction caused to any particular person or class of persons, under s. 283, Penal Code. The following is a full report of the case:—"In this case the prosecutor (a policeman) deposed that he saw a bad-smelling net dried on the road by the side of the house of the first accused, so as to cause obstruction to persons passing by. The second accused admitted the net was his, and had been left there by him. The Magistrate convicted the second accused under cl. 3 s. 48, Madras Police Act (XXIV. of 1859) and fined him one rupee. The case was referred by the District Magistrate of Madura for the orders of the High Court, on the ground that the action of the accused in drying nets in the street did not, in his opinion, constitute such an obstruction as is contemplated in cl. 3, s. 48, Act XXIV., 1859. No one appeared at the hearing. The Court (Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ.) delivered the following judgment: 'Cl. 3, s. 48, Madras Police Act (XXIV. of 1859) under which the accused has been convicted, refers to obstruction of the road or street caused by cattle or by conveyances, in certain circumstances therein detailed. The act of the accused in spreading fishing nets by the side of the road was clearly, therefore, not punishable under this clause of s. 48 of the Act. The present conviction cannot also, in our opinion, be sustained as a conviction under s. 283, Penal Code, because, although it is stated in the evidence in general terms that obstruction was caused, it does not appear that obstruction was caused to any particular individual or individuals. The conviction is accordingly quashed. The fine collected from the accused must be refunded.'—REG. v. KHADER MOIDIN, I. L. R., 4 Mad. 235. [Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. Nov. 7, 1881.]

L. R., 14 Cal. 656 [Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J. July 9, 1887. Considered and commented on in Jugal Das Dalal v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 665, infra.

THE mere fact of an encroachment on a tidal navigable river does not necessarily amount to a public nuisance so as to render a person causing such encroachment liable to punishment under s 290 of the Penal Code, but there must be evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in s. 268. In the Matter of the Petition of Umesh Chandra Kar (I. L. R., 14 Cal. 656) considered and commented on. The rule laid down in that case, to the effect that any encroachment, however slight, on a tidal navigable river, constitutes an offence under s 290, is too widely stated Each case should be determined on its own merits, and a decision arrived at as to whether the encroachment has caused an obstruction or not. The petitioner was charged with having erected a jag in a tidal navigable river, constructed of trees and dams, and thereby having committed offences under ss. 283 and 290 of the Penal Code There was evidence to show that the jag was about 45 cubits long and 20 cubits broad, and that it was erected on the silted side of the river, where it was about 300 hats broad, and that it did not obstruct the ordinary navigation of the river. The lower Court held that the jag could not but cause an obstruction, and convicted the petitioner under s 283 Held that, as there was no evidence to show that the petitioner had caused any danger, obstruction, or injury to any person in any public way or line of navigation, the conviction under that section could not be sustained. Held, further, that he could not be convicted under s. 290, as there was no evidence of any obstruction to the ordinary navigation of the river.—JUGAL DAS DALAL v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 665. [Prinsep and Ameer Ali, JJ Feb. 9, 1893.]

Negligent conduct with respect to animal.

A PONY is an animal within the provisions of s. 289. To sustain a charge under s. 289, there should be evidence, not only of negligence, but also that such negligence would probably lead to danger to human life or of grievous hurt.—PRO., April 8, 1867, 3 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 33.

A CONVICTION under s 289 of the Penal Code quashed, inasmuch as the evidence did not allude to the negligence of which the accused had been found guilty, and because the evidence was taken in the presence of the accused.—QUEEN v. BROJONARAIN PURRAJ, 2 W. R. 51. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. Mar 22, 1865.]

THE order of a Deputy Magistrate prohibiting the owners of cattle from allowing their animals to stray, and a conviction under s. 289 of the Penal Code against the accused for permitting his pony to stray, were quashed as illegal upon a reference under s. 434 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872).—GOVT. v. THE omission of a person to keep his ponies from straying is not a public nuisance punishable under s. 290 of the Penal Code. —JOYNATH MUNDUL v. JAMUL SHEIKH, 6 W. R. 71. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Sep. 8 1866.]

THE establishment of a butcher's shop is not an indictable nuisance under s 290, but may become a nuisance if it be carried on in such a way as to be offensive to a section of the community, or without due regard to the feelings of any class.—EESA v. KEEMOO, Panj. Rec., No 18 of 1867.

IN a case of public nuisance under s. 290 of the Penal Code, it must be proved that injury, danger, or annoyance has been caused either in regard to the enjoyment of property, or the exercise of a public right on the part of a portion of the community, or of any particular class of people. The fact that there is a special law to meet a particular offence (in this case, cattle-trespass) does not prevent the punishment of the offenders under the Penal Code, if an offence which could have been rightly punished under the Penal Code was established.—ONOORAM v. LAMESSOR; WEBSTER v. KEENA, 9 W. R. 70. [Phear and Hobhouse, JJ. May 23, 1868.]

THE sentence of imprisonment passed in default of the payment of a fine inflicted under s. 290 of the Penal Code (for committing a public nuisance) should be one of simple, not rigorous, imprisonment.—REG. v. SANTU BIN LAKHAPPA KOKE, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 45. [Couch, C.J., and Newton, J. June 17, 1868.]

CERTAIN Hindus charged certain Muhammadans with nuisance, in that they had opened a cook-shop, and carried on their business in a manner calculated to give annoyance. Disputes of this nature being frequent, the Magistrate ordered the shop to be closed, pending reference to a committee of respectable Hindus and Muhammadans of the city, in conjunction with whom he prepared and promulgated for observance by both sects a set of rules, which included rules for the management of a Hindu temple and a Muhammadan mosque in the neighbourhood. Held that the Magistrate had no authority to interfere in the management of the temple and mosque, and should have confined himself to deciding whether the shop complained of was or was not a nuisance: that that was a question which did not depend entirely on the shop, being a cook shop, or on beef being sold there (though that might, under certain circumstances, amount to a nuisance), but whether the business of the shop (in itself a lawful business) was or was not conducted in such a manner as to give annoyance to the public in the vicinity.—ASSA NUND v. HOSSEIN BUKSH, Panj. Rec., No. 15 of 1868.

A PROSTITUTE, by visiting a dák-bungalow at the request of a person staying there, but against whom there is no evidence of any impropriety of speech, or gesture, or act, or that she had occasioned annoyance to the public generally, or to any persons who, in the exercise of their public right, were lodging in the bungalow, is not liable to be convicted under s. 290 of the Penal Code as having committed a public nuisance.—QUEEN v. MUSSUMAT BEGUM, 2 N.-W. P. 349. [Turner, Offg. C.J., and Turnbull, J. Aug. 18, 1870.]

A COMMON gaming-house is one which is kept or used for profit or gain, and may constitute a public nuisance, but it cannot be held, in the absence of evidence of any actual annoyance to the public, that every person who admits gamblers into his house, and all persons who game therein, are guilty of a public nuisance within the meaning of s. 268 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. HAU NAGJI, 7 Bom. H. C. R. 74. [Gibbs and Melvill, JJ. Dec. 1, 1870.]

THE petitioners, who filled up a portion of a ditch or drain which formed part of a public way, and which belonged to the public, instead of being convicted of a nuisance punishable under s. 290, Penal Code, were convicted of criminal trespass. But inasmuch as they had not been sentenced to a heavier punishment than might have been awarded if they had been convicted of a nuisance, the High Court declined to interfere.—IN THE MATTER OF ROOPNARAIN DUTT, 18 W R 38. [Couch, C.J., and Ainslie, J. Aug. 2, 1872.]

THE trial of 14 persons together charged with distinct offences (committing public nuisance) under ss. 290 and 291 of the Penal Code was held an irregularity calculated to prejudice the accused. Convictions quashed.—PULISANKI REDDI v. REG., I. L. R., 5 Mad. 20 [Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. Feb. 24, 1882.]

A SENTENCE of rigorous imprisonment in default of payment of fine for the offence of nuisance under s. 290 of the Penal Code is legal.—REG v. YELLAMANDU, I. L. R., 5 Mad. 157. [Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. Mar. 14, 1882.]

OMISSION to fence a well on private ground within eight yards of a highway, and open to it, is not punishable as a public nuisance. —QUEEN v. ANTHONY, I. L. R., 6 Mad. 280. [Innes and Kernan, JJ. Feb. 23, 1883.]

CERTAIN Mahomedan inhabitants of a village erected, during the Muharram, a temporary shed on land forming part of the village-site, and placed in the shed a religious symbol. They were convicted by a Magistrate under s 290 of the Penal Code of committing a public nuisance, on the ground that their act was certain to cause annoyance to the Hindu inhabitants of the village, whose temples were in the vicinity, and was therefore, calculated to lead to a breach of the public peace. Held that the conviction was illegal.—MUTTUMIRA v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 7 Mad. 590. [Turner, C.J., and Hutchins, J. Sep. 18, 1884.] Referred to in Queen-Empress v. Byramji Edalji, I. L. R., 12 Bom. 437, infra; and also in Queen-Empress v. Lakiuddin, I. L. R., 10 All. 44, infra.

A PERSON wilfully slaughtering cattle in a public street, so that the slaughter could be heard and seen by the passers-by, would commit an offence punishable under s. 290 of the Penal Code. But where certain Mahomedans, for a religious purpose, killed two cows before sunrise in a private compound partly visible from a public road, and the killing of one of the cows only was witnessed by one Hindu, held that the circumstances proved did not amount to the commission of a public nuisance as defined in s. 268 of the Code.—Muttumira v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 7 Mad 590) referred to —QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ZAKIUDDIN, I. L. R, 10 All. 44 [Brodhurst, J. June 22, 1887.]

THE accused cutup, on his verandah, meat that was to be cooked for a dinner-party, exposing it to the sight of persons passing along the road, among whom were some Jains, whose temple was close by. The Jains complained to the Magistrate that the accused had made the air offensive, and caused annoyance. The Magistrate found that the meat was not in an offensive state, but convicted the accused of committing a public nuisance, under s. 268 of the Penal Code, on the ground that he had done an act by which several persons being Jains were much annoyed, it being a well-known fact that they had great repugnance to the killing of animals of every sort. Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that in this case no real damage or injury was caused to the public or to the people in general dwelling in the vicinity, and that it was a case of private rather than of public nuisance, and therefore not one falling within the purview of the criminal law. The applicant's act was an annoyance merely by reason of its hurting the feelings of the Jains who have a repugnance to the killing of animals, and did not constitute an offence under s. 291 of the Penal Code. Muttumira v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 7 Mad. 590) referred to —QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BYRAMJI EDALJI, I. L. R., 12 Bom. 437. [Birdwood and Parsons, JJ. Dec. 1, 1887.]

PERSONS placing a bamboo stockade across a tidal navigable river for the purpose of fishing, although leaving in such stockade a narrow opening for the passage of boats, which passage was, however, kept closed except on the actual passage of a boat, were charged, at the instance of a sub-divisional officer, with causing an obstruction under s. 283 of the Penal Code. Held that, although it was doubtful whether s. 283 applied to the case, they had committed an offence under s. 268 of the Penal Code, and were punishable under s. 290 of that Code.—IN THE MATTER OF UMESH CHANDRA KAR, I. L. R., 14 Cal. 656. [Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J. July 9, 1887.] Considered and commented on in Jugul Das Dalal v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 665, infra.

THE lessee of a house, who permitted disorderly people to use it for gambling, and thereby caused annoyance to the public, was convicted of an offence under the Penal Code, s. 290. It appeared, however, that the accused had not engaged the house with the object of letting it out as a gaming house. Held that the conviction was right —QUEEN-EMPRESS v. THANDAVARAYUDU, I. L. R., 14 Mad. 364. [Muttusami Ayyar and Wilkinson, JJ. Jan. 28, 1891.]

THE mere fact of an encroachment on a tidal navigable river does not necessarily amount to a public nuisance so as to render a person causing such encroachment liable to punishment under s. 290 of the Penal Code, but there must be evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in s. 268. In the Matter of the Petition of Umesh Chandra Kar (I. L. R., 14 Cal. 656) considered and commented on. The rule laid down in that case, to the effect that any encroachment, however slight, on a tidal navigable river, constitutes an offence under s. 290, is too widely stated. Each case should be determined on its own merits, and a decision arrived at as to whether the encroachment has caused an obstruction or not. The petitioner was charged with having erected a jag in a tidal navigable river, constructed of trees and dams, and thereby having committed offences under ss. 283 and 290 of the Penal Code. There was evidence to show that the jag was about 45 cubits long and 20 cubits broad, and that it was erected on the silted side of the river, where it was about 300 hâts broad, and that it did not obstruct the ordinary navigation of the river. The lower Court held that the jag could not but cause an obstruction, and convicted the petitioner under s. 283. Held that, as there was no evidence to show that the petitioner had caused any danger, obstruction, or injury to any person in any public way or line of navigation, the conviction under that section could not be sustained. Held, further, that he could not be convicted under s 290, as there was no evidence of any obstruction to the ordinary navigation of the river.—JUGAL DAS DALAL v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 20 Cal 665. Prinsep and Ameer Ali, JJ. Feb 9, 1893.]

ON the 11th August 1894, the District Magistrate promulgated an order prohibiting the people of the village of Thirukodikaval from using their burning-grounds situated on the southern bank of the Cauvery, and directing them to use other burning-grounds which had been provided. On the 11th May 1895, certain persons, in defiance of this order, cremated a corpse at the spot interdicted, and were convicted under ss. 188, 290, Indian Penal Code, but the conviction under s. 188 was reversed on appeal. Held that, when persons entitled to use a particular spot dedicated for the communal purpose of cremation, use it for that purpose in a manner neither unusual nor calculated to aggravate the inconveniences necessarily incident to such an act as it is generally performed in this country, they cannot be convicted of a public nuisance on the ground that their act caused material annoyance and discomfort to persons near the place on the occasion referred to. Held, further, that the order of the District Magistrate was not warranted by s. 143, Criminal Procedure Code, or by any other law, and must, therefore, be set aside.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SAMINADHA PILLAI, I. L. R., 19 Mad. 464. [Subramania Ayyar and Davies, JJ. Aug. 13, 14, 25, 1896

Held that the soliciting for purposes of prostitution of passers-by on a public road is not a public nuisance as that term is defined in s. 268 of the Indian Penal Code.—QUEEN EMPRESS v. NANNI, I. L. R., 22 All. 113. Knox and Aikman, JJ. Nov. 6, 1899.]

Continuance of nuisance after injunction to discontinue.

BEFORE a conviction can be had of committing a public nuisance under s. 291, there must be proof that there was a previous conviction of an offence, and an injunction by a public servant to desist from continuing such nuisance.—IN THE MATTER OF MOHESH CHUNDER, 20 W. R. 55. Jackson and Mitter, JJ. May 21, 1873.]

THE trial of 14 persons together charged with distinct offences (committing public nuisance) under ss. 290 and 291 of the Penal Code, was held an irregularity calculated to prejudice the accused. Convictions quashed.—PULISANKI REDDI v. REG., I. L. R., 5 Mad. 20. [Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. Feb. 24, 1882.]

To support a conviction under s. 291 of the Penal Code, there must be proof of an injunction to the accused individually against repeating or continuing the same particular public nuisance. It must be shown that the person convicted had, on some previous occasion, committed the particular nuisance, had been enjoined not to repeat or continue it, and had repeated or continued it. The authority under which a Magistrate can order or enjoin a person against repeating or continuing a public nuisance is s. 143 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is the infringement of this order that is punishable under s 291 of the Penal Code. What is contemplated is an order addressed to a particular person. A Magistrate's power to deal with public nuisances are contained in chaps. 10 and 11 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Ch. 11 is only properly applicable to temporary orders in urgent cases. It is only in such cases that an order may be made ex parte, and any exception is allowed to the general rule that it shall be directed to a particular individual. In such emergent cases an order may, under s. 144 of the Code, be directed to the public generally, when frequenting or visiting a particular place, to abstain from a certain act, but this provision does not apply to a proclamation directed, not to the public generally, frequenting or visiting a particular place, but to a portion of the community.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. JOKHU, I. L. R., 8 All. 99. [Oldfield, J. Jan. 15, 1886.]

292 Whoever sells or distributes, imports or prints for sale or hire, or wilfully exhibits to public view, any obscene book, pamphlet, paper, drawing, painting, representation, or figure, or attempts or offers so to do, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine, or with both.

Sale, &c., of obscene books, &c.

Exception.—This section does not extend to any representation sculptured, engraved, painted, or otherwise represented, on or in any temple, or on any car used for the conveyance of idols, or kept or used for any religious purpose.

A CHARGE under ss. 292 and 294 of the Penal Code should be made specific in regard to the representations and words alleged to have been exhibited and uttered, and to be obscene; and the Magistrate, in convicting, should, in his decision, state distinctly what were the particular representations and words which he found on the evidence had been exhibited and uttered, and which he adjudged to be obscene within the meaning of those sections. Where no such specific decision has been given, the High Court, when the case has been transferred under s. 147, Act X. of 1875, may either try the case de novo, or dismiss it, on the ground that the Magistrate has come to no finding on which the conviction can be sustained.—REG. v. UPENDRONATH DOSS, I. L. R., 1 Cal. 356. [Phear and Markby, JJ. Mar 20, 1876.]

IN interpreting the word "obscene" in ss. 292 and 293 of the Penal Code, the Courts may rightly follow Reg. v. Hicklin (L. R., 3 Q. B 360), where Lord Cockburn, C.J., says: "I think the test of obscenity is this, whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences, and into whose hands a publication of this sort may fall" Whether a publication is obscene is a question of fact.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PARASHRAM YESHWANT, I. 293. Whoever has in his possession any such obscene book or other thing as is mentioned in the last preceding section for the purpose of sale, distribution, or public exhibition, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine, or with both.

Having in possession obscene book, &c., for sale or exhibition.

A BOOK may be obscene within the meaning of the Penal Code, although it contains but a single obscene passage. The defence to a charge of selling and distributing certain obscene books was that they were sold and distributed in good faith in prosecution of a religious controversy Held that the excessive obscenity of such books took away the protection which their controversial nature might otherwise have afforded them Also that the intention of the seller and distributor must be gathered from the character of the matter contained in such books. As he had chosen to sell and distribute what was obscene, it must be presumed that he intended the natural consequences of his act, namely, corruption of the minds and prejudice of the morals of the public. It was not sufficient for him to say that his intentions were good It was his public act that must be the test of his intentions, and, having done an unlawful act, it was no answer to say that he thought it lawful. Queen v Hicklin (L. R., 3 Q. B 360) and Steele v Brannan (L. R., 7 C. P. 261) followed At the conclusion of the trial of a person for the sale and distribution of obscene books, the Court trying him ordered the destruction of certain copies of such books, voluntarily surrendered by him, under s 418 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872). Held that such Court was not empowered by that section to make such an order —EMPRESS v. INDERMAN, I. L. R., 3 All. 837. [Straight, J. June 3, 1881.]

* For power to order the destruction of copies of the thing in respect of which a conviction under s. 292 or s. 293 is had, see the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898) s. 521.

IN interpreting the word "obscene" in ss. 292 and 293 of the Penal Code, the Courts may rightly follow Reg. v. Hicklin (L. R., 3 Q. ### OF OFFENCES RELATING TO RELIGION.

Presy. Mag. or Mag. of 1st or 2nd class. Cognizable. Summons. Bailable. Not comp.

295. Whoever destroys, damages, or defiles any place of worship, or any object held sacred by any class of persons, with the intention of thereby insulting the religion of any class of persons, or with the knowledge that any class of persons is likely to consider such destruction, damage, or defilement as an insult to their religion, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years or with fine, or with both.

Injuring or defiling place of worship, with intent to insult the religion of any class.

R, A HINDU, had sexual intercourse with a woman within an enclosure surrounding the tomb of a Mahomedan fakir. He was convicted under s 295 of the Penal Code. Held that, in the absence of proof that the place was used for worship or otherwise held sacred, the conviction was bad, and that it should be altered to a conviction under s. 297 of the said Code.—In re RATNA MUDALI, I. L. R., 10 Mad 126 [Muttusami Ayyar and Brandt, JJ. Dec. 29, 1886.]

THE word "object" in s 295 of the Penal Code does not include animate objects. The killing of a cow, therefore, in a public place is not an offence under this section.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. IMAM ALI, I. L. R., 10 All 150. [Edge, C. J., and Straight, Brodhurst, Tyrrell, and Mahmood, JJ. Dec. 20, 1887.] Followed in Romesh Chunder Sannyal v. Hiru Mondal, I. L. R., 17 Cal. 852, infra

THE word "object" in s. 295 of the Penal Code does not include animate objects. A bull dedicated and set at large at the Sradha of a Hindu in accordance with religious usage is not an "object" within the meaning of that section. Where such an animal was killed by certain Mahomedans secretly, and at night in the presence of none but Mahomedans for the sake of the meat and value of the skin, held that no offence had been committed under s. 295 Queen-Empress v. Imam Ali (I. L. R., 10 All 150) followed. Held, further, that such a bull is not "moveable property" within the meaning of ss. 378 and 403, or "property" within the meaning of s 425 of the Penal Code, and could not therefore be the subject of theft, criminal misappropriation, or mischief The fact that such a bull receives some attention from the cowherd of the persons who set it at liberty, and is daily fed by him by direction of his employers, and is not used for breeding purposes without their permission being asked, is not inconsistent with a total surrender by those who set it at liberty of all their rights as proprietors Queen-Empress v Bandhu (I. L. R., 8 All. 51) followed. Queen Empress v. Nalla (I. L. R., 11 Mad. 145) referred to and commented on For the purpose of construing a section of an Act, and ascertaining the intention of the Legislature, the Report of the Indian Law Commissioners or a Select Committee appointed to consider a Bill may be referred to Queen Empress v. Kartick Chunder Das (I. L. R., 14 Cal 721) followed.—ROMESH CHUNDER SANNYAL v. HIRU MONDAL, I. L. R., 17 Cal. 852 [Norris and Macpherson, JJ. Mar. 27, and April 15, 1890.]

296. Whoever voluntarily causes disturbance to any assembly lawfully engaged in the performance of religious worship or religious ceremonies shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Disturbing religious assembly.

A MASJID was used by the members of a sect of Mahomedans called the Hanifis, according to whose tenets the word "amen" should be spoken in a low tone of voice. While the Hanifis were at prayers, R, a Mahomedan of another sect, entered the masjid.

and in the course of the prayers, according to the tenets of his sect, called out "amen" in a loud tone of voice. For this act he was convicted of voluntarily disturbing an assembly engaged in religious worship, an offence punishable under s. 296 of the Penal Code. The Full Bench (Mahmood, J., dissenting) ordered the case to be re-tried, and that, in re-trying it, the Magistrate should have regard to the following questions, namely: (1) Was there an assembly lawfully engaged in the performance of religious worship? (2) Was such assembly, in fact, disturbed by the accused? (3) Was such disturbance caused by acts and conduct on the part of the accused by which he intended to cause such disturbance, or which acts and conduct, at the time of such acts and conduct, he knew or believed to be likely to cause such disturbance? Held by Mahmood, J., that the discussion occasioned by the act of the accused having, presumably, taken place during the interval when the prayers were not going on, the assembly was not at that time "engaged in the performance of religious worship," and was not "disturbed" within the meaning of s. 296 of the Penal Code; that, in reference to the terms of s. 39 of the Code, the accused did not disturb the assembly "voluntarily;" that he was justified by the Mahomedan ecclesiastical law in entering the mosque, and joining the congregation in saying the word "amen" loudly if he thought fit, and his conduct fell within the purview of s. 79 of the Penal Code, and was, therefore, not an offence under s. 296. Beatty v. Gillbanks (L. R., 9 Q. B. D. 308) referred to. Also per Mahmood, J., that having regard to the guarantee given by the Legislature to s. 24 of Act VI. of 1871 (Bengal Civil Courts Act), that the Mahomedan law shall be administered in all questions regarding "any religious usage or institution," the Court was bound, by s. 57 of Act I. of 1872 (Evidence Act), to take judicial notice of the Mahomedan ecclesiastical law, and the rules of that law need not be proved by specific evidence.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMZAN, I. L. R., 7 All 461. [Petheram, C.J., and Straight, Oldfield, Brodhurst, and Mahmood, JJ. Mar. 7, 1885.]

THE worship referred to in s. 296 of the Penal Code must be real worship and not a cloak for doing something else, and the assembly must be lawfully engaged in worship. If the ceremony is commenced by an act which is not lawful, it cannot be said that the persons engaged in it are lawfully engaged from the mere circumstance of their falling into a posture of worship, though such worship may be real. As to whether a worship is real or not, much must depend upon the circumstances under which it is performed. Per Banerjee, J.—To constitute an offence under s. 296 of the Penal Code (1) there must be a voluntary disturbance caused; (2) the disturbance must be caused to an assembly engaged in religious worship or religious ceremonies; and (3) the assembly must be lawfully engaged in such worship or ceremonies, i.e., they must be doing what they have a right to do.—JAIPAL GIR v. DHARMAPALA, I. L. R., 23 Cal. 60. [Macpherson and Banerjee, JJ. Aug. 22, 1895.]

shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

A, B, C, and D, were co-owners of a plot of land in which they were accustomed to bury their dead. 298. Whoever, with the deliberate intention of wounding the religious feelings of any person, utters any word or makes any sound in the hearing of that person, or makes any gesture in the sight of that person, or places any object in the sight of that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

Uttering words, &c., with deliberate intent to wound religious feelings.

THE Madras High Court has ruled that the interpolation of a forbidden chant in an authorized ritual amounts to an offence under the Penal Code.—NARASIMHA CHARRIER v. SHREE KRISHNA LALA CHERYA, 2 Mad. Jur. 236.

CERTAIN Hindus, present at a caste dinner, had sat down to partake of the food which had been served to them, when certain other members of the caste came, and, after telling those who were seated to move to another place, which they refused to do, threw down a shoe amongst the men who were seated. The persons who threw the shoe were convicted of mischief, on the ground as their action had polluted the food, and had, from a Hindu religious point of view, rendered it unfit to be eaten. On reference by the Sessions Judge, it was held that this conviction was wrong; neither could the accused be convicted under s 298 or under s 504 of the Indian Penal Code on the facts found.—KING-EMPEROR v. MOTI LAL, I. L. R., 24 All. 155. [Blair, J. Nov. 15 1901.

OF OFFENCES AFFECTING THE HUMAN BODY.

Of Offences affecting Life.

REPORT OF THE INDIAN LAW COMMISSIONERS ON OFFENCES AGAINST THE BODY.

THE first class of offences against the body consists of those offences which affect human life; and highest in this first class stand those offences which fall under the definition of voluntary culpable homicide.

This important part of the law appears to us to require fuller explanation than almost any other.

This first point to which we wish to call the attention of His Lordship in Council is the expression, "omits what he is legally bound to do," in the definition of voluntary culpable homicide. These words, or other words tantamount in effect, frequently recur in the Code. We think this the most convenient place for explaining the reason which has led us so often to employ them. For, if that reason shall appear to be sufficient in cases in which human life is concerned, it will, à fortiori, be sufficient in other cases.

Early in the progress of the Code it became necessary for us to consider the following question: When acts are made punishable on the ground that those acts produce, or are intended to produce, or are known to be likely to produce, certain evil effects, to what extent ought omissions which produce, which are intended to produce, or which are known to be likely to produce, the same evil effects, to be made punishable?

* Offences punishable under s. 298 are compoundable.—See the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), s. 345. As to the stage of proceedings at which no composition is allowed without the leave of the Court, see cl. 5 of s. 345 aforesaid.

Two things we take to be evident: first, that some of these omissions ought to be punished in exactly the same manner in which acts are punished; secondly, that all these omissions ought not to be punished. It will hardly be disputed that a gaoler who voluntarily causes the death of a prisoner by omitting to supply that prisoner with food, or a nurse who voluntarily causes the death of an infant entrusted to her care by omitting to take it out of a tub of water into which it has fallen, ought to be treated as guilty of murder. On the other hand, it will hardly be maintained that a man should be punished as a murderer because he omitted to relieve a beggar, even though there might be the clearest proof that the death of the beggar was the effect of this omission, and that the man who omitted to give the alms knew that the death of the beggar was likely to be the effect of the omission. It will hardly be maintained that a surgeon ought to be treated as a murderer for refusing to go from Calcutta to Meerut to perform an operation, although it should be absolutely certain that this surgeon was the only person in India who could perform it, and that, if it were not performed, the person who required it would die. It is difficult to say whether a Penal Code which should put no omissions on the same footing with acts, or a Penal Code which should put all omissions on the same footing with acts, would produce consequences more absurd and revolting. There is no country in which either of these principles is adopted. Indeed, it is hard to conceive how, if either were adopted, society could be held together.

IT is plain, therefore, that a middle course must be taken. But it is not easy to determine what that middle course ought to be. The absurdity of the two extremes is obvious. But there are innumerable intermediate points; and wherever the line of demarcation may be drawn, it will, we fear, include some cases which we might wish to exempt, and will exempt some which we might wish to include.

Mr. Livingston's Code provides that a person shall be considered as guilty of homicide who omits to save life, which he could save "without personal danger or pecuniary loss." This rule appears to us to be open to serious objection. There may be extreme inconvenience without the smallest personal danger, or the smallest risk of pecuniary loss, as in the case which we lately put of a surgeon summoned from Calcutta to Meerut to perform an operation. He may be offered such a fee that he would be a gainer by going. He may have no ground to apprehend that he should run any greater personal risk by journeying to the Upper Provinces than by continuing to reside in Bengal. But he is about to proceed to Europe immediately, or he expects some members of his family by the next ship, and wishes to be at the Presidency to receive them. He, therefore, refuses to go. Surely, he ought not, for so refusing, to be treated as a murderer. It would be somewhat inconsistent to punish one man for not staying three months in India to save the life of another, and to leave wholly unpunished a man who, enjoying ample wealth should refuse to disburse an anna to save the life of another. Again, it appears to us that it may be fit to punish a person as a murderer for causing death by omitting an act which cannot be performed without personal danger or pecuniary loss. A parent may be unable to procure food for an infant without money. Yet the parent, if he has the means, is bound to furnish the infant with food; and if, by omitting to do so, he voluntarily causes its death, he may, with propriety, be treated as a murderer. A nurse hired to attend a person suffering from an infectious disease cannot perform her duty without running some risk of infection. Yet, if she deserts the sick person, and thus voluntarily causes his death, we should be disposed to treat her as a murderer.

We pronounce with confidence, therefore, that the line ought not to be drawn where Mr. Livingston has drawn it. But it is with great diffidence that we bring forward our own proposition. It is open to objections: cases may be put in which it will operate too severely, and cases in which it will operate too leniently: but we are unable to devise a better

What we propose is this, that where acts are made punishable on the ground that they have caused, or have been intended to cause, or have been known to be likely to cause, a certain evil effect, omissions which have caused, which have been intended to cause, or which have been known to be likely to cause, the same effect, shall be punishable in the same manner: provided that such omissions were, on other grounds, illegal. An omission is illegal if it be an offence, if it be a breach of some direction of law, or if it be such a wrong as would be a good ground for a civil action.

We cannot defend this rule better than by giving a few illustrations of the way in which it will operate. A omits to give Z food, and by that omission voluntarily causes Z's death. Is this murder? Under our rule it is murder if A was Z's gaoler, directed by the law to furnish Z with food. It is murder if Z was the infant child of A, and had, therefore, a legal right to sustenance, which right a Civil Court would enforce against A. It is murder if Z was a bed-ridden invalid, and A, a nurse, hired to feed Z. It is murder if A was detaining Z in unlawful confinement, and had thus contracted a legal obligation to furnish Z, during the continuance of the confinement, with necessaries. It is not murder if Z is a beggar who has no other claim on A than that of humanity.

A omits to tell Z that a river is swollen so high that Z cannot safely attempt to ford it, and by this omission voluntarily causes Z's death. This is murder, if A is a peon stationed by authority to warn travellers from attempting to ford the river. It is not murder if A is a guide who had contracted to conduct Z. It is not murder if A is a person on whom Z has no other claim than that of humanity.

A savage dog fastens on Z. A omits to call off the dog, knowing that, if the dog be not called off, it is likely that Z will be killed. Z is killed. This is a murder in A if the dog belonged to A, inasmuch as his omission to take proper order with the dog is illegal. But if A be a mere passer-by, it is not murder.

We are sensible that, in some of the cases which we have put, our rule may appear too lenient. But we do not think that it can be made more severe without disturbing the whole order of society. It is true that the man, who, having abundance of wealth, suffers a fellow-creature to die of hunger at his feet, is a bad man—a worse man, probably than many of those for whom we have provided very severe punishment. But we are unable to see where, if we make such a man legally punishable, we can draw the line. If the rich man who refuses to save a beggar's life at the cost of a little copper is a murderer, is the poor man just one degree above beggary also to be a murderer if he omits to invite the beggar to partake his hard-earned rice? Again if the rich man is a murderer for refusing to save the beggar's life at the cost of a little copper, is he also to be a murderer if he refuses to save the beggar's life at the cost of a thousand rupees? Suppose A to be fully convinced that nothing can save Z's life unless Z leave Bengal, and reside a year at the Cape, is A, however wealthy he may be, to be punished as a murderer because he will not, at his own expense, send Z to the Cape? Surely not. Yet it will be difficult to say on what principle we can punish A for not spending an anna to save Z's life, and leave him unpunished for not spending a thousand rupees to save Z's life. The distinction between a legal and an illegal omission is perfectly plain and intelligible. But the distinction between a large and a small sum of money is very far from being so: not to say that a sum which is small to one man is large to another.

The same argument holds good in the case of the ford. It is true that none but a very depraved man would suffer another to be drowned when he might prevent it by a word. But if we punish such a man, where are we to stop? How much exertion are we to require? Is a person to be a murderer if he does not go fifty yards through the sun of Bengal at noon in May in order to caution a traveller against a swollen river? Is he to be a murderer if he does not go a hundred yards?—If he does not go a mile?—If he does not go ten? What is the precise amount of trouble and inconvenience which he is to endure? The distinction between the guide who is bound to conduct the traveller as safely as he can, and a mere stranger, is a clear distinction. But the distinction between a stranger who will not give a halloo to save a man's life and a stranger who will not run a mile to save a man's life, is very far from being equally clear.

It is, indeed, most highly desirable that men should not merely abstain from doing harm to their neighbours, but should render active services to their neighbours. In general, however, the penal law must content itself with keeping men from doing positive harm, and must leave to public opinion, and to the teachers of morality and religion, the office of furnishing men with motives for doing positive good. It is evident that to attempt to punish men by law for not rendering to others all the service which it is their duty to render to others would be preposterous. We must grant impunity to the vast majority of those omissions which a benevolent morality would pronounce reprehensible, and must content ourselves with punishing such omissions only when they are distinguished from the rest by some circumstance which marks them out as peculiarly fit objects of penal legislation. Now, no circumstance appears to us so well fitted to be the mark as the circumstance which we have selected. It will generally be found in the most atrocious cases of omission; it will scarcely ever be found in a venial case of omission; and it is more clear and certain than any other mark that has occurred to us. That there are objections to the line which we propose to draw, we have admitted. But there are objections to every line which can be drawn, and some line must be drawn.

The next point to which we wish to call the attention of His Lordship in Council is the unqualified use of the words "to cause death" in the definition of voluntary culpable homicide.

We long considered whether it would be advisable to except from this definition any description of acts or illegal omissions on the ground that such acts or illegal omissions do not ordinarily cause death, or that they caused death very remotely. We have determined, however, to leave the clause in its present simple and comprehensive form.

There is undoubtedly a great difference between acts which cause death immediately and acts which cause death remotely, between acts which are almost certain to cause death, and acts which cause death only under very extraordinary circumstances. But that difference, we conceive, is a matter to be considered by the tribunals when estimating the effect of the evidence in a particular case, not by the Legislature in framing the general law. It will require strong evidence to prove that an act of a kind which very seldom causes death, or an act which has caused death very remotely, has actually caused death in a particular case. It will require still stronger evidence to prove that such an act was contemplated by the person who did it as likely to cause death. But, if it be proved by satisfactory evidence that death has been so caused, and has been caused voluntarily, we see no reason for exempting the person who caused it from the punishment of voluntary culpable homicide.

Mr. Livingston, we observe, excepts from the definition of homicide cases in which death is produced by the effect of words on the imagination or the passions. The reasoning of that distinguished jurist has by no means convinced us that the distinction which he makes is well-founded. Indeed, there are few parts of his Code which appear to us to have been less happily executed than this. His words are these: "The destruction must be by the act of another. Therefore self-destruction is excluded from the definition. It must be operated by some act. Therefore, death, although produced by the operation of words on the imagination or the passions, is not homicide. But if words are used which are calculated to produce, and do produce, some act which is the immediate cause of death, it is homicide. A blind man or a stranger in the dark directed by words only to a precipice where he falls and is killed, a direction verbally given to take a drug that it is known will prove fatal, and which has that effect, are instances of this modification of the rule."

This appears to us altogether incoherent. A verbally directs Z to swallow a poisonous drug. Z swallows it, and dies. And this, says Mr. Livingston, is homicide in A. It certainly ought to be so considered. But how, on Mr. Livingston's principles, it can be so considered, we do not understand. "Homicide," he says, "must be operated by an act." Where, then, is the act in this case. Is it the speaking of A? Clearly not, for Mr. Livingston lays down the doctrine that speaking is not an act. Is it the swallowing by Z? Clearly not for the destruction of life, according to Mr. Livingston, is not homicide unless it be by the act of another, and this swallowing is an act performed by Z himself.

The reasonable course, in our opinion, is to consider speaking as an act, and to treat A as guilty of voluntary culpable homicide, if, by speaking, he has voluntarily caused Z's death, whether his words operated circuitously by inducing Z to swallow poison, or directly by throwing Z into convulsions.

There will, indeed, be few homicides of this latter sort. It appears to us that a conviction, or even a trial in such a case, would be an event of extremely rare occurrence. There would probably not be one such trial in a century. It would be most difficult to prove to the conviction of any Court that that death had really been the effect of excitement produced by words. It would be still more difficult to prove that the person who spoke the words anticipated from them an effect which, except under very peculiar circumstances, and on very peculiar constitutions, no words would produce. Still it seems to us that both these points might be made out by overwhelming evidence; and, supposing them to be so made out, we are unable to perceive any distinction between the case of him who voluntarily causes death in this manner, and the case of him who voluntarily causes death by means of a pistol or a sword. Suppose it to be proved to the entire conviction of a Criminal Court that Z, the deceased, was in a very critical state of health; that A, the heir to Z's property, had been informed by Z's physicians that Z's recovery absolutely depended on his being kept quiet in mind, and that the smallest mental excitement would endanger his life; that A immediately broke into Z's sick room, and told him a dreadful piece of intelligence which was a pure invention; that Z went into fits, and died on the spot; that A had afterwards boasted of having cleared the way for himself to a good property by this artifice. These things being fully proved, no Judge could doubt that A had voluntarily caused the death of Z; nor do we perceive any reason for not punishing A in the same manner in which he would have been punished if he had mixed arsenic in Z's medicine.

Again, Mr. Livingston excepts from the definition of homicide the case of a person who dies of a slight wound which, from neglect, or from the application of improper remedies, has proved mortal. We see no reason for excepting such cases from the simple general rule which we propose. It will, indeed, be in general more difficult to prove that death has been caused by a scratch than by a stab which has reached the heart; and it will, in a still greater degree be more difficult to prove that a scratch was intended to cause death than that a stab was intended to cause death. Yet both these points might be fully established. Suppose such a case as the following. It is proved that A inflicted a slight wound on Z, a child who stood between him and a large property. It is proved that the ignorant and superstitious servants about Z applied the most absurd remedies to the wound. It is proved that, under their treatment, the wound mortified, and the child died. Letters from A to a confidant are produced. In those letters, A congratulates himself on his skill, remarks that he could not have inflicted a more severe wound without exposing himself to be punished as a murderer, relates with exultation the mode of treatment followed by the people who have charge of Z, and boasts that he always foresaw that they would turn the slightest incision into a mortal wound. It appears to us that, if such evidence were produced, A ought to be punished as a murderer.

Again, suppose that A makes a deliberate attempt to commit assassination. In the presence of numbers, he aims a knife at the heart of Z. But the knife glances aside and inflicts only a slight wound. This happened in the case of Jean Chatel, of Damien, of Guiscard, and of many other assassins of the most desperate character. In such cases, there is no doubt whatever as to the intention. Suppose that the person who received the wound is under the necessity of exposing himself to a moist atmosphere immediately afterwards, and that, in consequence, he is attacked with tetanus, and dies. Here, again, however slight the wound may have been, we are unable to perceive any good reason for not punishing A as a murderer.

We will only add that this provision of the Code of Louisiana appears to us peculiarly ill-suited to a country in which, we have reason to fear, neglect and bad treatment are far more common than good medical treatment.

The general rule, therefore, which we propose is, that the question, whether a person has, by an act or illegal omission, voluntarily caused death, shall be left a question of evidence to be decided by the Courts according to the circumstances of every case.

We propose that all voluntary culpable homicide shall be designated as murder unless it fall under one of three heads. We are desirous to call the particular attention of His Lordship in Council to the law respecting the three mitigated forms of voluntary culpable homicide; and first to the law of manslaughter.

We agree with the great mass of mankind, and with the majority of jurists, ancient and modern, in thinking that homicide committed in the sudden heat of passion, on great provocation, ought to be punished, but that, in general, it ought not to be punished so severely as murder. It ought to be punished in order to teach men to entertain a peculiar respect for human life; it ought to be punished in order to give men a motive for accustoming themselves to govern their passion; and in some few cases, for which we have made provisions, we conceive that it ought to be punished with the utmost rigour.

In general, however, we would not visit homicide committed in violent passion which had been suddenly provoked with the highest penalties of the law. We think that to treat a person guilty of such homicide as we should treat a murderer would be a highly inexpedient course—a course which would shock the universal feeling of mankind, and would engage the public sympathy on the side of the delinquent against the law.

His Lordship in Council will remark one important distinction between the law as we have framed it, and some other systems.

Neither the English law nor the French Code extends any indulgence to homicide which is the effect of anger excited by words alone. Mr. Livingston goes still further; "No words whatever," says the Code of Louisiana, "are an adequate cause, no gestures merely showing derision or contempt, no assault or battery so slight as to show that the intent was not to inflict great bodily harm."

We greatly doubt whether any good reason can be assigned for this distinction. It is an indisputable fact that gross insults by words or gesture have as great tendency to move many persons to violent passion, as dangerous or painful bodily injuries. Nor does it appear to us that passion excited by insult is entitled to less indulgence than passion excited by pain. On the contrary, the circumstance that a man resents an insult more than a wound is anything but a proof that he is a man of a peculiarly bad heart. It would be a fortunate thing for mankind if every person felt an outrage which left a stain upon his honour more acutely than an outrage which had fractured one of his limbs. If so, why should we treat an offence produced by the blameable excess of a feeling, which all wise Legislators desire to encourage, more severely than we treat the blameable excess of feelings certainly not more respectable?

One outrage which wounds only the honour and the affections is admitted by Mr. Livingston to be an adequate provocation "A discovery of the wife of the accused, in the act of adultery with the person killed is an adequate cause" The law of France, the law of England, and the Mahomedan law are also indulgent to homicide committed under such circumstances. We must own that we can see no reason for making a distinction between this provocation and many other provocations of the same kind. We cannot consent to lay it down as an universal rule that, in all cases, this provocation shall be considered as an adequate provocation. Circumstances may easily be conceived which would satisfy a Court that a husband had, in such a case, acted from no feeling of wounded honour or affection, but from mere brutality of nature, or from disappointed cupidity On the other hand, we conceive that there are many cases in which as much indulgence is due to the excited feelings of a father or a brother as to those of a husband That a worthless, unfaithful, and tyrannical husband should be guilty only of manslaughter for killing the paramour of his wife, and that an affectionate and high-spirited brother should be guilty of murder for killing in a paroxysm of rage the seducer of his sister, appears to us inconsistent and unreasonable.

There is another class of provocations which Mr. Livingston does not allow to be adequate in law, but which have been, and, while human nature remains unaltered, will be, adequate in fact to produce the most tremendous effects. Suppose a person to take indecent liberties with a modest female in the presence of her father, her brother, her husband, or her lover. Such an assault might have no tendency to cause pain or danger; yet history tells us what effects have followed from such assaults. Such an assault produced the Sicilian Vespers. Such an assault called forth the memorable blow of Wat Tyler. It is difficult to conceive any class of cases in which the intemperance of anger ought to be treated with greater lenity. So far, indeed, should we be from ranking a man who acted like Tyler with murderers that we conceive that a Judge would exercise a sound discretion in sentencing such a man to the lowest punishment fixed by the law for manslaughter.

We think it right to add that, though in our remarks on this part of the law we have used illustrations drawn from the history and manners of Europe, the arguments which we have employed apply as strongly to the state of society in India as to the state of society in any part of the globe. There is, perhaps, no country in which more cruel suffering is inflicted, and more deadly resentment called forth, by injuries which affect only the mental feelings

A person, who should offer a gross insult to the Mahomedan religion in the presence of a zealous professor of that religion, who should deprive some high-born Rajpoot of his caste, who should rudely thrust his head into the covered palanquin of a woman of rank, would probably move those whom he insulted to more violent anger than if he had caused them some severe bodily hurt. That on these subjects our notions and usages differ from theirs is nothing to the purpose. We are legislating for them; and though we may wish that their opinions and feelings may undergo a considerable change, it is our duty, while their opinions and feelings remain unchanged, to pay as much respect to those opinions and feelings as if we partook of them We are legislating for a country where many men, and those by no means the worst men, prefer death to the loss of caste; where many women, and those by no means the worst women, would consider themselves as dishonoured by exposure to the gaze of strangers; and to legislate for such a country as if the loss of caste, or the exposure of a female face, were not provocations of the highest order, would, in our opinion, be unjust and unreasonable.

The second mitigated form of voluntary culpable homicide is that to which we have given the name of voluntary culpable homicide by consent. It appears to us that this description of homicide ought to be punished, but that it ought not to be punished so severely as murder. We have elsewhere given our reasons for thinking that this description of homicide ought to be punished.

Our reasons for not punishing it so severely as murder are these. In the first place, the motives which prompt men to the commission of this offence are generally far more respectable than those which prompt men to the commission of murder. Sometimes it is the effect of a strong sense of religious duty, sometimes of a strong sense of honour, not unfrequently of humanity. The soldier who, at the entreaty of a wounded comrade, puts that comrade out of pain, the friend who supplies laudanum to a person suffering the torment of a lingering disease, the freed man who in ancient times held out the sword that his master might fall on it, the high-born native of India who stabs the females of his family at their own entreaty in order to save them from the licentiousness of a band of marauders, would, except in Christian societies, scarcely be thought culpable, and even in Christian societies would not be regarded by the public, and ought not to be treated by the law, as assassins.

Again, this crime is by no means productive of so much evil to the community as murder. One evil ingredient of the utmost importance is altogether wanting to the offence of voluntary culpable homicide by consent. It does not produce general insecurity. It does not spread terror through society. When we punish murder with such signal severity, we have two ends in view. One end is that people may not be murdered. Another end is that people may not live in constant dread of being murdered. This second end is perhaps the more important of the two. For, if assassination were left unpunished, the number of persons assassinated would probably bear a very small proportion to the whole population. But the life of every human being would be passed in constant anxiety and alarm. This property of the offence of murder is not found in the offence of voluntary culpable homicide by consent. Every man who has not given his consent to be put to death is perfectly certain that this latter offence cannot at present be committed on him, and that it never will be committed, unless he shall first be convinced that it is his interest to consent to it. We know that two or three midnight assassinations are sufficient to keep a city of a million of inhabitants in a state of consternation during several weeks, and to cause every private family to lay in arms and watchmen's rattles. No number of suicides, or of homicides committed with the unextorted consent of the person killed, could possibly produce such alarm among the survivors.

The distinction between murder and voluntary culpable homicide by consent has never, as far as we are aware, been recognized by any Code in the distinct manner in which we propose to recognize it. But it may be traced in the laws of many countries, and often, when neglected by those who have framed the laws, it has had a great effect on the decisions of the tribunals, and particularly on the decisions of tribunals popularly composed. It may be proper to observe that the burning of a Hindu widow by her own consent, though it is now, as it ought to be, an offence by the Regulations of every Presidency, is in no Presidency punished as murder.

CULPABLE HOMICIDE AND ABORTION.

The third mitigated form of voluntary culpable homicide is that which we have designated as voluntary culpable homicide in defence.

We have been forced to leave the law on the subject of private defence, as we have elsewhere said, in an unsatisfactory state; and though we hope and believe that it may be greatly improved, we fear that it must always continue to be one of the least precise parts of every system of jurisprudence. That portion of the law of homicide which we are now considering is closely connected with the law of private defence, and must necessarily partake of the imperfections of the law of private defence. But wherever the limits of the right of private defence may be placed, and with whatever degree of accuracy they may be marked, we are inclined to think that it will always be expedient to make a separation between murder, and what we have designated as voluntary culpable homicide in defence.

The chief reason for making this separation is that the law itself invites men to the very verge of the crime which we have designated as voluntary culpable homicide in defence. It prohibits such homicide indeed. But it authorizes acts which lie very near to such homicide. And this circumstance, we think, greatly mitigates the guilt of such homicide.

That a man who deliberately kills another in order to prevent that other from pulling his nose should be allowed to go absolutely unpunished would be most dangerous. The law punishes and ought to punish such killing. But we cannot think that the law ought to punish such killing as murder. For the law itself has encouraged the slayer to inflict on the assailant any harm short of death which may be necessary for the purpose of repelling the outrage—to give the assailant a cut with a knife across the fingers which may render his right hand useless to him for life, or to hurl him downstairs with such force as to break his leg. And it seems difficult to conceive that circumstances which would be a full justification of any violence short of homicide should not be a mitigation of the guilt of homicide. That a man should be merely exercising a right by fracturing the skull and knocking out the eye of an assailant, and should be guilty of the highest crime in the Code if he kills the assailant—that there should be only a single step between perfect innocence and murder, between perfect impunity and liability to capital punishment—seems unreasonable. In a case in which the law itself empowers an individual to inflict any harm short of death, it ought hardly, we think, to visit him with the highest punishment if he inflicts death.

It is to be considered also that the line between those aggressions which it is lawful to repel by killing, and those which it is not lawful so to repel, is in our Code, and must be in every Code, to a great extent, an arbitrary line, and that many individual cases will fall on one side of that line which, if we had framed the law with a view to those cases alone, we should place on the other. Thus, we allow a man to kill if he has no other means of preventing an incendiary from burning a house, and we do not allow him to kill for the purpose of preventing the commission of a simple theft. But a house may be a wretched heap of mats and thatch, propped by a few bamboos, and not worth altogether twenty rupees. A simple theft may deprive a man of a pocket-book which contains bills to a great amount the savings of a long and laborious life, the sole dependence of a large family. That in these cases the man who kills the incendiary should be pronounced guiltless of any offence, and that the man who kills the thief should be sentenced to the gallows, or, if he is treated with the utmost lenity which the Courts can show, to perpetual transportation or imprisonment, would be generally condemned as a shocking injustice. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that the offence which we have designated as voluntary culpable homicide in defence ought to be distinguished from murder in such a manner that the Courts may have it in their power to inflict a slight or a merely nominal punishment on acts which, though not within the letter of the law which authorizes killing in self-defence, are yet within the reason of that law.

We have hitherto been considering the law of voluntary culpable homicide. But homicide may be culpable yet not voluntary. There will probably be little difference of opinion as to the expediency of providing a punishment for the rash and negligent causing of death. But it may be thought that we have dealt too leniently by the offender who, while committing a crime, causes death which he did not intend to cause, or know himself to be likely to cause.

The law as we have framed it differs widely from the English law. "If," says Sir William Blackstone, "one intends to do another felony, and undesignedly kills a man, this is murder;" and he gives the following illustration of the rule. "If one gives a woman with child a medicine to produce abortion, and it operates so violently as to kill the woman, this is murder in the person who gave it."

Under the provisions of our Code, this case would be very differently dealt with according to circumstances. If A kills Z by administering abortives to her with the knowledge that those abortives are likely to cause her death, he is guilty of voluntary culpable homicide, which will be voluntary culpable homicide by consent if Z agreed to run the risk, and murder, if Z did not so agree. If A causes miscarriage to Z, not intending to cause Z's death, not thinking it likely that he shall cause Z's death, but so rashly or negligently as to cause her death. A is guilty of culpable homicide not voluntary, and will be liable to the punishment provided for the causing of miscarriage, increased by imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. Lastly, if A took such precautions that there was no reasonable probability that Z's death would be caused, and if the medicine were rendered deadly by some accident which no human sagacity could have foreseen, or by some peculiarity in Z's constitution, such as there was no ground whatever to expect, A will be liable to no punishment whatever on account of her death, but will, of course, be liable to the punishment provided for causing miscarriage.

It may be proper for us to offer some arguments in defence of this part of the Code.

It will be admitted that, when an act is in itself innocent, to punish the person who does it, because bad consequences which no human wisdom could have foreseen have followed from it, would be in the highest degree barbarous and absurd

REPORT OF THE INDIAN LAW COMMISSIONERS ON OFFENCES AGAINST THE BODY—contd.

A pilot is navigating the Hooghly with the utmost care and skill: he directs the vessel against a sand bank which has been recently formed, and of which the existence was altogether unknown till this disaster. Several of his passengers are consequently drowned. To hang the pilot as a murderer on account of this misfortune would be universally allowed to be an act of atrocious injustice. But, if the voyage of the pilot be itself a high offence, ought that circumstance alone to turn his misfortune into a murder? Suppose that he is engaged in conveying an offender beyond the reach of justice, that he has kidnapped some natives, and is carrying them to a ship which is to convey them to some foreign slave colony, that he is violating the laws of quarantine at a time when it is of the highest importance that those laws should be strictly observed, that he is carrying supplies, deserters, and intelligence to the enemies of the State. The offence of such a pilot ought, undoubtedly, to be severely punished. But to pronounce him guilty of one offence, because a misfortune befel him while he was committing another offence—to pronounce him the murderer of people whose lives he never meant to endanger, whom he was doing his best to carry safe to their destination, and whose death has been purely accidental—is surely to confound all the boundaries of crime.

Again, A heaps fuel on a fire, not in an imprudent manner, but in such a manner that the chance of harm is not worth considering. Unhappily the flame bursts out more violently than there was reason to expect. At the same moment a sudden puff of wind blows Z's light dress towards the hearth. The dress catches fire, and Z is burned to death. To punish A as a murderer on account of such an unhappy event would be senseless cruelty. But suppose that the fuel which caused the flame to burst forth was a will, which A was fraudulently destroying. Ought this circumstance to make A the murderer of Z? We think not. For the fraudulent destroying of wills, we have provided, in other parts of the Code, punishments which we think sufficient. If not sufficient, they ought to be made so. But we cannot admit that Z's death has in the smallest degree, aggravated A's offence, or ought to be considered in apportioning A's punishment.

To punish as a murderer every man who, while committing a heinous offence, causes death by pure misadventure, is a course which evidently adds nothing to the security of human life. No man can so conduct himself as to make it absolutely certain that he shall not be so unfortunate as to cause the death of a fellow-creature. The utmost that he can do is to abstain from every thing which is at all likely to cause death. No fear of punishment can make him do more than this, and therefore to punish a man who has done this can add nothing to the security of human life. The only good effect which such punishment can produce will be to deter people from committing any of those offences which turn into murders what are in themselves mere accidents. It is, in fact, an addition to the punishment of those offences, and it is an addition made in the very worst way. For example, hundreds of persons in some great cities are in the habit of picking pockets. They know that they are guilty of a great offence. But it has never occurred to one of them, nor would it occur to any rational man, that they are guilty of an offence which endangers life. Unhappily one of these hundreds attempts to take the purse of a gentleman who has a loaded pistol in his pocket. The thief touches the trigger: the pistol goes off: the gentleman is shot dead. To treat the case of this pick-pocket differently from that of the numerous pick-pockets who steal under exactly the same circumstances, with exactly the same intentions, with no less risk of causing death, with no greater care to avoid causing death—to send them to the house of correction as thieves, and him to the gallows as a murderer—appears to us an unreasonable course. If the punishment for stealing from the person be too light, let it be increased, and let the increase fall alike on all the offenders. Surely the worst mode of increasing the punishment of an offence is to provide that, besides the ordinary punishment, every offender shall run an exceedingly small risk of being hanged. The more nearly the amount of punishment can be reduced to a certainty the better. But, if chance is to be admitted, there are better ways of admitting it. It would be a less capricious, and therefore a more salutary, course to provide that every fiftieth or every hundredth thief selected by lot should be hanged, than to provide that every thief should be hanged who, while engaged in stealing, should meet with an unforeseen misfortune such as might have befallen the most virtuous man while performing the most virtuous action.

We trust that His Lordship in Council will think that we have judged correctly in proposing that, when a person engaged in the commission of an offence causes death by pure accident, he shall suffer only the punishment of his offence without any addition on account of such accidental death.

When a person engaged in the commission of an offence causes death by rashness or negligence, but without either intending to cause death, or thinking it likely that he shall cause death, we propose that he shall be liable to the punishment of the offence which he was engaged in committing, superadded to the ordinary punishment of involuntary culpable homicide.

The arguments and illustrations which we have employed for the purpose of showing that the involuntary causing of death without either rashness or negligence ought, under no circumstances, to be punished at all, will, with some modifications which will readily suggest themselves, serve to show that the involuntary causing of death by rashness or negligence, though always punishable, ought, under no circumstances, to be punished as murder.

It gives us great pleasure to observe that Mr. Livingston's provisions on this subject, though in details they differ widely from ours, are framed on the principles which we have here defended.

We wish next to call the attention of His Lordship in Council to clauses 308 and 309. These clauses appear to us absolutely necessary to the completeness of the Code. We have provided, under the head of bodily hurt, for cases in which hurt is inflicted in an attempt to murder: under the head of assaults, for assaults committed in attempting to murder; under the head of criminal trespass, for some criminal trespasses committed in order to murder. But there will still remain many atrocious and deliberate attempts to murder which are not trespasses, which are not assaults, and which cause no hurt. A, for example, digs a pit in his garden, and conceals the mouth of it, intending that Z may fall in and perish there. Here A has committed no trespass, for the ground is his own, and no assault, for he has applied no force to Z. He may not have caused bodily hurt, for Z may have received a timely caution, or may not have gone near the pit. But A's crime is evidently one which ought to be punished as severely as if he had laid hands on Z with the intention of cutting his throat.

Again, A sets poisoned food before Z. Here A may have committed no trespass, for the food may be his own; and, if so, he violates no right of property by mixing arsenic with it. He commits no assault, for he means the taking of the food to be Z's voluntary act. If Z does not swallow enough of the poisoned food to disorder him, A causes no bodily hurt. Yet it is plain that A has been guilty of a crime of a most atrocious description.

Similar attempts may be made to commit voluntary culpable homicide in any of the three mitigated forms A, for example, is excited to violent passion by Z, and fires a pistol intending to kill Z. If the shot proves fatal, A will be guilty of manslaughter; and he surely ought not to be exempted from all punishment if the ball only grazes the intended victim.

It is to meet cases of this description that clauses 308 and 309 are intended.

With respect to the law on the subject of abortion, we think it necessary to say only that we entertain strong apprehensions that this or any other law on that subject may, in this country, be abused to the vilest purposes. The charge of abortion is one which, even where it is not substantiated, often leaves a stain on the honour of families. The power of bringing a false accusation of this description is, therefore, a formidable engine in the hands of unprincipled men. This part of the law will, unless great care may be taken, produce few convictions, but much misery and terror to respectable families, and a large harvest of profit to the vilest pests of society. We trust that it may be in our power in the Code of Procedure to lay down rules which may prevent such an abuse. Should we not be able to do so, we are inclined to think that it would be our duty to advise His Lordship in Council rather to suffer abortion where the mother is a party to the offence, to remain wholly unpunished, than to repress it by provisions which would occasion more suffering to the innocent than to the guilty

299. Whoever causes death by doing an act with the intention of causing death, or with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, or with the knowledge that he is likely, by such act, to cause death, commits the offence of culpable homicide.

Culpable homicide.

Illustrations.

(a.) A lays sticks and turf over a pit, with the intention of thereby causing death, or with the knowledge that death is likely to be thereby caused. Z, believing the ground to be firm, treads on it, falls in, and is killed. A has committed the offence of culpable homicide.

(b.) A knows Z to be behind a bush. B does not know it. A, intending to cause, or knowing it to be likely to cause Z's death, induces B to fire at the bush. B fires, and kills Z. Here B may be guilty of no offence; but A has committed the offence of culpable homicide.

(c.) A, by shooting at a fowl with intent to kill and steal it, kills B, who is behind a bush, A not knowing that he was there. Here, although A was doing an unlawful act, he was not guilty of culpable homicide as he did not intend to kill B, or to cause death by doing an act that he knew was likely to cause death.

Explanation 1.—A person who causes bodily injury to another, who is labouring under a disorder, disease, or bodily infirmity, and thereby accelerates the death of that other, shall be deemed to have caused his death.

Explanation 2.—Where death is caused by bodily injury, the person who causes such bodily injury shall be deemed to have caused the death, although, by resorting to proper remedies and skilful treatment, the death might have been prevented.

Explanation 3.—The causing of the death of a child in the mother's womb is not homicide. But it may amount to culpable homicide to cause the death of a living child, if any part of that child has been brought forth, though the child may not have breathed or been completely born.

THE accused was tried for murder. The first verdict of the jury was: "Guilty of murder under grave and sudden provocation." The Sessions Judge told the jury that it was their duty, after considering the question of provocation, to return a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. The jury, therefore, brought in a second verdict of "not guilty." The Judge, considering this verdict to be perverse referred the case to the High Court under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882). Held that the discretion given to the jury after the first verdict was wrong, as the case fell under s. 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882). Although the charge was only one of murder, the jury had a right to bring in a verdict of culpable homicide, if there was grave and sudden provocation so as to deprive the prisoner of the power of self-control. Held, also, that the jury were not bound to find a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. They might have found a special verdict, or findings on matters of fact to which the Judge applies the law. Held, also, that the first verdict was a verdict of murder as the jury did not find that the provocation had destroyed the power of self-control. It is not a necessary consequence of anger, or other emotion, that the power of self-control should be lost. Except where unsoundness of mind or real fear of instant death is proved, the pressure of temptation is no excuse for breaking the law. Held, lastly, that the High Court will not interfere with the verdict of a jury unless it is shown to be clearly and manifestly wrong. A verdict ought to be considered a proper and not a perverse verdict if it is one which reasonable men might find on the facts in evidence. Queen-Empress v. Dada Anna (I. L. R., 15 Bom. 452) and Queen-Empress v. Maganlal (I. L. R., 14 Bom. 115) followed.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DEVJI GOVINDJI, I. L. R., 20 Bom. 215. Jardine and Ranade, JJ. July 29, 1895.

300. Except in the cases hereinafter excepted, culpable homicide is murder, if the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing death, or,

Murder.

2ndly, if it is done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knows to be likely to cause the death of the person to whom the harm is caused, or,

Secondly, if it is done with the intention of causing bodily injury to any person, and the bodily injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death, or

Thirdly, if the person committing the act knows that it is so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause death, or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, and commits such act without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death or such injury as aforesaid.

Illustrations.

(a.) A shoots Z with the intention of killing him. Z dies in consequence. A commits murder.

(b.) A, knowing that Z is labouring under such a disease that a blow is likely to cause his death, strikes him with the intention of causing bodily injury. Z dies in consequence of the blow. A is guilty of murder, although the blow might not have been sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause the death of a person in a sound state of health. But if A, not knowing that Z is labouring under any disease, gives him such a blow as would not, in the ordinary course of nature, kill a person in a sound state of health, here A, although he may intend to cause bodily injury, is not guilty of murder, if he did not intend to cause death or such bodily injury as, in the ordinary course of nature, would cause death.

(c.) A intentionally gives Z a sword-cut or club-wound sufficient to cause the death of a man in the ordinary course of nature. Z dies in consequence. Here A is guilty of murder, although he may not have intended to cause Z's death.

(d.) A, without any excuse, fires a loaded cannon into a crowd of persons, and kills one of them. A is guilty of murder, although he may not have had a premeditated design to kill any particular individual.

When culpable homicide is not murder.

Exception 1.—Culpable homicide is not murder if the offender, whilst deprived of the power of self-control by grave and sudden provocation, causes the death of the person who gave the provocation, or causes the death of any other person by mistake or accident.

The above exception is subject to the following provisos:*—

Firstly.—That the provocation is not sought or voluntarily provoked by the offender as an excuse for killing or doing harm to any person.

Secondly.—That the provocation is not given by anything done in obedience to the law, or by a public servant in the lawful exercise of the powers of such public servant.

Thirdly.—That the provocation is not given by anything done in the lawful exercise of the right of private defence.

Explanation.—Whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder is a question of fact.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, under the influence of passion excited by a provocation given by Z, intentionally kills Y, Z's child. This is murder, inasmuch as the provocation was not given by the child, and the death of the child was not caused by accident or misfortune in doing an act caused by the provocation.

(b.) Y gives grave and sudden provocation to A. A, on this provocation, fires a pistol at Y, neither intending nor knowing himself to be likely to kill Z, who is near him, but out of sight. A kills Z. Here A has not committed murder, but merely culpable homicide.

* As to the application of these provisos in the case of causing hurt on provocation, see s. 335, explanation, infra.

(c.) A is lawfully arrested by Z, a bailiff. A is excited to sudden and violent passion by the arrest, and kills Z. This is murder, inasmuch as the provocation was given by a thing done by a public servant in the exercise of his powers.

(d.) A appears as a witness before Z, a Magistrate. Z says that he does not believe a word of A's deposition, and that A has perjured himself. A is moved to sudden passion by these words, and kills Z. This is murder.

(e.) A attempts to pull Z's nose. Z, in the exercise of the right of private defence, lays hold of A to prevent him from doing so. A is moved to sudden and violent passion in consequence, and kills Z. This is murder, inasmuch as the provocation was given by a thing done in the exercise of the right of private defence.

(f.) Z strikes B. B is by this provocation excited to violent rage. A, a bystander, intending to take advantage of B's rage, and to cause him to kill Z, puts a knife into B's hand for that purpose. B kills Z with the knife. Here B may have committed only culpable homicide, but A is guilty of murder.

Exception 2.—Culpable homicide is not murder if the offender, in the exercise, in good faith, of the right of private defence of person or property, exceeds the power given to him by law, and causes the death of the person against whom he is exercising such right of defence, without premeditation, and without any intention of doing more harm than is necessary for the purpose of such defence.

Illustration.

Z attempts to horsewhip A, not in such a manner as to cause grievous hurt to A. A draws out a pistol. Z persists in the assault. A, believing in good faith that he can by no other means prevent himself from being horsewhipped, shoots Z dead. A has not committed murder, but only culpable homicide.

Exception 3.—Culpable homicide is not murder if the offender, being a public servant, or aiding a public servant, acting for the advancement of public justice, exceeds the powers given to him by law, and causes death by doing an act which he, in good faith, believes to be lawful and necessary for the due discharge of his duty as such public servant, and without ill-will towards the person whose death is caused.

Exception 4.—Culpable homicide is not murder if it is committed without premeditation in a sudden fight in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel, and without the offender's having taken undue advantage, or acted in a cruel or unusual manner.

Explanation.—It is immaterial in such cases which party offers the provocation, or commits the first assault.

Exception 5.—Culpable homicide is not murder when the person whose death is caused, being above the age of eighteen years, suffers death, or takes the risk of death, with his own consent.

Illustration.

A, by instigation, voluntarily causes Z, a person under eighteen years of age, to commit suicide. Here, on account of Z's youth, he was incapable of giving consent to his own death. A has therefore abetted murder.

IN a case in which it was found that all the accused were guilty of rioting armed with deadly weapons, that the fight was premeditated and pre-arranged, a regular pitched battle or trial of strength between the two parties concerned in the riot, and that one of the accused, in the course of the riot and in prosecution of the common object of the assembly, killed, or attempted to kill, a man under such circumstances that his act amounted to an attempt to murder, the question arose whether that act could be said to bear a less grave character by reason of excep. 5 to s. 300 of the Penal Code. Per Curiam.—Held that upon such finding the case did not fall within the exception. Per Pigot, J.

(Petheram, C.J., and Macpherson, J., concurring).—The 5th exception to s. 300 should receive a strict and not a liberal construction; and in applying the exception, it should be considered with reference to the act consented to or authorized, and next with reference to the person or persons authorized, and as to each of those some degree of particularity at least should appear upon the facts proved before the exception can be said to apply. Shamshere Khan v. Empress (I. L. R., 6 Cal 154) and Queen v. Kukier Mather (unreported) dissented from, so far as they decide that from such a finding as the above consent to take the risk of death is inferred Per O'Kinealy, J.—Before excep. 5 can be applied, it must be found that the person killed, with a full knowledge of the facts determined to suffer death, or take the risk of death, and that this determination continued up to, and existed at, the moment of his death. Queen v. Kukier Mather (unreported) observed on Per Ghose, J.—No general rule of law can be laid down in determining in cases of this description whether the person killed or wounded suffered death, or took the risk of death, with his own consent, it being a question of fact, and not of law, to be decided upon the circumstances of each case as it arises. Shamshere Khan v. Empress (I. L. R. 6 Cal 154) and Queen v. Kukier Mather (unreported) observed on, and the propositions of law laid down therein concurred with.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NAYAMUDDIN, I. L. R. 18 Cal. 484. (Petheram, C.J., and Pigot, O'Kinealy, Macpherson, and Ghose, JJ. May 10 1891.

THE accused was tried for murder. The first verdict of the jury was "Guilty of murder under grave and sudden provocation." The Sessions Judge told the jury that it was their duty, after considering the question of provocation, to return a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. The jury, therefore, brought in a second verdict of "not guilty." The Judge, considering this verdict to be perverse, referred the case to the High Court under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). Held that the discretion given to the jury after the first verdict was wrong as the case fell under s. 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882). Although the charge was only one of murder, the jury had a right to bring in a verdict of culpable homicide if there was grave and sudden provocation so as to deprive the prisoner of the power of self-control. Held, also, that the jury were not bound to find a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty. They might have found a special verdict, or findings on matters of fact to which the Judge applies the law. Held, also, that the first verdict was a verdict of murder, as the jury did not find that the provocation had destroyed the power of self-control. It is not a necessary consequence of anger or other emotion, that the power of self-control should be lost. Except where unsoundness of mind or real fear of instant death is proved, the pressure of temptation is no excuse for breaking the law. Held, lastly, that the High Court will not interfere with the verdict of a jury unless it is shown to be clearly and manifestly wrong. A verdict ought to be considered a proper and not a perverse verdict if it is one which reasonable men might find on the facts in evidence. Queen-Empress v. Dada Anna (I. L. R., 15 Bom. 452) and Queen-Empress v. Maganlal (I. L. R., 14 Bom. 115) followed.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DEVJI GOVINDJI, I. L. R., 20 Bom. 215. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. July 29, 1895.]

THE deceased H lived in the house of the accused A. H contracted an intimacy with L, the wife of A in consequence of which he was turned out of the house. Subsequently on a certain night H, at the invitation of L, went to the house of A and was taken inside by her. Thereupon A and the other accused relatives of his seized H, carried him off to some distance, beat him, broke his arms and a leg and left him. Three days later H died in consequence of the injuries. All the accused were convicted under s. 302 of the Penal Code, and sentenced to transportation for life. Held that the circumstances under which H was found in the house of A on the night of the crime were sufficient to cause grave and sudden provocation to A and his relatives, within the meaning of s. 300, excep. (1) of the Penal Code, and that the provocation was of a nature that would continue to influence the feelings of the accused for a considerable period after H was caught in the house in the company of L. Conviction altered to one under s. 304 of the Penal Code and sentence reduced.—ABAI U' DAS v. KING-EMPEROR, I. L. R., 28 Cal. 571. Rampini and Gupta, JJ. April 16, 1901.

Culpable homicide by causing death of person other than person whose death was intended.

301. If a person, by doing anything which he intends or knows to be likely to cause death, commits culpable homicide by causing the death of any person whose death he neither intends nor knows himself to be likely to cause, the culpable homicide committed by the offender is of the description of which it would have been if he had caused the death of the person whose death he intended or knew himself to be likely to cause.

Punishment for murder.

302. Whoever commits murder shall be punished with death or transportation for life, and shall also be liable to fine.

CHARGE.—That you, on or about the day of , at , committed murder by causing the death of , and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session [or High Court.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), Sch. V., Form XXVIII. (II).

EVERY person, whether within or without the Presidency-towns, aware of the commission of, or the intention of any other person to commit, any offence punishable under s. 302 of the Penal Code, shall forthwith give information to the nearest Magistrate or police-officer of such commission or intention.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), s 44.

IF the act by which death is caused does not in itself constitute the crime of murder, it does not constitute murder, because it is coupled with dacoity.—QUEEN v. RAMCHUNDER CHUNG, 1 Ind. Jur. O. S. 108 [Steer, Seton-Karr, and Jackson, JJ. Nov. 17, 1862.]

WHERE the intention of causing death was not sufficiently established, a sentence of death was commuted to transportation for life.—QUEEN v. SHOBHA SHEIKH GORMAN, W. R., Gap. 1864, 2. [Loch and Steer, JJ. Jan. 27, 1864.]

THERE can be no conviction for abetment of murder without proof of murder.—QUEEN v. ASKUR, W. R., Gap. 1864, 12. [Steer and Seton-Karr, JJ. Feb. 27, 1864.]

IN a case of murder committed in a drunken squabble, it was held that voluntary drunkenness, though it did not palliate any offence, may be taken into account as throwing light upon the question of intention.—QUEEN v. RAM SAHOY BHUR, W. R., Gap. 1864, 24. [Steer and Glover, JJ. April 29, 1864.]

S. 380 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), does not authorize a Sessions Judge to sentence a prisoner convicted of murder to anything less than transportation for life, but only requires the Judge, if he sentence such prisoner to transportation for life instead of capitally, to assign his reasons for so doing. If there are circumstances which render expedient or advisable a mitigation of the sentence required by the law to be passed in such cases, the Judge may record those circumstances and submit them for the consideration of the Government, and the Government may, under s. 54 of Act XXV. of 1861, act as to it seems proper.—QUEEN v. DABEE, W. R., Gap. 1864, 27. [Loch and Glover, JJ. May 2, 1864.]

IF a person concerned in a dacoity unintentionally commits murder, he is liable to punishment under s. 396 of the Penal Code, but he cannot be separately convicted of murder under s. 302, and of committing dacoity under s. 395. Where the law gives the alternative punishment of death, transportation for life, and rigorous imprisonment extending to ten years, a sentence of fourteen years' transportation is illegal. If the Judge thinks it proper to pass a sentence of transportation short of life, he should pass a sentence of imprisonment for the term fixed by law, and then, under s. 59, change it to transportation for that period.—QUEEN v. RUGHOO, W. R., Gap. 1864, 30. [Loch and Jackson, JJ. May 3, 1864.]

IN order to convict a person of murder arising out of grievous hurt, it is indispensable that the death should be clearly and directly connected with the act of violence.—QUEEN v. MAHOMED HOSSEIN, W. R., Gap. 1864, 31. [Seton-Karr and Glover, JJ. May 12, 1864.]

A CONVICTION for murder was held to be wrong in a case where a prisoner, taking advantage of an incident which occurred in what till then had been a fair fight, struck his opponent, and knocked him over.—QUEEN v. KEWUT DOSAD, W. R., Gap. 1864, 36. [Seton-Karr and Campbell, JJ. June 19, 1864.]

COURSE to be pursued by Sessions Judges in the case of apparently insane persons charged with murder. [See the procedure prescribed in s. 465, et seq., of Act V. of 1898.—Ed.]—QUEEN v. SHEIKH MUSTAFA, 1 W. R. 1. [Loch and Seton-Karr, JJ. Aug. 1, 1864.]

A MAN and a dog died a few hours after eating the same food, but no traces of poison were found in their bodies or in the possession of the accused. The mode of investigation by the police and by the Magistrates in such cases fully laid down.—IN THE MATTER OF CHUTTOO CHAMAR, 1 W. R. 3. [Campbell and Glover, JJ. Aug. 9, 1864.]

THE prisoner was convicted of murder by the Sessions Judge, and sentenced to death, subject to confirmation by the High Court. The High Court directed the Sessions Judge to take any evidence that might be forthcoming to prove the alleged confession before the Magistrate, which, as recorded, was inadmissible, not being taken as prescribed in s. 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861), and to certify the result of such inquiry and evidence to the Court. Evidence of the confession having been taken by the Sessions Judge, and certified as directed, the High Court confirmed the conviction and the sentence of death.—REG. v. GANU BAPU, 2 Bom. H. C. R. 398. [Arnould, Acting C J., and Newton and Janardan, JJ. Aug. 18, 1864.]

THE two prisoners having confessed that, having caught the deceased in the act of having sexual intercourse with the wife of one of them, they then and there killed him Held that the very grave provocation given to them was such as to reduce their crime from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. GOUR CHUNDER POLIE, 1 W. R. 17. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Sep 26, 1864.]

AN unpremeditated assault (ending in an affray in which death is caused) committed in the heat of passion, upon a sudden quarrel, it being immaterial which party offered the provocation or committed the first assault, was held to come within excep 4 of s 300 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. ZALIM RAI 1 W. R. 33. [Kemp and Glover, JJ Nov. 25 1864.]

A JUDGE can alter or amend a charge at any stage of the trial. The subject of an Independent State, though not amenable to the British Courts on a charge of culpable homicide committed out of British territories, may be so amenable on a charge of kidnapping from those territories.—QUEEN v. DHURMONARAIN MOITRO, 1 W. R. 39 Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 9, 1864 ]

IN a case of murder, after the finding and discharge of the assessors, the Judge altered the charge to culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and convicted the accused on that charge. Held that the conviction was illegal.—QUEEN v. DYEE BHOLA, 1 W. R. 40. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 9. 1864 ]

A CAPITAL sentence mitigated in the case of murder committed while under the influence of provocation caused by an intrigue with the wife of the prisoner.—QUEEN v. BHEKYE alias SHEIK ANSER, 1 W. R. 40. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 19, 1864 ]

THOUGH the evidence was held to be sufficient to convict the accused of murder, yet, as the evidence gave rise to doubts as to the precise part taken by the prisoner, it was thought safer to remit the capital sentence, and pass one of transportation for life.—QUEEN v. BABOO LALL JHAH, 1 W. R. 48. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 26, 1864.]

WHEN two persons take an active part in a murder, they become principals in the first degree, though one of them only may have been the actual killer If one stood by whilst the crime was being committed, he would be an abettor.—QUEEN v. JAN MAHOMED, 1 W. R. 49. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 26, 1864 ]

THE conviction of a police-inspector for having abetted the bringing of a false charge of murder was quashed, because it was not distinctly shown that he preferred the charge malâ fide.—QUEEN v. MUTHOORAPERSHAD PANDAY, 2 W. R. 10 [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 18, 1865 ]

THE prisoner was convicted of murder, and sentenced to death. But, before confirming the sentence, as doubts were entertained of her sanity, the case was referred to the Sessions Judge with instructions for further inquiry.—QUEEN v. ARZAO BEBEE, 2 W. R. 33. [Kemp and Glover, JJ Feb. 4, 1865 ]

WHEN murder is committed in the commission of a dacoity, every one of the persons concerned in the dacoity is liable to be punished with death.—QUEEN v. RUCHEE AHEN, 2 W R 39. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 9, 1865

THE case of a prisoner who, after having committed dacoity attended with murder, absconded to Bhootan. On the annexation of the Bhootan Dooars by the British Government, he was arrested, and after conviction, was sentenced to transportation for life.—QUEEN v. ROOPA, 2 W. R. 49. [Glover, J. DISCUSSION as to the sufficiency of the evidence in a case of murder, and the necessity of applying to Government for a pardon on behalf of the prisoner.—QUEEN v. GOVIND BAGDEE, 3 W. R 1. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. April 24, 1865.]

CASE of conviction of murder, on the confession of the accused, together with evidence as to his conduct both before and after the murder.—QUEEN v. PETER RAM THAPPA, 3 W. R. 11. Jackson and Glover, JJ. May 11, 1865.]

WHAT is necessary to bring a case of murder under the 4th exception to s. 300 of the Penal Code, so as to change the offence into culpable homicide not amounting to murder. —QUEEN v. AKAL MAHOMED, 3 W. R. 18. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. May 23, 1865.]

A is guilty of murder if he several times kicks B, who, after having been severely beaten, has fallen down senseless; as A must have known that such kicks were likely to cause death in B's state at that time.—QUEEN v. NILMADHUB SIRCAR, 3 W. R. 22. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. June 2, 1865.]

PRISONER acquitted of attempt to murder, but directed to be proceeded with by the Magistrate under s. 297 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), with a view to security being taken for his peaceable future behaviour.—QUEEN v. BEHARFE alias KURREEM BUX, 3 W. R. 23. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. June 3, 1865.]

SENTENCE of transportation for life in a case of murder instead of capital punishment, there being some reason to suppose that, at the time of the murder, both the deceased and the prisoner were drunk, and that the murdered man excited the prisoner's passion by calling him a thief.—QUEEN v. RAM NATH GWALA, 3 W. R. 27. [Campbell, Jackson and Glover, JJ. June 11, 1865.]

THE Sessions Judge having found the prisoners guilty of striking the deceased with the knowledge that the act was likely to cause death—in other words, guilty of murder—convicted and punished them for culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Case remanded for a new trial (Jackson, J., dissenting).—QUEEN v. BERIA BANIKYE, 3 W. R. 38. [Kemp, Jackson, and Glover, JJ. July 6, 1865.]

THE absence of premeditation will not reduce the crime from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. MAHOMED ELIM, 3 W. R. 40. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 7, 1865.]

WHEN prisoners confess in the most circumstantial manner to having committed a murder, the finding of the body is not absolutely essential to a conviction.—QUEEN v. PETTA GAZI, 4 W. R. 19. [Glover, J. Oct. 26, 1865.]

THE offences of murder and of culpable homicide not amounting to murder suppose either an intention to cause death, or a knowledge of likelihood of the causing of death. In the absence of such intention or knowledge, the offence committed may be the offence of causing grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. BHADOO PORAMANICK, 4 W. R. 23. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov. 10, 1865.]

HELD by the majority that, where two members of an unlawful assembly use spears, and deliberately pierce another man through the chest and abdomen, with the knowledge that death is likely to ensue, although without proof of any intention to cause death, all the members of the unlawful assembly are jointly guilty of murder.—QUEEN v. NAZOO FAKIR, 4 W. R. 26. [Kemp, Seton-Karr, and Campbell, JJ. Nov. 27, 1865.]

WHEN the corpus delicti is not established, there can be no conviction for culpable homicide not amounting to murder, nor for intentional omission to give notice of an offence which has not been proved to have been committed.—QUEEN v. RAM RUCHEA SINGH, 4 W. R. 29. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Nov. 28, 1865.]

INTRIGUING with a sister is sufficient grave provocation to justify a conviction of culpable homicide not amounting to murder as against the brothers who, finding the deceased lying with their sister in the same bed ill-treated him, from the effects of which ill-treatment he died.—QUEEN v. KASSEEMUDDEEN, 4 W. R. 38. [Kemp, J. Dec. 2, 1865.]

THE Judge having convicted the prisoners of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, after having found that the act by which death was caused was undoubtedly done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, the conviction was quashed as illegal, because inconsistent with the finding, and a new trial ordered.—QUEEN v. SOOMBER GWALA, 4 W. R. 32. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Dec. 5, 1865.]

HELD by the majority that, when four men beat another at intervals, and so severely that death ensues from the injury received, they must be presumed to have known that by such acts they were likely to cause death; that, moreover, when these acts were done when there was no grave or sudden provocation, or no sudden fight or quarrel, the offence which they have committed, is murder; and that the offence of murder is not reduced to culpable homicide not amounting to murder by the absence of intention to cause death.—QUEEN v. POOSHOO, 4 W. R. 33. [Kemp, Seton-Karr, and Jackson, JJ. Dec. 14, 1865.]

HELD by the majority (Campbell, J., dissenting) that, if a man strikes another on the head with a stick when he is asleep, and fractures his skull, knowledge of likelihood of causing death must be presumed; and that, if none of the exceptions under s. 300 of the Penal Code are pleaded or probable, the offence committed is murder.—QUEEN v. SHEIKH CHOLLYE, 4 W. R. 35. [Kemp, Jackson, and Campbell, JJ. Dec. 16, 1865.]

A JUDGE should clearly acquit a prisoner of murder when so charged instead of merely finding him guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. When a Judge acquits a prisoner of murder, the High Court cannot, either as a Court of Appeal, or as a Court of Revision, find that, according to the evidence, the prisoner caused death with the knowledge mentioned in cl. 4, s. 300, of the Penal Code; nor can the High Court, however wrong it may think the Judge to have been in acquitting of murder, or however inadequate it may think the sentence to be, correct the error or enhance the sentence.—QUEEN v. TOYAB SHEIKH, 5 W. R. 2; 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 58, 87. [Peacock, C.J., and Kemp and Seton-Karr JJ. Jan 12, 1866.]

WHERE a man of full age (i.e., above 18 years) submits himself to emasculation, performed neither by a skilful hand, nor in the least dangerous way, and dies from the injury, the persons concerned in the act are guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. BABOOLUN HIJRAH, 5 W. R. 7. [Norman and Campbell, JJ. Jan. 15, 1866.]

THE punishment of death should not be inflicted in a case where there was no intention to cause death, but merely a reckless assault with a deadly weapon, which inflicted a bodily injury likely in the ordinary course of nature to cause death.—QUEEN v. KHOZA SHEIK, 5 W. R. 20. [Campbell and Macpherson, JJ. Jan 27, 1866.]

IT is not murder, if a person kills another without intending to take his life, and if the acts done are not such as conclusively indicate an intention to cause such injury as was likely to cause death. In a referred case, and not an appeal, if the High Court deems a conviction wrong the only course open to it is to annul the conviction, and order a new trial for the proper offence.—QUEEN v. SHEIKH SOLIM, 5 W. R. 41. [Seton-Karr and Macpherson, JJ. Feb 8, 1866.]

UNDER the Penal Code no constructive, but an actual, intention to cause death is required to constitute murder. Thus, where a lad of 15 years, in the heat of discovery of the deceased in the act of adultery with a near relative's wife, and without the use of any lethal or other weapon, joined the relative in committing an assault on the deceased, who died from the effects thereof, held that the offence committed was culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. GUREEBOOLLAH, 5 W. R. 42. [Norman and Campbell, JJ. Feb. 12, 1866.]

WHERE a Judge acquits a prisoner of intention to kill, but admits that the prisoner struck the deceased with a highly lethal weapon with the knowledge that the act was such as was likely to cause death, the conviction should be for murder, and not culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The failure of the Judge to convict the prisoner on the graver charge is not an error of law with which the High Court can interfere under its revising power.—QUEEN v. SOBEEL MAHEE, 5 W. R. 32. [Glover, J. Feb. 22, 1866.]

HELD by the majority of the Court that the offence committed was murder where the death of a weak half-starved old woman, who was detected stealing, was caused in the exercise of the right of private defence, by the doing of more harm than was necessary for the purpose of such defence; Campbell, J., contra, being of opinion that a man who detects a thief stealing his property, and who, acting on the sudden impulse of the moment, inflicts on the thief blows so severe as to be likely to cause death, but which he did not at the time know or feel to be likely to cause death, and which would not necessarily have caused death to a person in ordinary health, but which, owing to abnormal weakness in the deceased not known to him, did cause death is not guilty of murder but of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. GOKOOL BOWREE, 5 W. R. 33. [Norman, Campbell, and Phear, JJ. Feb. 26, 1866.]

UNDER s. 404 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861), the High Court may set aside a judgment of acquittal for error in law. The High Court, as a Court of Revision, has power to enhance a punishment. The High Court may send the case back to the Court of Session with an order to pass the proper sentence. The High Court may act as a Court of Revision after it has acted as a Court of Appeal, in order to correct an error which cannot be set right by appeal. Culpable homicide and murder distinguished.—QUEEN v. GORACHAND GOPE, B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 443; 5 W. R. 45; 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 177. [Peacock, C.J., and Trevor, Norman, Campbell, Jackson, and Glover, JJ. Mar. 3, 1866.]

INTOXICATION is no excuse for a man throttling to death another and a weaker man, who was intoxicated also. The assessors having brought the case within excep. 4 of s. 300 of the Penal Code without any good evidence or substantial grounds, the Sessions Judge was held to have correctly overruled their verdict, and found the prisoner guilty of murder.—QUEEN v. AKULPUTTEE GOSSAIN, 5 W. R. 58. [Seton-Karr, J. Mar. 26, 1866.]

PRISONER found deceased in the act of house-breaking by night in his house, and killed him with a kodali, which he had called for, as he admitted, for that purpose. He was convicted of murder, and sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge. The sentence being referred to the High Court for confirmation, it was held that the prisoner had been legally convicted of murder, that he had intentionally done to the deceased more harm than was necessary for any purpose of defence, and that not whilst deprived of the power of self-control. But the sentence was mitigated to transportation for life, than which, it was held, no less sentence could be legally passed. The Judge, however, in a letter to Government, suggested the mitigation of the punishment which was accordingly reduced to imprisonment for six months.—QUEEN v DURWAN GEER, 5 W. R. 73 : 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 253. [Jackson, Campbell, and Macpherson, JJ. April 7, 1866.]

THE prisoners having abetted an assault, and murder having been committed, held, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, that they were guilty of abetment of grievous hurt, and not abetment of murder.—QUEEN v. GOLUCK CHUNG, 5 W. R. 75 [Campbell and Macpherson, JJ. April 28 1866.]

A PERSON who beats another brutally and continuously, so that the back of the victim is reduced to a state of pulp, and yet studiously avoids breaking a bone (the very fact of his taking such a precaution evincing deliberation), is guilty of murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder, according as there may or may not have been grave provocation.—QUEEN v. TEPRAH FUKEER, 5 W. R. 78. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. May 9, 1866.]

HELD in a case of murder that the Judge had not given a proper direction to the jury in telling them that it was for them to consider whether the evidence of the accomplice was strictly corroborated as to the prisoners; that it was not enough that the evidence should disclose a state of facts consistent with the possibility of the truth of the accomplice's story; and that the Judge ought to have gone through the history of the crime as detailed by the accomplice to point out any independent evidence proving facts showing that the prisoners were, or must have been, present at, or cognizant of, the murder. —QUEEN v. KANOO, 6 W. R. 44. [Norman and Campbell, JJ. July 24, 1866.]

THE sentence of death reduced to transportation for life in a case of murder committed rather by way of retaliation for injury than under the influence of any worse passion.—QUEEN v TONOO, 6 W. R. 46. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. July 26, 1866.]

IN a case of murder by consent, held that evidence of consent, which would be sufficient in a civil transaction must be equally sufficient in exculpation of a prisoner's guilt.—QUEEN v. ANUNTO RUNNAGAL, 6 W. R. 57. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Aug 25, 1866.]

A PERSON may be convicted of murder on his own confession. Where a master accompanies a servant knowing the latter's intention to commit murder, and is present at the commission of the murder, although he struck no blow, still he is guilty as a principal, the only reasonable presumption being that both were acting with a common intent.—QUEEN v. HYDER JOLAHA, 6 W. R. 83. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Sep 21, 1866.]

A SENTENCE of death was commuted into one of transportation for life in case of a prisoner who committed murder in the belief that the deceased was a wizard and the cause of his child's illness, and that, by killing the deceased, the child's life might be saved.—QUEEN v OORAM SUNGRA, 6 W. R. 82. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Oct. 5, 1866.]

A SENTENCE of transportation, other than for life, is illegal in the case of a prisoner convicted of murder.—QUEEN v. BHOOTOO MULLICK, 6 W. R 85. [Loch and Macpherson, JJ. Nov. 27, 1866.]

HEAVY sentences reduced by the Chief Court to terms of imprisonment for two and three years, where death was caused on provocation in a sudden fight, no unfair advantage being taken on the deceased.—CROWN v. AMEERA, Panj Rec., No. 12 of 1866; and KESUR SINGH v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 13 of 1866.

ATTEMPT at murder must not be confounded with causing grievous hurt with dangerous weapons — GHOLAM RUSSOOL v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No 32 of 1866.

SENTENCE of confiscation of property in a case of murder annulled, as the accused had a mother and young children.—CROWN v. SUNT SINGH, Panj. Rec., No. 35 of 1866.

THOUGH voluntary drunkenness cannot excuse the commission of an offence, yet, where as upon a charge of murder, the question is whether the act was premeditated or done only from sudden heat or impulse, the fact of the party being intoxicated was held to be a circumstance proper to be taken into consideration —CROWN v. BOODH DASS, Panj. Rec. No 41 of 1866

ACCUSED, a police-constable, in the course of an inquiry into a theft-case, violently beat deceased, who died about nine days afterwards from the effects of the beating. Held that a conviction for culpable homicide could not be sustained, as there was nothing to show that the beating was likely, to the knowledge of the prisoner, to cause death. Conviction altered to one under s. 330, Penal Code. Sentence — seven years' imprisonment and Rs. 200 fine.—MEEAH MAHOMED v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 86 of 1866.

PRISONER was charged with murdering his wife. She had eloped from her husband, and, on his bringing her back, she was sulky and obstinate, refused to cook his food, or to eat and cohabit with him. Provoked by this, he struck her a violent blow with an axe, which killed her. Held that the offence was culpable homicide. Fourteen years' transportation. —FUZL SHAH v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 87 of 1866.

BY his own confession and the other evidence prisoner killed with a hatchet Mussammat Almo, his sister, and Choohur, having found them sleeping together at Choohur's cattle-enclosure. The accused, on information received, had gone in search of her and Choohur, expecting to find them together. He had gone armed with a hatchet, but he stated in his defence that he lost control over himself on finding them together, and so killed them both. Held, with regard to the punishment, that the injury to the feelings of the accused, though hardly to be deemed sudden or unexpected, considering that he had himself gone to the spot expecting to find Almo, as, in fact, he found her, was great. Nor was the absence of sufficient sudden provocation inconsistent with the absence of premeditation, for murder may result from the reckless anger of the moment. Moreover, in this case, the existence of premeditation was not necessarily to be inferred from the prisoner's conduct. Once before there had been violence on such an occasion, and the prisoner's taking the hatchet was open to the doubt that he might have thought proper to do so without designing murder at the time of setting out. Sentence of death commuted. —CROWN v. MAHOMED, Panj. Rec., No. 107 of 1866.

IN a case of murder, where a man was struck on the head in a boat with a heavy paddle, and knocked overboard in a large river in the height of the rains, and never been heard of since, it was held impossible to suppose that the man was still alive.—QUEEN v. POORUSOOLLAH SIKHDAR, 7 W. R. 14. [Norman, J. Jan. 21, 1867.

WHERE a man suddenly cut his wife's throat, it was held that, in order to establish that the act was not done under grave provocation so as to bring the case under excep. 1 of s. 300 of the Penal Code, it is not sufficient to state that the deceased ceased abusing the prisoner then, but it is necessary to show what interval elapsed between the time when the deceased ceased to speak and the instant when the prisoner attacked her.—QUEEN v. NOKUL NUSHYE, 7 W. R. 27. Norman and Seton-Karr, JJ. Feb. 4, 1867.

JUDGES must not shrink from doing their duty, and they are bound to pass a capital sentence in a case of murder when they believe the evidence.—QUEEN v. SIBNARAIN PALODHEE, 7 W. R. 33. [Seton-Karr, J. Feb. 18, 1867.]

WHERE a prisoner, convicted of murder against the opinion of assessors, was sentenced to transportation for life, the High Court reduced the sentence to ten years' rigorous imprisonment, remarking on the severity of the Penal Code, and on the necessity of administering it, so as to make it apply to the various gradations and degrees of crime in this country.—QUEEN v. HOSSEIN ALLY, 7 W. R. 47. [Seton-Karr and Shumbhoonath Pundit, JJ. Mar. 19, 1867.]

PROOF of motive or previous ill-will is not necessary to sustain a conviction for murder in a case where a person is coolly and barbarously put to death.—QUEEN v. JAICHAND MUNDLE, 7 W. R. 60. [Seton-Karr, J. April 29, 1867.

CURIOUS case of murder, where a father sacrificed his son, because wealth had not accompanied its birth, and afterwards cut his own throat as a protest against his deity's injustice.—QUEEN v. BISHENDHAREE KHARA, 7 W. R. 64. [Glover and Hobhouse, JJ. May 7, 1867.]

WHERE a quiet peaceful man suddenly, and without the least motive or provocation, runs amuck against all round him, his case is different from an ordinary case of deliberate murder deserving of the extreme penalty.—QUEEN v. BISHONATH BUNNERA, 8 W. R. 53. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 29, 1867.]

TWO parties met each other in a drunken state, and commenced a quarrel, during which they became grossly abusive to each other. This lasted for about half an hour, when one of them ran to his own house, distant 30 yards from the spot, and came back with a heavy pestle, with which he struck the other a violent blow on the left temple as the latter was rising, or had just risen, from the ground, causing instant death. Held that the act was done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, and also with the knowledge that such act was likely to cause death, and that the offence committed was murder within the provisions of cls. 2 and 3, s. 300, Penal Code.—QUEEN v. DASSEE BHOOYAN, 8 W. R. 71 [Kemp, Seton-Karr and Mitter, JJ. Sep. 11, 1867.]

WHERE an accused killed A, whom he had no intention of killing, by a blow with a highly lethal weapon, like a sharp dao, intended to kill B, he was held guilty of the murder of A.—QUEEN v. PHOMONEE AHUM, 8 W. R. 78. [Glover, J. Oct. 29, 1867.]

IN order to constitute the offence of attempt to murder under s. 307 of the Penal Code, the act committed by the prisoner must be an act capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of events. Aliter under s. 511 taken in connection with ss. 299 and 300. Therefore, where the prisoner presented an uncapped gun at F G (believing the gun to be capped) with the intention of murdering him, but was prevented from pulling the trigger, held that he could not be convicted of an attempt to murder upon a charge framed under s. 307 of the Penal Code, but that, under the same circumstances, he might be convicted upon a charge of simple attempt to murder framed under s. 511 in connection with ss. 299 and 300. Unnecessary allegations in a charge may be rejected as surplusage. Apparent inconsistency between the English law, with reference to attempt as laid down in Reg. v. Collins (33 Law. J., M. C., 177) and the provisions of the Penal Code explained.—REG. v. FRANCIS CASSIDY, 4 Bom. H. C. R. 17. [Couch, C.J., and Westropp, J. Dec. 23, 1867.]

THE three accused were convicted of murdering their cousin, who had supplanted one of the accused in an intrigue with Mussammat F. The accused caught the deceased and Mussammat F together. Held that, with due advertence to the state of society in the Rawalpindi district (where the case occurred), the sentences of death should be commuted.—CROWN v. FUZL, Panj. Rec. No. 2 of 1867.

ACCUSED confessed to a charge of murder. His confession, made before the Magistrate and Sessions Court, was, in fact, corroborated by other evidence, but conflicted with the medical evidence, and the Sessions Judge considered it not improbable that accused had been influenced by the police to confess. Held by the Chief Court that it would be safer not to confirm the sentence.—CROWN v. MEER KHAN, Panj. Rec., No. 3 of 1867.

WHEN a prisoner is on his trial by a jury upon a charge of murder, it is the duty of the Judge to point out to the jury accurately the difference between murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and to direct the attention of the jury to the evidence, and to leave them to find the facts, and say (under the direction of the Judge as regards the law) of what offence the prisoner is guilty. Where the provision of s. 379 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861) was neglected, and the Judge did not sum up the evidence at all, a new trial was ordered. Elahee Baksh's Case (5 W. R. 80) considered.—QUEEN v. SHUMSHERE BEG, 9 W. R. 5. [Macpherson and Glover, JJ. Mar. 28, 1868.]

To bring a case under cl. 4, s. 300, it must be proved that the accused, in committing the act charged knew that it must, in all probability, be likely to cause death, or that it would bring about such bodily injury as would be likely to cause death. Held that a case in which the accused person pursued a thief, and killed him after house-trespass had ceased, did not fall within the 2nd exception to s. 300 the right of private defence of property continuing under cl. 5, s. 105, only so long as the house trespass continues.—QUEEN v. BALAKEE JOLAHEE, 10 W. R. 9; 1 B. L. R., S. N., 8. [Glover, J. July 3, 1868.]

IN determining whether a declaration alleged to have been made by a deceased person is admissible as a dying declaration under s. 371, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), corresponding with s. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act (I. of 1872), a Sessions Judge ought to direct his attention to the point whether the declarant believed himself to be in danger of approaching death. The evidence of persons who cannot speak of their personal knowledge to such declaration should not be admitted; and, in deciding whether the accused is guilty of the charge of murdering the deceased declarant, the Court should confine itself to inquiring into the facts which occurred on the day of the murder. The evidence as to the motives with which a prisoner commits an offence should be of the strictest kind.—QUEEN v. ZUHIR, 10 W. R. 11. [Phear and Hobhouse, JJ. July 8, 1868.]

To give an accused the benefit of excep. 1, s. 300 of the Penal Code, it ought to be shown distinctly, not only that the act was done under the influence of some feeling which took away from the person doing it all control over his action, but that that feeling had an adequate cause.—QUEEN v. HURI GIREE, 10 W. R. 26; 1 B. L. R. A. Cr. 11. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Aug. 7, 1868.]

HELD that, where, from the circumstances, it appeared that a child who had been exposed by the prisoner did not die in consequence of the exposure, except in a remote degree, the prisoner, though guilty under s. 317 of the Penal Code, could not be convicted of murder. That section contemplates cases in which death is caused from cold or some other result of exposure.—QUEEN v. KHODABUX FAKEER alias KHUDIRAM FAKEER, 10 W. R. 52. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov. 19, 1868.]

To bring a case under cl. 4, s. 300, of the Penal Code, it must be proved that the accused, in committing the act charged, knew that it must, in all probability, be likely to cause death, or that it would bring about such bodily injury as would be likely to cause death. When a poisonous drug was administered to a woman to procure miscarriage, and death resulted, and it was not proved that the accused knew that the drug would be likely to cause death, &c, they were acquitted by the High Court of murder, and convicted of an offence under s. 314 of the Penal Code—QUEEN v. KALACHAND GOPE, 10 W. R. 59. [Phear and Hobhouse, JJ. Dec. 8, 1868.]

ACCUSED was out in the jungles with his gun. An altercation arose between him and deceased, the former interfering to prevent the latter from committing real or supposed cattle-trespass. Deceased, thereupon, with a large club, attacked accused, who fired without any particular aim, but lowering the muzzle of the gun, so as not to hit a vital part; and death ultimately resulted from the wound inflicted. Held that accused's act was not a legal exercise of the right of private defence, as it was not necessary for his defence that he should fire; he had only to stand back and let deceased alone, and he was safe. Held accordingly, that the accused was rightly convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—CROWN v. KURREEM BUKSH, Panj. Rec., No. 13 of 1868.

GUILTY intention or knowledge is a constituent part of the offence of culpable homicide, and although every unlawful act is presumed to be wrongly intended until the contrary is shown, yet it is for the Court to consider whether the whole case does not disclose circumstances (whether they come from the accused or the prosecutor) which negative the existence of such intention. It is only in the exceptional cases mentioned in s. 300—of which there should be evidence—that culpable homicide can be taken out of the category of murder, and reduced to an offence of lower degree.—JEHANGEER KHAN v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 22 of 1868.

A JUDGE was held to have exercised a proper discretion in not passing sentence of death in a case in which the dead body was not found.—QUEEN v. BUDDURUDDEEN, 11 W. R. 20. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. Mar. 9, 1869.]

A LARGE body of men belonging to one faction waylaid another body of men belonging to a second faction, and a fight ensued, in the course of which a member of the first-mentioned faction was wounded, and retired to the side of the road, taking no further active part in the affray. After his retirement a member of the second faction was killed. Held by Norman, J. (whose opinion prevailed), that the wounded man had ceased to be a member of the unlawful assembly when he retired wounded, and that he could not, under s. 149 of the Penal Code, be made liable for the subsequent murder. Held by E. Jackson, J., that he remained a member of the unlawful assembly.—QUEEN v. KABIL CAZEE, 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 1. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. April 8, 1869.]

THE legal right of private defence of the body and property is not exceeded by a person who is attacked by another with a spear, and who strikes a blow with a lathi which results in the death of the party attacking; and such right of private defence of the body extends, under s. 100 of the Penal Code, to the taking of life where grievous hurt is reasonably apprehended.—QUEEN v. MOIZUDIN, 11 W. R. 41. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. April 29, 1869.]

THE accused, who professed to be snake-charmers, persuaded the deceased to allow themselves to be bitten by a poisonous snake, inducing them to believe that they had power to protect them from harm. Held that the offence would have been murder under s. 300 of the Penal Code, if, under the circumstances of the case, it did not fall within the 5th exception to that section. Held that the consent given by the deceased allowing themselves to be bitten did not protect the accused, such consent having been founded on a misconception of facts, that is, in the belief that the accused had power by charms to cure snake-bites, and the accused knowing that the consent was given in consequence of such misconception (s. 90, Penal Code).—QUEEN v. POONAI FATTEMAH, 12 W. R. 7; 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 25. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. June 14, 1869.]

PRISONER caused to be given to deceased some substance which he alleged to have been given with intent to bring on madness. Held that the act of the prisoner was, known to him to be likely to cause death, and therefore he was properly convicted of murder; but as death was not the immediate object of his intention, the sentence of death was commuted.—CROWN v. KHEMA, Panj. Rec., No. 8 of 1869.

UPON an inoffensive remark made by deceased, Fazl Khan picked a quarrel with him, and, after some words had passed between the two, Fazl Khan held the deceased's arms down by his side, while Muhammad Khan inflicted a stab which caused death. Held that the prisoner was improperly convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and should have been convicted of murder. A Court should find clearly the exception under s. 300, which, in the Court's opinion, exists as a reason for reducing the offence to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—MAHOMED KHAN v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 12 of 1869.

WHERE there was no direct evidence of a murder having been committed, but the accused confessed that he had burnt the body of the deceased after death, though he denied that he had murdered her, or that she had been murdered, the Court presumed from all the acts and statements of the accused, and the presence of motive and other circumstances, that deceased was violently put to death, and by the hands of the accused, and confirmed the sentence of death accordingly.—CROWN v. BUNNA, Panj. Rec., No. 13 of 1869.

WHERE the accused were convicted of rioting and murdering a jamadar of chaukidars, who was assisting the police to apprehend a proclaimed offender, held that the fact of the murder being committed without preconcertion or personal enmity did not warrant the Sessions Judge in abstaining from passing sentence of death.—CROWN v. DITTA, Panj. Rec., No. 31 of 1869.

UNDER excep. 1, s. 300, the finding of a jury as to whether the offence of murder was committed under grave and sudden provocation sufficient to prevent the offence from amounting to murder is a question of fact with which the High Court cannot interfere —QUEEN v. SOHRAIE, 13 W. R. 33. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. Feb 19, 1870.]

WHERE the accused pleads guilty before a Sessions Judge to a charge of murder, the Sessions Judge might either convict him on that plea of that charge, or proceed to try him on the evidence; but he cannot, without trial, convict the accused of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, to which offence the accused did not plead guilty. Held with reference to the provisions of ss. 97, 99, and 102 of the Penal Code, that on the facts of this case the accused had no reasonable apprehension of danger to himself from the threats of the deceased whom he killed, and that, therefore, the right of private defence of the body did not arise, and the case was not taken out of the category of murder by reason of the 2nd exception to s. 300 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. GOBARDUR BHOOYN, 13 W. R. 55; 4 B. L. R. Ap 101 [Jackson and Glover, JJ. April 6 1870.]

ON a conviction for murder, the only punishments that can legally be awarded are death or transportation for life.—QUEEN v. BANI DOSS, 14 W. R. 2. [Bayley and Markby, JJ. June 4, 1870.]

A, OF Allyghur, obtained a decree against B and C of Kasheepoor for their share in certain property. A sent four men to take possession and plough the land, which was opposed by six men of Kasheepoor. A fight ensued, resulting in the death of one of the Kasheepoor men, caused by a blow inflicted by one of the Allyghur men. The Deputy Commissioner convicted the four Allyghur, and five surviving Kasheepoor, men of being members of an unlawful assembly, and of culpable homicide. Held, on appeal, that there was no common object on the part of the two factions, and therefore they did not jointly form an unlawful assembly under s. 141; that the Kaseepoor men merely exercised the right of private defence under s. 97; and that the Allyghur men, being less than five in number, did not compose an unlawful assembly, but that the Allyghur man who struck the fatal blow was guilty of culpable homicide, and the rest of his party of abetting that offence.—KULLEN v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 13 of 1870.

CONVICTION by a jury set aside in a case of murder in which there was a total absence of all evidence to show that the prisoner had committed the crime.—QUEEN v. BAHAR ALI KAHAR, 15 W. R. 46. [Jackson and Mookerjee, JJ. Mar 25, 1871.]

CAPITAL sentence should be pronounced on a conviction for murder, even if the accused be pregnant, although the execution of the sentence should be deferred till after delivery.—QUEEN v. PANHEE AURUT, 15 W. R. 66. [Bayley and Paul, JJ. May 3, 1871.]

PERSONS found guilty of rioting may, if the circumstances warrant it, be convicted of the several offences of rioting armed with deadly weapons, culpable homicide, and grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. HURGOBIND, 3 N.-W. P. 174 [Turner, J. July 7, 1871.]

IN a case in which the prisoner was charged with murder and he made a confession that he did strike the deceased with a stick, the Sessions Judge after considering the evidence discredited the confession and all the evidence except that of the medical officer, and discharged the prisoner, not considering it necessary that the case should go before a jury. Held that the Sessions Judge had no right to pronounce his own judgment on the credibility of the evidence, and to withdraw the consideration of the due weight to be given to the evidence from the jury.—In re HURRO SINGH, 16 W. R. 20 [Ainslie and Paul, JJ. July 20 1871.]

THE Court has no power even where there is ground for doing so, to mitigate a sentence of transportation for life, passed on persons found guilty of murder.—QUEEN v. JAMAL, 10 W. R. 65. [Kemp and Jackson, JJ. Dec. 9, 1871.]

WHERE the Sessions Judge convicted the accused of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and sentenced him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, the Chief Court on the Revision Side, not finding any of the exceptions under s. 300 established, altered the conviction to one of murder, and sen-fenced the accused to transportation for life.—CROWN v. GHOLAM MAHOMED, Panj. Rec., No. 11 of 1871.

ACCORDING to the prisoner's statement (the only direct evidence in the case), Mussamnat Wahabji solicited him to continue a criminal intercourse which had existed between them; and, on his declining, she kicked him, on which he struck her a blow over the region of the heart, throttled her till she ceased breathing, and then flung the body into a well. Held that there was not such grave and sudden provocation as reduced the offence to culpable homicide, and that the case did not fall under the 4th exception of s. 300 Penal Code (sudden fight, &c.), because the prisoner acted in a cruel and unusual manner, but that the provocation received by the accused was a sufficient reason for not passing sentence of death. Sentence commuted accordingly.—CROWN v. SUMUNDUR, Panj. Rec., No. 4 of 1872.

J, WITH three others, all of them unarmed, attempted late at night to steal wood from H S's field. M S, who was in charge of the field, raised an alarm and H S, with K S and L S, came up and seized J and S D, another of the thieves. H S and his party, who were armed with sticks, struck J and S D, and took them into the village. J being senseless from the blows, and S D uninjured. J died next morning from one of the blows received, which had broken one of his ribs, and which was the only serious blow inflicted. The Deputy Commissioner convicted H S, M S K S, and L S, of culpable homicide, holding that, though it was not shown which of the four inflicted the fatal blow, they were all found guilty as they were acting together for a common purpose. Held by the Chief Court that, with reference to the common purpose of the accused to arrest the deceased, who, with others, was attempting to commit theft, and other circumstances in the case, and as it had not been found that the accused had used excessive violence, the conviction must be set aside.—HIRA SINGH v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 26 of 1872.

WHERE it appeared that the prisoner, a Rajput, had allowed his female child, after the mother's death, to gradually languish away and die from want of proper sustenance, and had persistently ignored the wants of the child, although repeatedly warned of its state and the consequences of his neglect of it, and there was nothing to show that the prisoner was not in a position to support the child, held that the offence which the prisoner committed was murder, and not simply culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. GUNJA SINGH, 5 N.-W. P. 44 [Spankie, J., Feb. 19, 1873.]

IN a case of murder, the statement made by the deceased in the presence of his neighbours and of a head-constable was admitted as relevant evidence under s. 22, cl. 1, Act I. of 1872, that section providing that such statement is relevant, whether the person who made the statement was or was not at the time when it was made under expectation of death.—QUEEN v. DEGUMBER THAKOOR, 19 W. R. 44. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 12, 1873.]

WHERE a person under sentence of transportation for life on a conviction for murder is found guilty of murder on a subsequent and different charge, the only sentence that can be passed on him according to s. 303, Penal Code, is that of death. The prisoner, who was charged with having committed murder, was found by the jury who tried him to have been of unsound mind at the time he committed the offence. The Sessions Judge, differing in that point from the jury, referred the case to the High Court under s. 263 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872). Held that, in a case of this kind, the High Court will not interfere, without the very clearest proof that the jury were mistaken and that the interests of justice imperatively required the Court to take action under the extraordinary powers conferred upon it by s. 263, Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872. On a consideration of the medical evidence, the Court declined to interfere with the verdict of acquittal which the jury came to.—QUEEN v. DOORJODHUN SHAMONTO alias DEEJOBOR, 19 W. R. 45 [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 15, 1873.]

THE accused confessed to a police-constable, on being assured by him that nothing would happen to her, that she had killed her new-born child, and had buried it in the enclosure of her house. This statement led to the discovery of some bones of the head of an infant, a stone stained with blood, and a knife, with which stone and knife she said that she had killed her child. Before the committing Magistrate she made the same statement. In her trial before the Sessions Judge, she admitted the birth of the child. She stated that it did not cry, and that she buried it, not knowing whether it was alive or dead. She also stated that the police-constable had pressed and threatened her, and told her that, if she confessed the truth, nothing would happen to her. She denied having killed the child with the stone and sickle, and said that she had merely pressed it on the ground, and then buried it. There was no evidence to show that the child was born alive. Held that the confession before the Magistrate was irrelevant, and that the Court was not prepared to say that the confession made before the Sessions Judge was made after the impression caused by the promise of the police-constable had been fully removed, and that, looking at the fact that a promise of safety had been made, the confession was, even if accepted, of a limited character, and there was nothing to show that the child was born alive; and considering that, if the child was born dead, the accused might, under fear of exposure and disgrace, have wished to conceal the body, the accused must be acquitted of murder.—QUEEN v. MUSSUMAT LUCHOO, 5 N.-W. P. 86. [Spankie, J. April 5, 1873.]

THE prisoner having admitted before the Court of Session that he had killed his wife, no assessors were empannelled. At the end, however, of his confession, he pleaded that he was not in his right mind at the time. The Judge, therefore, proceeded to record medical and other evidence on the point, and, having come to the conclusion that there was no reason to doubt from the prisoner's conduct, either prior or subsequent to the murder, that, in committing the murder, he knew that he was doing a wrong act, convicted the prisoner. Held that the plea was, in effect, one of not guilty, and that the trial should not have proceeded without assessors, and that it should be quashed.—QUEEN v. CHEIT RAM, 5 N.-W. P. 110 [Spankie, J. April 14, 1873.]

THE statement of a Judge, who presides at a criminal trial, is, upon a case reserved under the 25th clause of the Charter of the High Court, or upon a case certified by the Advocate-General under its 26th clause, conclusive as to what has passed at the trial. Neither the affidavits of bystanders or of jurors, nor the notes of counsel or of shorthand-writers, are admissible to controvert the statement of the Judge. It is in the discretion of the Judge, who presides at a criminal trial, whether or not he will reserve a point of law for the opinion of the High Court, and such discretion will not be reviewed by the High Court sitting as a Court of Review, under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. Semble—Non-direction by a Judge is not a matter upon which the Advocate-General should grant a certificate under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. In considering whether a Judge has misdirected the jury, the tenor and general effect of the whole summing-up should be looked at, and if, upon the whole summing-up, the Court is of opinion that substantially the proper direction has been given to the jury, it will not interfere, though the Judge has omitted to direct the jury expressly on some important point. Quære—Whether abetment of murder by sorcery or other impossible means is an offence under the Penal Code? In criminal cases the High Court will not in general, grant leave to appeal to the Privy Council, unless some important question of law or practice, or jurisdiction, is involved. Considerations that guide the Court in granting leave to appeal in such cases stated, and instances in which such leave has been granted mentioned.—REG. v. PESTANJI DINSHA, 10 Bom. H. C. R. 75. [Westropp, C.J., and Gibbs, Sargent, Bayley, and Melvill, JJ. May 21, 1873.]

IN a case in which the accused were charged with murder (s. 302), culpable homicide not amounting to murder (s. 304), and voluntarily causing grievous hurt (s. 325), the Sessions Judge at the trial added a further charge of house-breaking by night in order to the commission of an offence (s. 457). The jury unanimously acquitted the prisoners of the three original charges, and a majority of the jury (four out of five) acquitted them also of the last charge. The Sessions Judge agreed with the verdict of the jury as regards the three original charges and recorded a formal order acquitting and discharging the prisoners on these three charges. He differed from the majority as to the fourth charge, and referred the case to the High Court under s. 263 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872). Held that, where (as in this case) the Sessions Judge has approved a verdict on certain charges, and finally acquitted and discharged the accused as to these charges, the High Court cannot, under s. 263, convict on the facts on these very charges. That section seems to contemplate only a case in which, without recording any order of acquittal or conviction, the Sessions Judge refers the whole case. As there was nothing in this case to show on what grounds the majority of the jury acquitted the prisoners on the additional charge, and as the Sessions Judge agreed with the unanimous verdict as to the three original charges, the High Court presumed that the reason which weighed with the majority of the jury in finding the prisoners not guilty on the additional charge must have weighed with the whole jury in finding them not guilty on all the three other charges, and accordingly the Court could not set aside the verdict of the majority on the last count without practically finding directly in the teeth of the verdict of the unanimous jury on the first three counts.—QUEEN v. UDYA CHANGA, 20 W. R. 73. [Macpherson and Glover, JJ. Nov. 3, 1873.]

IN a case in which the accused was tried on charges of murder, culpable homicide, and causing grievous hurt, the jury acquitted him of murder, but convicted him on the other counts. The verdict was recorded by the Sessions Judge, who then, in accordance with s. 263, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), questioned the jury as to the grounds for their verdict, and the jury eventually intimated their willingness to convict of murder. The Sessions Judge differed from the first verdict of the jury; but as he had recorded the first verdict, he doubted whether he could accept the second verdict, and referred the case to the High Court under s. 263. Held that s. 263 did not apply to such a case as this. There could be no verdict delivered, and no verdict finally recorded, until the last of the questions put by the Sessions Judge to the jury was answered; and, as it appeared from the answers of the jury that their findings of facts disclosed that the verdict ought to have been one of guilty on the charge of murder, the Sessions Judge should have entered the verdict of the jury as the verdict of guilty of murder. The case was accordingly returned to the Sessions Judge to enable him to do that, and to pass such sentence as the law directed. It is only when it is necessary in order to ascertain what the verdict of a jury really is that a Judge is justified under s. 263 in putting questions to the jury.—QUEEN v. SUSTIRAM MANDAL, 21 W. R. 1. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Nov. 19, 1873.]

THE knowledge that an act is likely to cause death does not constitute culpable homicide amounting to murder. It must be shown that the act was committed with the knowledge that it must, in all probability cause death.—QUEEN v. GRIDHAREE SINGH, 6 N.-W. P. 26. [Turner, J. Nov. 29, 1873.]

WHEN a Sessions Judge finds the accused guilty of murder, the sentence of death must be passed, unless there is some extenuating circumstance, some excuse, which, though the law does not regard it as sufficient to reduce the killing to the offence of culpable homicide, is ground for looking leniently on the act. The fact that the accused was not arrested when actually committing the crime, or in the act of escaping from the spot, is no reason for not passing sentence of death.—KAMAL v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 13 of 1873.

UNDER s. 280 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), the High Court altered the conviction in this case from culpable homicide into one for murder, and enhanced the sentence accordingly.—QUEEN v. SHEIKH ROHEEM, 21 W. R. 39. [Jackson and Ainslie, JJ. Feb. 5, 1874.]

IN a case in which the accused was charged with murder, the Sessions Judge considered the evidence given before him by the witnesses for the prosecution to be false, but nevertheless convicted the accused, acting under s. 249 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and relying on the evidence which had been given by the same witnesses before the committing officer. Held that s. 249 did not apply to this case; that the discretion conferred by that section should be exercised upon substantial materials rightly before the Court, and reasonably sufficient to guide the judgment of the Court to the truth of the matter, and not upon mere speculation or conjecture; and that, under that section, a Judge may base his judgment on the evidence given before the Magistrate in the presence of the accused, when there are special and particular reasons for considering that evidence to be honest and true, and when that evidence is, to a certain extent, corroborated by independent testimony before himself.—QUEEN v. AMANULLAH, 21 W. R. 49; 12 B. L. R. Ap. 15 [Phear and Morris, JJ. Mar. 16, 1874.]

THE High Court, in exercise of the powers conferred on it by s. 280 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872), altered the conviction in this case by the Sessions Judge from grievous hurt into one for murder, and enhanced the punishment accordingly.—QUEEN v. SAFIRUDDI PALWAN, 22 W. R. 5, 13 B. L. R. Ap. 23. [Kemp and Birch, JJ. April 22, 1874.]

THE evidence of a child of immature age—who, the Sessions Judge considered, understood the questions which were put to her, and who was therefore a competent witness under s. 118 of the Evidence Act—taken by the Sessions Judge on a simple affirmation, because he was not aware of the responsibility of an oath, was held to be admissible as evidence under s. 13 of the Oaths Act (X. of 1873). Case of Dwarkanath Dutt (7 W. R. 15), which ruled that a Court, before which a second trial is held, has nothing to do with the evidence given in the former trial, except for the purpose of ascertaining whether the offence in the two trials is the same, followed. A prisoner originally charged with an offence under one section (302), and acquitted of that charge, was committed, the day following that on which she was acquitted, for trial under another section (307), without any witnesses being examined on the charge under s. 307, and without having any opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses on the first charge, with respect to the second charge. Held that the irregularity was one which was not covered by s. 283, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), and that the prisoner had been prejudiced thereby in her defence. The trial under s. 307 was accordingly quashed, and a new trial ordered.—QUEEN v. MUSSAMUT ITWARYA, 22 W. R. 14; 14 B. L. R. 54. [Kemp and Birch, JJ. May 9, 1874.]

WHERE a blow is struck by A in the presence of, and by the order of, B, both are principals in the transaction; and where two persons join in beating a man, and he dies, it is not necessary to ascertain exactly what the effect of each blow was.—QUEEN v. MOHAMED ASGER, 23 W. R. 11. [Markby and McDonell, JJ. Dec. 12. 1874.]

A PARTY charged along with others with murder, having had a conditional pardon granted to him by the Deputy Magistrate, retracted before the Sessions Judge the statements he had made before the Deputy Magistrate. On being sent back to the Deputy Magistrate, that officer committed him for trial on a charge of giving false evidence. The Sessions Judge considered that the Deputy Magistrate was bound under s. 349, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), to commit on the original charge of murder, and not on that of giving false evidence; and he recommended that the order of commitment should be quashed, and the Deputy Magistrate directed to commit on the charge of murder. The High Court declined to interfere, as there was evidence on the record tending to support the charge for giving false evidence, and as s. 349 did not have the effect of taking away from Magistrates the power to entertain a charge of this kind.—QUEEN v. MULLIK JEECHOO, 23 W. R. 12. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Jan. 4. 1875.]

A SESSIONS JUDGE is bound to decide whether the offence committed is murder, or culpable homicide not amounting to murder, even if the person who struck the fatal blow is not under trial. If an accused has not his witnesses present, the Judge should under s. 251, Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872), if he sees grounds for proceeding, first call upon him for his defence, and then postpone the case.—QUEEN v. JUMIRUDDIN AND FAIZUDDIN alias FAGOO, 23 W. R. 58 [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. April 8, 1875.]

WHERE a murder is not premeditated, transportation for life is a sufficient punishment. A Sessions Judge should not import into his judgment the opinion of an assessor derived from personal knowledge, and unsupported by evidence on record.—QUEEN v. RAM CHURN KUKMOKAR, 24 W. R. 28. [Birch and Lawford, JJ. July 13, 1875.]

WHERE a person, accused of murder, acknowledged having struck his victim, but repudiated the intention to murder, and the Sessions Judge accepted this acknowledgment as a plea of guilty, and omitted to record any further evidence, held that the Judge was bound to accept the statement of the accused as a whole, if it was taken as a confession at all. Conviction for murder accordingly set aside, and new trial ordered.—QUEEN v. SONAOOLLAH, 25 W. R. 23. [Macpherson and Morris, JJ. Mar. 14, 1876.]

WHERE an act which causes death is done with an intention to kill, the offence is always murder. Where the act causing death is done without any intention to cause death or bodily injury, whether the offence is culpable homicide or murder, depends on the decree of risk to human life. If death is a likely result, it is culpable homicide; if it is the most probable result, it is murder. When the act causing death is done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knows to be likely to cause the death of the person to whom the harm is caused, the offence is murder, if the offender knows that the particular person injured is likely from peculiarity of constitution, or immature age, or other special circumstance, to be killed by an injury which would not ordinarily cause death. When the act causing death is done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, it is culpable homicide; if done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, it is murder. When the prisoner knocked his wife down, put one knee on her chest, and struck her two or three violent blows on the face with his clenched fist, producing extravasation of blood on the brain, and she died in consequence, either on the spot, or very shortly afterwards, held, there being no intention to cause death, and the bodily injury not being sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the offence was culpable homicide, and not murder.—REG. v. GOVINDA, I. L. R., 1 Bom. 342. [Kemball and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ. July 18, 1876.]

WHERE an accused person had been charged with the murder of a woman whom he was proved to have attempted to take away from her husband, and the assessors who had heard the case with the Judge found him guilty, but the Judge, without any evidence to support his hypothesis, had thrown out the supposition that the accused was the victim of a conspiracy, and acquitted him, and the Local Government appealed from the sentence of acquittal: Found by the High Court that there was no evidence in support of the Judge's supposition of the innocence of the accused, and held that his wrongful acquittal by the Judge could not stand between him and the sentence of death which was the punishment for his offence. The accused was accordingly sentenced to be hanged.—QUEEN v. RIDHAY PATRO, 26 W. R. 1. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. Dec. 14. 1876.]

DECEASED who had an enlarged spleen, was struck by the accused in the course of a quarrel, and died owing to his bodily infirmity. Held that, in the absence of any knowledge on the part of the accused of the diseased condition of the deceased, the offence was not culpable homicide, but using criminal force under s. 352, Penal Code.—CROWN v. JAI DYAL, Panj. Rec. No. 12 of 1870.]

ON the trial by a jury of a person on a charge of murder, the jury found the accused not guilty of the offence of murder, but convicted him of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The Sessions Judge, although he disagreed with the verdict, declined to submit the case to the High Court under s. 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872). The Local Government thereupon directed the Legal Remembrancer to appeal under s. 272 of the Code (or s. 417 of the Code of 1882), and in pursuance of this direction an appeal was preferred by the Junior Government Pleader. Held that the appeal was duly made. Held further that a judgment passed by the Court of Session, following the verdict of a jury acquitting the prisoner, is a judgment of acquittal within the meaning of s. 272 (or s. 417 of the new Code). Held also that, there being an acquittal on the charge of murder, the appeal lay.—EMPRESS v. JUDOONATH GANGOOLY, I. L. R., 2 Cal. 273. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. Jan. 18, 1877.]

THE prisoner was found guilty, and sentenced, under Reg. IV. of 1797, to transportation for life, for a murder committed in 1861, before the Penal Code came into operation and the case was sent up to the High Court to confirm the sentence. Reg. IV of 1797 was repealed by Act XVII. of 1862, and that Act was wholly repealed by Acts VIII. of 1868 and X. of 1872. Held on a reference to a Full Bench, that the conviction was illegal, s. 6 of Act I. of 1868, which provides that the repeal of any Act or Regulation shall not affect any offence committed before the repealing Act shall have come into operation not being applicable.—EMPRESS v. DHOJOO MISSER, I. L. R., 8 Cal. 225. [Garth, C.J., and Kemp, Macpherson, Markby and Ainslie, JJ. Feb. 20, 1877.]

WHERE a jury found an accused person guilty of murder, but refused to convict him, because there had been no eye-witnesses of his crime, and on a second charge from the Judge refused to find him guilty at all, held by the High Court, to whom the case was referred, that the Judge ought to have explained to the jury that the testimony of eye-witnesses was not necessary to the establishment of a charge of murder, and that the jury, if they had no doubt of the guilt of the accused, were bound to give effect to the conclusion at which they had arrived.—QUEEN v. GOKOOL KAHAR, 25 W. R. 36. [Ainslie and Mitter, JJ. April 28, 1877.]

THE provocation contemplated by s. 300 of the Penal Code should be of a character to deprive the offender of his self-control. In determining whether it was so, it is admissible to take into account the condition of mind in which the offender was at the time of the provocation.—EMPRESS v. KHOGAYI, I. L. R., 2 Mad. 122. [Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. Jan. 22, 1878.]

UP to the 1st January 1862, a person committing the offence of murder was liable to trial and punishment under the Regulations. By Act XVII. of 1862, the Regulations prescribing punishments for offences were repealed, "except as to any offence committed before the 1st January 1862." By the same Act, it was declared that no person who should claim the same should be deprived of any right of appeal or reference, which he would have enjoyed under such Regulations. By s. 6 of Act I. of 1868, the repeal of an Act does not affect anything done, or any offence committed, or any fine or penalty incurred before the repealing Act shall have come into operation. Under the provisions of this section the repeal of Act XVII. of 1862 by Act VIII. of 1868 and Act X of 1872 did not, in respect of offences committed before the 1st January 1862, affect the penalties prescribed by such Regulations, nor were any of the Regulations prescribing punishments for offences, which were in force before the passing of Act XVII. of 1862, repealed in respect of offences committed before the 1st January 1862, prior to the passing of Act I. of 1868. Held, accordingly, where a person committed murder in the year 1855, that such person was punishable under the Regulation. Held also that inasmuch as such right as the right of reference given by s. 3 of Reg. IV. of 1797 accrues on conviction, and therefore in the present case had not accrued before Act XVII. of 1862 was repealed it is doubtful whether a person convicted of murder committed before the 1st January 1862 has such right.—EMPRESS v. MUTTA, I. L. R., 1 All. 599. [Turner and Spankie, JJ. Feb. 15, 1878.]

THE appellant, having armed himself with a sword, struck in the dark at certain persons in a house, causing wounds which resulted in the death of one person. Held per Jackson, J.—That such conduct raises an inference that he intended to cause death. Per Ainslie, J.—That, though he probably did not see how his blows were directed, as he struck them with a deadly weapon regardless of consequences, he must have known that his act is so imminently dangerous that it must, in all probability, cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. Per Cunningham, J.—That the offence was culpable homicide, and not murder, being an unpremeditated act of reckless violence rather than an act done with the knowledge or intention which is essential to constitute murder.—IN THE MATTER OF BEJADHUR RAI, 2 C. L. R. 211. [Jackson, Ainslie, and Cunningham, JJ. April 1, 1878.]

WHERE the condition of the convict rendered it likely that, if he were hanged, decapitation would ensue, the sentence of death was commuted to one of transportation for life. —IN THE MATTER OF BOODHOO JOLAHO, 2 C. L. R. 215. [Markby and Prinsep, JJ. April 15, 1878.]

IF a body of men armed with lathis, and under the leadership of one who, to the knowledge of the rest, is armed with a gun, assemble for the purpose of forcibly carrying off another man's property, and if, in effecting that purpose, any one of the party, taking the gun, shoots and kills a person who is making a lawful resistance, the whole party may properly be convicted of murder under s. 149 of the Penal Code —HARI SINGH v. EMPRESS, 3 C. L. R. 49. [Jackson, Mitter, and Maclean, JJ. June 4, 1878.]

L, C, K, AND D, conspired to kill S. In pursuance of such conspiracy, L first, and then C, struck S on the head with a lathi, and S fell to the ground. While S was lying on the ground, K and D struck him on the head with their lathis. Held (Stuart, C.J., dissenting) that, inasmuch as K and D did not commence the attack on S, and it was doubtful whether S was not dead when they struck him, transportation for life was an adequate punishment for their offence. Observations by Stuart, C.J., on the impropriety of a judicial officer adding a "note" to his judgment in a criminal case impugning the correctness of the conclusion he has arrived at on the evidence in such case.—EMPRESS v. CHATTAR SINGH, I. IN the course of a serious riot one S was killed by a shot from a gun. The first prisoner and others were charged with murder. The Sessions Judge, believing the statement of the first prisoner and his witnesses that he had fired in self-defence, acquitted him of the charge. Upon a petition presented by the widow of the deceased, praying the Court to exercise their powers of revision, held, 1st, that, under the provisions of s. 297 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872), the High Court may exercise its powers of revision upon information in whatever way received; 2ndly, that it was not intended by the Legislature that the powers given by cl. 1 of s. 297 should be exercised only in the particular instances of error, and in the particular manner given in the succeeding clauses, which are merely intended to show the particular course which may be taken in those particular instances of error; 3rdly, that it is not a ground for revision by the High Court that all the evidence for the prosecution which might have been brought before the Sessions Judge has not been brought before him; 4thly, that the words 'material error' in that section cannot be held to include error in the appreciation of evidence; 5thly, that under the 1st clause of s. 227, the High Court cannot set aside findings of fact except in case of an appeal from a conviction.—IN THE MATTER OF AUROKIAM, I. L. R., 2 Mad. 28. [Innes, Offg. C.J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J. Oct. 25, 1878.]

S. 304A of the Penal Code does not apply to a case in which there has been the voluntary commission of an offence against the person. If a man intentionally commits such an offence, and consequences beyond his immediate purpose result, it is for the Court to determine how far he can be held to have the knowledge that he was likely, by such act, to cause the actual result; and, if such knowledge can be imputed, the result is not to be attributed to mere rashness; if it cannot be imputed, still the wilful offence does not take the character of rashness, because its consequences have been unfortunate. Acts probably or possibly involving danger to others but which in themselves are not offences, may be offences under s. 336, 337, 338, or 304A, if done without due care to guard against the dangerous consequences. Acts which are offences in themselves must be judged with regard to the knowledge or means of knowledge of the offender, and placed in their appropriate place in the class of offences of the same character —EMPRESS v. KETABDI MUNDUL, I. HELD (Stuart, C.J., dissenting) that a Native Indian subject of Her Majesty, being a soldier in Her Majesty's Indian army, who committed a murder in Cyprus while on service in such army, and who was accused of such offence at Agra, might under s. 9 of Act XI of 1872, be dealt with in respect of such offence by the Criminal Courts at Agra, Cyprus being a "Native State" in reference to Native Indian subjects of Her Majesty within the meaning of that Act. Per Stuart, C.J.—The power of the Governor-General of India in Council to make laws for the trial and punishment in British India of offences committed by British Indian subjects in British territories other than British India discussed. A Division Court of the High Court ordered the Magistrate (who had refused to inquire in a charge of murder on the ground that he had no jurisdiction) to inquire into such charge, considering that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to make such inquiry. The Magistrate inquired into the charge, and committed the accused person for trial. The Court of Session convicted the accused person on the charge, and sentenced him to death. The proceedings of the Court of Session having been referred to the High Court for confirmation of the sentence, the case came before the Full Court. Held per Stuart, C.J., Spankie, J., and Oldfield, J., that, in determining whether such sentence should be confirmed, the Full Court was not precluded by the order of the Division Court from considering whether the accused person had been convicted by a Court of competent jurisdiction.—EMPRESS v. SARMUKH SINGH, I. WHERE an accused was charged with culpable homicide, and the evidence showed that the deceased had an enlarged spleen, and that his death was caused by rupture of the spleen occasioned by blows inflicted by the accused on the body of the deceased, held that it was not sufficient, in order to find the accused guilty of a rash act under s. 304A of the Penal Code, that the jury should be satisfied only of the prevalence of the disease of enlargement of the spleen in the district, and infer therefrom criminal rashness in beating the deceased; but that they should also be satisfied that the accused was aware of the prevalence of such disease in the district and also aware of the risk to life involved in striking a person afflicted with that disease.—EMPRESS v. SAFATULLA, I. EXCEP. 5 to s. 300 refers to cases where a man consents to submit to the doing of some particular act, either knowing that it will certainly cause death, or that death will be the likely result; but it does not refer to the running of a risk of death from something which a man intends to avert if he possibly can do so, even by causing the death of the person from whom the danger is to be anticipated. Per Broughton, J.—Excep. 5 to s. 300 is not applicable to the case of a premeditated fight, but points to a case of a different character, such as suttee.—EMPRESS v. ROHIMUDDIN (No. 1), NAZIR MAHOMED (No. 2), AND SOMIRUDDIN (No. 3), I. WHERE death results in fight between two bodies of men deliberately fighting together, a greater proportion of the men composing both sides being armed with deadly weapons, and it being further apparent from the evidence that the man slain was an adult, and that no unfair advantage was taken by the one side or the other during the fight, the offence committed is culpable homicide, but does not amount to murder.—SAMSHERE KHAN v. EMPRESS, I. A HEAD-CONSTABLE, making an investigation into a case of house-breaking and theft, searched the tents of certain gipsies for the stolen property, but discovered nothing. After he had completed the search, the gipsies gave him a certain sum of money, which he accepted, but at the same time, not deeming it sufficient, he demanded a further sum from them. They refused to give anything more, on the ground that they were poor, and had no more to give. Thereupon he unlawfully ordered one of them to be bound and taken away. On his subordinates proceeding to execute such order, all the gipsies in the camp, men, women, and children, turned out, some four or five of the men being armed with sticks and stones, and advanced in a threatening manner towards the place such gipsy was being bound and the head-constable was standing. Before any actual violence was used by the crowd of advancing gipsies, the head-constable fired with a gun at such crowd, when it was about five paces from him, and killed one of the gipsies and, having done so, ran away. Any apprehension that death or grievous hurt would be the consequence of the acts of such crowd would have ceased had he released the gipsy he had unlawfully arrested, and withdrawn himself and his subordinates, or had he effected his escape. Held that such head-constable had not a right of private defence against the acts of such gipsies, as those acts did not reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt would be their consequence, and such head-constable was guilty of culpable homicide amounting to murder.—EMPRESS v. ABDUL HAKIM, I. WHERE the accused was, on a cry of "thief" being raised against him, pursued by certain private persons, in whose view he had not committed any non-bailable or cognizable offence, whereupon he turned and shot dead one of his pursuers who was on the point of seizing him, held that the offence was one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, as the accused, although he was entitled to resist the attempt of his pursuers to capture him in the exercise of his right of private defence, had exceeded the power given him by law when he caused the death of the person against whom he was exercising that right, but without an intention of doing more harm than was necessary for the purpose of defence. Held, further, that the accused must be taken to have acted with the intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, though he may have intended specifically to cause death, and was, therefore, guilty of culpable homicide in the greater degree.—EMPRESS v. SHER BAZ, Panj. A WOMAN who, with her infant child, eloped from her husband's house, was afterwards arrested on a charge of murdering the child which was missing. She made three different statements; (1) that she had left it with her husband; (2) that she had been enticed away by one R, who had taken the child from her; (3) that one H had drowned the child. The Sessions Judge believed the last statement and convicted her under s. 201 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction was wrong and must be set aside. S. 201 of the Penal Code does not apply to a case where the person who is the probable or possible offender makes statements exculpating himself by inculpating another.—IN THE MATTER OF BEHALA BIBI; EMPRESS v. BEHALA BIBI, I. A PRISONER was charged with 'causing the death of A by inflicting a wound on him with a 'chheni' with the intention of causing bodily injury, such as was sufficient, in the course of nature, to cause death, or which he knew to be likely to cause death.' Held that the charge was defective and inexact as regarded the second and third clauses of the definition of murder in s. 300 of the Penal Code. With reference to the second clause, it should have run "likely to cause the death of A, the person to whom the harm was caused." With reference to the third clause, it should have said "ordinary course of nature."—EMPRESS v. SAMIRUDDIN, I. L. R., 8 Cal. 211. [Pontifex and Field, JJ. Dec. 14, 1881.]

He also said that he had thrown down the girl's anklets at the scene of the murder, and would point them out. On the following day he accompanied the police-officer to the place where the girl's body had been found, and pointed out the anklets. Held that such statements, being confessions made to a police-officer, whereby no fact was discovered, could not be proved against P. AN accused, who was charged with murder, not being found, the witnesses were examined under s. 327 of Act X. of 1872 in his absence. The accused was subsequently arrested, and committed on the strength of the evidence taken in his absence. Before the Sessions Court he pleaded not guilty. Held that the prisoner having been put upon his trial, and having pleaded the commitment could not be quashed. Held that, if, in course of a trial, the Sessions Judge should be of opinion that the prosecution has not laid a proper basis for the reception of evidence in the absence of the accused, his proper course is to adjourn the trial under s. 264 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1872), and then, under s. 351 of Act X of 1872 summon such witnesses as he may deem material. Semble.—The mere absence of questions in the record of a prisoner's statement does not render it inadmissible.—EMPRESS v. SAGAMBUR, 12 C. A WAS tried on a charge (1) of murder; (2) of abetting B to commit the said murder. The jury, having considered their verdict, were asked by the Clerk of the Crown if they were agreed. The foreman replied that they were, and that their verdict was guilty, and when further asked, he said, "Guilty of abetment—of abetment generally." On the application of counsel for the prosecution a charge was then added of "abetment of murder committed by some person or persons unknown." The additional charge was read aloud to the jury, but was not specially explained to the prisoner, nor was he called upon to plead to it. Counsel for the prisoner was asked by the Judge if he desired to have a new trial on the charge as amended, but he declined. The three charges (i.e., the two original charges and the additional charge) were then read to the jury, who, after deliberation, returned a verdict of "not guilty" on charges Nos. 1 and 2, and of "guilty" on charge No. 3, viz., of abetment of murder by a certain person or persons unknown. On the application of counsel for the prisoner the following points were reserved. (1) whether, under the circumstances, the Court had power to add a new charge; (2) whether the verdict returned on the new charge was valid, the prisoner not having been called on to plead to it. Held (Scott, J., diss.) that the Judge was wrong in framing a new charge in addition to the original charges. The error, however was one of form, and not of substance and under s. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), the Court declined to interfere with the conviction. Held also that the power exercised by a Court sitting as a Court to decide questions of law reserved in criminal cases under s. 434 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), is the power of review, and the Court is a Court of Reference and Revision. Held also that having regard to ss. 228, 229, and 230 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the charge of abetment of murder by B might have been charged into one of abetment generally. Held also that, in any case, the conviction was good under ss. 236 and 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It was doubtful whether the evidence would establish the offence of murder, abetment of murder by B, or abetment of murder by some one unknown. Even if there had been no charge properly framed, the Judge might, under s. 237, have accepted the verdict returned by the jury, and entered it on the record. The fact that the Judge framed a charge which, ex hypothesi, was beyond his authority, and accepted a verdict on that charge, did not affect the legality of the conviction. Held that the omission to read and explain the charge to the prisoner, did not, under the circumstances, prejudice the prisoner, and was therefore immaterial. In the Criminal Procedure Code generally the word "charge" is used as the statement of a specific offence, and not as indicating the entire series of offences of which a prisoner is accused. There is nothing in the Code to indicate that the word is to have a different construction in ss. 226 and 227 from what it has in other sections. The words "without a charge" in s. 226 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882) will properly apply, not only to a case in which there is no charge at all, but also to a case in which there is no charge of such an offence as the Sessions Judge or Clerk of the Crown may think the prisoner ought to be tried for. If the word "alter" in s. 227 is to be taken to include "addition," as it does in s. 226, the addition permitted must be an addition to some specific charge in the nature of an alteration, and not the addition of a new charge. The words "return of the verdict" in s. 227 mean the return of the final verdict which the Judge is bound to record. Where, on the application of counsel for the prisoner, a question of law has been reserved for the decision of the Court under s. 434 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), the prisoner's counsel has the right to begin. Per Scott, J.—The test of the admissibility of proposed amendments to a charge is whether such amendment will prejudice the prisoner. The word "charge" is used in the Code both as indicating the whole series of counts or heads of charge, and also as indicating a charge of one specific offence. In s. 227 it is used in the former sense. The word "alter" in s. 227 must be taken to be equivalent to the words "add to or otherwise alter," which are used in s. 226; and consequently the addition of a new "head of charge" is an alteration within the meaning of s. 227.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. APPA SUBHANA, I. L. R., 8 Bom. 200 (Sargent, C.J., and Bayley and Scott, JJ. Feb. 19, 1884).

UPON the trial of A for murder and B for abetment thereof, a confession by A implicating B cannot be taken into consideration against B under s. 30 of the Evidence Act, 1872.—BADI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 7 Mad 579. (Kernan and Hutchins, JJ. July 30, 1884.)

IN a trial upon a charge of murder, it appeared that the deceased, shortly before her death, was questioned by various persons as to the circumstances in which the injuries had been inflicted on her, and that she was at that time unable to speak, but was conscious and able to make signs. Evidence was offered by the prosecution, and admitted by the Sessions Judge, to prove the questions put to the deceased, and the signs made by her in answer to such questions. Held by the Full Bench (Mahmood, J., dissenting) that the questions and the signs taken together might properly be regarded as "verbal statements" made by a person as to the cause of her death within the meaning of s. 32 of the Evidence Act, and were, therefore, admissible in evidence under that section. Per Straight, J., that statements by the witnesses as to their impression of what the signs meant were inadmissible, and should be eliminated; but that, assuming that the questions put to the deceased were responded to by her in such a manner as to leave no doubt in the mind of the Court as to her meaning, it was not straining the construction to hold that the circumstances were covered by s. 32. Per Mahmood, J., that the expression "verbal statements" in s. 32 should be confined to statements made by means of a word or words, and that the signs made by the deceased, not being verbal statements in this sense, were not admissible in evidence under that section. Per Petheram, C.J., that the signs could not be proved as "conduct" within the meaning of s. 8 of the Evidence Act, inasmuch as taken alone, and without reference to the questions leading to them, there was nothing to connect them with the cause of death, and so to make them relevant, while the questions could not be proved either under expl. 2 of s 8 or under s 9, inasmuch as the condition precedent to their admissibility under either of these provisions was the relevancy of the conduct which they were alleged to affect, or of the facts which they were intended to explain The "conduct" made relevant by s 8 is conduct which is directly and immediately influenced by a fact in issue or relevant fact, and it does not include actions resulting from some intermediate cause, such as questions or suggestions by other persons. Per Mahmood, J., that the word "conduct" as used in s. 8 does not mean only such conduct as is directly and immediately influenced by a fact in issue or relevant fact, that the signs made by the deceased were the conduct of "a person an offence against whom was the subject of any proceeding," and were relevant as such under s. 8; and that the questions put to her were admissible in evidence, either under expl. 2 of the same section or under s. 9, by way of an explanation of the meaning of the signs.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ABDULLAH, I. L. R., 7 All. 385. Petheram, C.J., and Straight, Oldfield, Brodhurst, and Mahmood, JJ. Feb. 27, 1885.

AN accused person, in answer to a charge of murder, stated that he had killed his wife, but that he had done so in consequence of his having discovered her in an act of adultery on the previous day. Held that such a statement did not amount to a plea of guilty on the charge, and that it was the duty of the Court to try whether the provocation therein disclosed was sufficiently grave and sudden to reduce the offence.—NETAI LUSKAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 11 Cal. 410. [Field and Beverley, JJ. Mar. 25, 1885.]

No judicial officer dealing with the provisions of s. 27 of Act I of 1872 should allow one word more to be deposed to by a police-officer, detailing a statement made to him by an accused, in consequence of which he discovered a fact, than is absolutely necessary to show how the fact that was discovered is connected with the accused, so as, in itself, to be a relevant fact against him. S. 27 was not intended to let in a confession generally, but only such particular part of it as set the person to whom it was made in motion, and led to his ascertaining the fact or facts of which he gives evidence. Queen-Empress v. Pancham (I. L. R., 4 All. 198) and Queen-Empress v. Babu Lall (I. L. R., 6 All. 509) discussed and commented on. Thus, when a police-officer deposed that an accused had told him that he had robbed K of Rs 48, whereof he had spent Rs 8, and had got Rs 40, and that he had made over Rs 40 to him, held that the statement that he had robbed K of Rs. 48 was not necessarily preliminary to the surrender of the Rs. 40, and was inadmissible in evidence against him When also a police-officer deposed to the fact that the accused, who was charged with murder, had stated to him that he and K had stolen some hides from C, and, upon such statement, he had sent for C, and recorded his information, and when it appeared that C had already informed the police of the fact of the theft, though the witness was not aware of it: held that the statement was inadmissible upon the ground that it would be most dangerous to extend the provisions of s 27, and allow a police-officer, who is investigating a case, to prove an information received from a person accused of an offence in the custody of a police-officer, on the ground that a material fact was thereby discovered by him, when that fact was already known to another police-officer. Although, under some circumstances a charge of murder may be sustained, when the body of the person said to have been murdered is not forthcoming; still, when that is the case, the strongest possible evidence as to the fact of the murder should be insisted on before an accused is convicted. When an accused charged with murder was alleged to have taken a boat from a place where it had been secured by its owner, and after proceeding some distance in it had abandoned it, and when he was charged with the theft of the boat, held that the charge was unsustainable, inasmuch as it was evidently not his intention to convert it to his own use, and make it permanently his own property, but merely to make use of it for the purpose of aiding him in escaping.—ADU SHIKDAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 11 Cal. 635. [Mitter and Norris JJ. May 29, 1885.]

L AND N were tried by a Sessions Court on charges of dacoity and murder. The jury returned a verdict of guilty on both charges. The Judge, contrary to the provisions of s 269 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, treated the jury as assessors in respect of the charge of murder, and, convicting L and N of dacoity, acquitted them of murder. Held that the irregular procedure of the Judge could not deprive the verdict of the jury of its proper legal effect.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. LAKSHMANA, I. L. R., 9 Mad. 42. [Muttusami Ayyar and Hutchins, JJ. Aug. 27, 1885.]

HELD that the Island of Perim, having been occupied with a view to its permanent retention by officers of the Government of Bombay, became a part of British India within the definition of Stat. 21 and 22 Vict., c 106, and vested in Her Majesty along with the other Indian territories under that Act, which became law on 2nd September 1858. The Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) and the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882) extend in their entirety to the whole of British India, and therefore to the Island of Perim. S 7 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882) gives to the Local Government the power to alter the local limits of Sessions Divisions, and continues the Divisions existing when that Code came into force. A notification was issued by the Government of Bombay on the 6th May 1884 under the above section, including the Island of Perim within the Sessions Division or District of Aden, and empowering the officer from time to time commanding the troops stationed at Perim, in virtue of his office, to exercise the powers of a Magistrate of the second class within the island, and to commit persons for trial to the Court of Session at Aden. Held, having regard to the language of Act II. of 1864, that for the purposes of s. 7 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), the Resident's Court at Aden might be considered as a Court of Session, and that the local area to which Act II. of 1864 applied was the Sessions Division which was in existence at the date of the above notification when the limits thereof were altered by the inclusion of the Island of Perim. A prisoner charged with having committed murder in the Island of Perim was committed by the Magistrate at Perim to be tried before the Political Resident at Aden. Having been found guilty and sentenced to death, he appealed to the High Court of Bombay. By the Aden Act (II. of 1864), s. 29, it is provided that "no appeal shall lie from an order or sentence passed by the Resident in any criminal case." The High Court, however, admitted the appeal, being doubtful as to whether the above provision applied to cases arising in the Island of Perim.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MANGAL TEKCHAND, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 258. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Dec. 6. 1885.]

S. 84 of the Penal Code lays down the legal test of responsibility in cases of alleged unsoundness of mind. It is by this test, as distinguished from the medical test, that the criminality of an act is to be determined. The accused killed his two young children with a hatchet. The reason given for the crime was that, while he was laid up with fever, the crying of the children annoyed him. It was alleged that the fever had made him irritable and sensitive to sound, but it did not appear that he was delirious at the time of perpetrating the crime. There was no attempt at concealment, and the accused made a full confession. Held that, as the accused was conscious of the nature of his act, he must be presumed to have been conscious of its criminality. He was, therefore, guilty of murder.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. LAKSHMAN DAGDU, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 512. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Mar. 4. 1886.] Approved in Queen-Empress v. Venkatasami, I. L. R., 12 Mad 459, infra; and distinguished in Queen-Empress v. Sakharam valad Ramji, I. L. R., 14 Bom. 564, infra.

THE High Court cannot, under s. 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), any more than under s. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV. of 1882), direct the transfer of a case, which is not properly before a Subordinate Court of competent jurisdiction to receive and try it. Peary Lall Mazoomdar v. Komul Kishore Dassi (I. L. R., 6 Cal 30) followed. Queen-Empress v. Thaku (I. L. R., 8 Bom. 312) distinguished. Under s. 5 of the Scheduled Districts Act (XIV. of 1874), the Local Government cannot, by extending an Act which is of necessarily restricted application, make its provisions applicable to an entirely new subject-matter, viz., the litigation of a new local area. Accordingly, where the Government of Bombay issued the following notification, No. 823 of 1886: "In exercise of the powers conferred by s. 5 of the Scheduled Districts Act (XIV. of 1874), the Governor of Bombay in Council is pleased, with the previous sanction of the President in Council, to extend to the Island of Perim the whole of Act II of 1864 of the Governor-General in Council, with the exception of ss. 2, 17, and 23. The Governor in Council is further pleased, in exercise of the powers conferred by s 6 of the Scheduled Districts Act (XIV. of 1874), and by any other enactment, to direct that the Resident at Aden shall be Sessions Judge and Court of Session for the Island of Perim, and shall exercise the same jurisdiction and powers in respect of the administration of civil and criminal justice in the said island, and in respect of the trial of persons committed for trial by the Court of Session for offences committed in the said island as are vested in him in Aden by the said Act:" Held that the provisions of the Aden Act (II. of 1864), which (as appears from the preamble) deals with the litigation of Aden alone, could not be extended to Perim without enlarging the subject-matter of the Act. Held also that the appointment of the Political Resident at Aden as a Sessions Judge and Court of Session for the Island of Perim, made under cl. (a) of s. 6 of the Scheduled Districts Act (XIV. of 1874), was valid and effectual with reference only to the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that that portion of the notification which regulates the exercise by the Resident of his powers with reference to Act II. of 1864 should be treated as surplusage. A prisoner charged with having committed murder at Perim was committed by the Magistrate there on the 26th August 1885 for trial before the Political Resident at Aden, by whom he was convicted and sentenced to death on the 14th September 1885. On the 26th January 1886, the High Court of Bombay reversed the conviction and sentence, on the ground that the Court of the Resident had no jurisdiction over the Island of Perim, and that the Resident, not having been appointed a Judge of a Court of Session for that island, was not competent to try the prisoner. The High Court ordered a re-trial before a competent Court. On the 10th February 1886, the Government of Bombay issued the notification (No. 823) above set forth. On the 11th March 1886, an application was made to the High Court of Bombay for the transfer of the case to another Court of Session or to the High Court for trial. Held that Perim is a Sessions Division, and that, after the establishment, under the Code of Criminal Procedure, of a Court of Session for the Perim Sessions Division, and the appointment of the Resident at Aden as Sessions Judge of that Court, the accused stood properly committed to a Court of Session. The High Court, therefore, could transfer the case from that Court, under s. 526 of the Code, to any other Court of equal or superior jurisdiction or to the High Court of Bombay. Per Jardine, J.—After the High Court had annulled the proceedings in the Court of the Resident at Aden as without jurisdiction, the case could not be treated as still pending in his Court, and, as there was no Court of Session in existence at the time of the commitment, it necessarily followed that the case remained in the Magistrate's Court. But, whether the case was considered as pending in the Court of a Magistrate, or of a Resident, or of a Sessions Judge, the High Court has the power to transfer it, and that, under the circumstances, the case should be so transferred to the High Court for trial.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MANGAL TEKCHAND, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 274. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Mar. 11, 1886.]

UPON the trial of a person charged with the murder of his wife, it was proved that the accused had entertained well-founded suspicions that his wife had formed a criminal intimacy with another person; that one night the deceased, thinking that her husband was asleep, stealthily left his side; and the accused took up an axe and followed her, found her in conversation with her paramour in a public place, and immediately killed her. Held that the act of the accused constituted the crime of murder, the facts not showing "grave and sudden provocation" within the meaning of s. 300, excep. 1, of the Penal Code, so as to reduce the offence to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen-Empress v. Damarua (Weekly Notes, 1885, p. 197) distinguished by Straight, Offg. C.J.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MOHAN, I. L. R., 8 All. 622. [Straight, Offg. C.J., and Brodhurst, J. June 26, 1886.] Referred to in Queen-Empress v. Lochan, I. L. R., 8 All. 635, infra.

AN accused person was convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder in respect of the widow of his cousin, who lived with him. The evidence showed that the accused was seen to follow the deceased for a considerable distance with a gandasa or chopper, under circumstances which indicated a belief on his part that she was going to keep an assignation, and with the purpose of detecting her in doing so. He found her in the act of connection with her paramour, and killed her with the chopper. Held that the conviction must be altered to one of murder, as the accused went deliberately in search of the provocation sought to be made the mitigation of his offence, and, under the circumstances disclosed, it could not be said that he was deprived of self-control by grave and sudden provocation. Queen-Empress v. Damarua (Weekly Notes, 1885 p. 197) and Queen-Empress v. Mohan (I. L. R., 8 All. 622) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. LOCHAN, I. L. R., 8 All. 635. [Straight, Offg. C.J., and Mahmood, J. Aug. 2, 1886.]

AT a trial before a Sessions Court, a charge was read out to the prisoners to the effect that they, at a certain place, on a certain date, committed murder by causing the death of M, and that they had thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 302 of the Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session. The prisoners pleaded guilty, and were convicted on their plea. The charge was not explained to the prisoners. In answer to questions put by the Court, prisoners stated that they had killed M, and that they made the admissions of their own accord, and not on the persuasion of any one. Held that the conviction must be quashed, and a new trial ordered.—AIYAVU v. QUEEN-EM-

PARAS, I L. R., 9 Mad. 61. [Muttusami Ayyar and Hutchins, JJ. Aug. 27, 1886.]

THE accused stabbed a child (his brother's wife) with a sword and killed her. He was charged with murder, and plea of insanity was set up at the trial. No motive could be assigned for his attack on the child, in which he persisted in the presence of other persons; and it appeared that he had been in the habit of treating the child kindly and affectionately. He was suffering from fever and want of food at the time, and the medical evidence showed it was possible that the act was committed under a sudden attack of homicidal mania. It was in evidence that he had abused some of his relations a short time before, the abuse being probably due to irritability of mind caused by fever. He confessed the crime to the Village-Magistrate, and answered questions put to him rationally, but before the committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge he denied that he had killed the child. He was convicted of murder. Held that, as the accused was not proved to have been, by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of his act, or that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law, the conviction was right. Queen-Empress v. Lakshman Dagdu (I. L. R., 10 Bom. 512) approved.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VENKATASAMI, I. L. R., 12 Mad. 459. [Collins, C.J., and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. April 15, 1889.]

WHERE a prisoner was convicted of murder on a confession retracted at the trial, corroborated by depositions read under s. 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and also retracted at the trial held that the prisoner should not have been convicted on such evidence.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BHARMAPPA, I. L. R., 12 Mad. 123. [Collins, C.J., and Parker, J. Oct. 24, 1888.]

THE accused who was a habitual ganja-smoker, was charged with the murder of his wife and infant son. In his confession he stated that he had killed his wife, because she quarrelled with him, and objected to go to another village, when he proposed a change of house on account of their poverty. He adhered to this statement when placed for trial before the Court of Session. The Sessions Judge treated this statement as a plea of guilty on the charge of murder, convicted the accused, and sentenced him to death, subject to confirmation by the High Court. Held (per Jardine and Candy, JJ.) that the accused's statement did not amount to a plea of guilty on the charge of murdering his wife. He alleged a sudden provocation: he ought, therefore, to have been put on his trial, in order that the Court might ascertain whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder. Held (per Birdwood and Jardine, JJ.) that, unless the accused's habit of smoking ganja had induced in him such a diseased state of mind as to make him incapable of knowing the nature of his act or its criminality, s. 84 of the Indian Penal Code did not apply in his favour. Queen-Empress v. Lakshman Dagdu (I. L. R., 10 Bom. 512) distinguished.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SAKHARAM VALAD RAMJI, I. L. R., 14 Bom. 564. [Birdwood, Jardine, and Candy, JJ. Feb. 25, 1890.]

THE accused struck the deceased three blows on the head with a stick with the intention of killing him. The deceased fell down senseless on the ground. The accused, believing that he was dead, set fire to the hut in which he was lying, with a view to remove all evidence of the crime. The medical evidence showed that the blows struck by the accused were not likely to cause death, and did not cause death, and that death was really caused by injuries from burning when the accused set fire to the hut. Held (Parsons, J. dissenting) that the accused was guilty of attempt to murder under s. 307 of the Penal Code. Per Parsons, J.—The accused was guilty of murder under s. 302 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KHANDU, I. L. R., 15 Bom. 194. [Sargent, C.J., and Birdwood and Parsons, JJ. Sep. 23, 1890.]

S. 511 of the Indian Penal Code does not apply to attempts to commit murder, which are fully and exclusively provided for by s. 307 of the said Act. A person is criminally responsible for an attempt to commit murder when, with the intention or knowledge requisite to its commission, he has done the last proximate act necessary to constitute the completed offence, and when the completion of the offence is only prevented by some cause independent of his volition.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NIDDHA, I. L. R., 14 All. 38. [Straight, J. Aug. 5, 1891.]

THE law gives no discretion to a Court which convicts of an offence to award or not the punishment provided for that offence in the Penal Code. When convicting of murder, the only discretion which the law allows to the Court is to determine which of the two punishments prescribed should be awarded, regard being had to the circumstances of the particular case. On a case the decision of which is vested by law in him sitting with assessors, a Sessions Judge is bound to form his own opinion, aided by the assessors indeed, but quite independent of any expression of opinion on the part of the committing Magistrate. The Judge's reference in his judgment to the opinion of the committing Magistrate was held to be wholly irrelevant and wrong.—DEWAN SINGH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS,

WHERE three prisoners assaulted the deceased, and gave him a beating, in the course of which one of the prisoners struck the deceased a blow on the head, which resulted in death: Held that, in the absence of proof that the prisoners had the common intention to inflict injury likely to cause death, they could not be convicted of murder. The punishment of penal servitude is only applicable to Europeans and Americans.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v DUMA BAIDYA, I. L. R., 19 Mad. 483. [Subramania Ayyar and Davies, JJ Sep. 4, 1896.]

A CAUSED crops to be sown on land, as to the enjoyment of which there was a dispute between her and B. Persons having proceeded to reap the crops on behalf of B, the servants of A went to the place with the station-house-officer and some constables, who were armed. The station-house-officer ordered the reapers to leave off reaping, and to disperse; but they did not do so. He then told one of the constables to fire, and he fired into the air. Some of the reapers remained, and assumed a defiant attitude. The station-house-officer, without attempting to make any arrests, and without warning the reapers that, if they did not desist from reaping, they would be fired at, gave orders to shoot, and one of the constables fired, and mortally wounded one of the reapers. It was found that neither the station-house-officer nor the last-mentioned constable believed that it was necessary for the public security to disperse the reapers by firing on them. Held that the station-house-officer and the constable were not acting in good faith, and that the order to shoot was illegal, and did not justify the constable, and that both he and the station-house-officer were guilty of murder.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v SUBBA NAIK, I. L. R., 21 Mad. 249. [Collins, C.J., and Shephard, J. Mar. 11, 23, 1898.]

AN accused person who had been for some time confined in a lunatic asylum was tried and committed to the Sessions by a Deputy Magistrate on a charge of murder. The accused was deaf and dumb, and could not be made to understand the proceedings which had been taken. On the proceedings being forwarded to the High Court under section 341 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it was held that the law does not contemplate that the Sessions trial should necessarily take place. That it is discretional with the High Court on a commitment made to order the Sessions trial to be held, and the High Court must consider whether any benefit would be likely to result, especially to the accused by such trial. The High Court, in this case having come to the conclusion that no benefit would be likely to result to the accused by his being tried by the Court of Session, found that the accused was guilty of the alleged murder, but that he was by reason of unsoundness of mind not responsible for his action, and directed him to be kept in the District Jail to await the orders of Government.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SOMIR BOWRA, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 368. [Prinsep and Stanley, JJ. Nov. 30, 1899.]

THE deceased H lived in the house of the accused A. H contracted an intimacy with L, the wife of A, in consequence of which he was turned out of the house. Subsequently on a certain night H, at the invitation of L, went to the house of A, and was taken inside by her. Thereupon A and the other accused relatives of his seized H, carried him off to some distance, beat him, broke his arms and a leg, and left him. Three days later H died in consequence of the injuries. All the accused were convicted under s. 302 of the Penal Code, and sentenced to transportation for life. Held that the circumstances under which H was found in the house of A on the night of the crime were sufficient to cause grave and sudden provocation to A and his relatives, within the meaning of s. 300, excep. (1) of the Penal Code, and that the provocation was of a nature that would continue to influence the feelings of the accused for a considerable period after H was caught in the house in the company of L. Conviction altered to one under s 304 of the Penal Code and sentence reduced.—ARALU DAS v. KING-EMPEROR, I L. R., 28 Cal. 571. [Rampini and Gupta, JJ. April 16, 1901.]

Punishment for murder by life-convict.

303. Whoever, being under sentence of transportation for life, commits murder, shall be punished with death.

EVERY person, whether within or without the presidency-towns, aware of the commission of, or of the intention of any other person to commit, any offence punishable under s. 303 of the Penal Code, shall forthwith give information to the nearest Magistrate or police officer of such commission or intention. —Crim. Pro. Code (Act V of 1898), s. 44.

WHERE a person under sentence of transportation for life on a conviction for murder is found guilty of murder on a subsequent and different charge, the only sentence that can be passed on him according to s. 303, Penal Code, is that of death.—QUEEN v. DOORJODHUN SHAMONTO alias DEEJOBOR, 19 W. R. 45. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 15, 1873.]

304. Whoever commits culpable homicide not amounting to murder shall be punished with transportation for life or imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine, if the act by which the death is caused is done with the intention of causing death, or of causing such bodily injury as is likely to cause death;

Ct. of Ses. Cognizable. Warrant. Not bailable. Not comp.

Punishment for culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, or with fine, or with both, if the act is done with the knowledge that it is likely to cause death, but without any intention to cause death, or to cause such bodily injury as is likely to cause death.

CHARGE.—That you, on or about the day of , at , committed culpable homicide not amounting to murder, by causing the death of , and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 304 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session or High Court.—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V of 1898), Sch. V., Form XXVIII (II)

EVERY person, whether within or without the presidency-towns, aware of the commission of, or of the intention of any other person to commit, any offence punishable under s. 304 of the Penal Code, shall forthwith give information to the nearest Magistrate or police-officer of such commission or intention. —Crim. Pro Code (Act V. of 1898), s. 44

THE two prisoners having confessed that, having caught the deceased in the act of having sexual intercourse with the wife of one of them, they then and there killed him: Held that the very grave provocation given to them was such as to reduce their crime from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. GOUR CHUNDER POLIE, 1 W. R. 17. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Sep. 20, 1864.]

To convict a prisoner of being a member of an unlawful assembly and of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, it must be shown that he had an illegal object in common with, and took part in, the illegal act done by the others.—In re FOIZ ALI alias IMDAD ALI, 1 W. R. 20. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov. 4, 1864.]

THE prisoner, having struck the deceased a hasty though fatal blow with a stick in his hand at the time for abusing his mother, was held guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and not of murder.—QUEEN v. SULEEM SHEIKH, 1 W. R. 23. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Nov. 11, 1864.]

AN unpremeditated assault (ending in an affray in which death is caused) committed in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel, it being immaterial which party offered the provocation or committed the first assault, was held to come within excep. 4 of s. 300 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. ZALIM RAI, 1 W. R. 33. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Nov. 25, 1864.]

A CAPITAL sentence mitigated in the case of murder committed while under the influence of provocation caused by an intrigue with the wife of the prisoner.—QUEEN v. BHEKYE alias SHEIK ANSER, 1 W. R. 46. Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 19, 1864.]

THE finding of a jury that, although the accused killed the deceased, the crime was not murder, not because it fell under any of the exceptions allowed by law, but because the accused had no object in killing him, is not a legal finding, and does not amount to a conviction of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. LUCKOO GHOSE, 1 W. R. 50. [Glover, J. Dec. 30, 1864.]

WHEN there is neither intention, knowledge, nor likelihood that the injury inflicted in an assault will or can cause death, the offence is not culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. MEGHA MEEAH alias JUCKON MEEAH, 2 W. R. 39. Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 8, 1865.]

WHAT is necessary to bring a case of murder under the 4th exception to s. 300 of the Penal Code, so as to change the offence into culpable homicide not amounting to murder. —QUEEN v. AKAL MAHOMED, 3 W. R. 18. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. May 23, 1865.]

THE Sessions Judge having found the prisoners guilty of striking the deceased with the knowledge that the act was likely to cause death—in other words, guilty of murder—convicted and punished them for culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Case remanded for a new trial (Jackson, J., dissenting).—QUEEN v. BERIA BAZIKUR, 3 W. R. 38. [Kemp, Jackson, and Glover, JJ. July 6, 1865.]

THE absence of premeditation will not reduce the crime from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v.

WHERE a man suddenly cut his wife's throat it was held that, in order to establish that the act was not done under grave provocation, so as to bring the case under excep. 1 of s. 300 of the Penal Code, it is not sufficient to state that the deceased ceased abusing the prisoner then, but it is necessary to show what interval elapsed between the time when the deceased ceased to speak and the instant when the prisoner attacked her.—QUEEN v. NOKUL NUSHYO, 7 W. R. 27. [Norman and Seton-Karr, JJ. Feb. 4, 1867.]

CAUSING death by branding a thief without the knowledge that the act was so immediately dangerous that it would, in all probability, cause death, or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, is punishable under s. 304 of the Penal Code as culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. KHEDUM MISSER, 7 W. R. 54. Norman and Seton-Karr, JJ. April 8, 1867.

PROOF of motive or previous ill-will is not necessary to sustain a conviction for murder in a case where a person is coolly and barbarously put to death.—QUEEN v. JAICHAND MUNDLE, 7 W. R. 60 [Seton-Karr, J. April 29, 1867.]

THERE was a dispute between the villagers of A on one side and the villagers of D on the other side, in respect of the right of use in a water-course. The D villagers erected a dam, and thereby obstructed the free passage of the water from the river. The A party were composed of a much larger number of persons, said to be about one hundred, and were armed with heavy sticks and gorasses—a description of battle-axe of a deadly character—facts which showed that they went to anticipating a fight, and with the intention, by means of criminal force, to enforce a supposed right at all risks. There was time to have had recourse to the protection of the public authorities: indeed, if they had not gone to the disputed bund, there would have been no riot at all. A man was killed in this riot, struck down by a blow on the head. Held that the offence was culpable homicide not amounting to murder; and as the offence was committed in carrying out the common and unlawful object of the meeting, the whole of the members of that unlawful assemblage were liable. The D party were equally to blame though they were, simply from inequality in numbers, worsted in the fight. They were wrong in the first instance in damming up the water-course by show of force, and in opposing the A party instead of retreating and seeking the protection of the law. —QUEEN v. MANA SINGH AND OTHERS, 7 W. R. (103) 67. [Kemp and Glover JJ. May 7, 1867.]

WHERE a person snatches up a log of heavy wood, and strikes another with it on a vital part with so much force and vindictiveness as to cause that other person's death almost on the spot, the act must be held to have been done with the knowledge that it was likely to cause death; but if done without premeditation in the heat of passion on a sudden quarrel, the offence committed is culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. RAJOO GHOSE, 7 W R. 17 [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. May 20, 1867.]

EXPLANATION of the difference between murder, culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. MADUR JOLAHA, 8 W. R. 28. [Loch, J. June 27, 1867. See also Queen v. Hurry Doss Paul, 6 W. R. 86, supra.

WHERE the accused, whose property had frequently been stolen, went out with a lathi to watch his property, and with the lathi struck a thief, who died from the effects of the blows, it was held (having regard to the nature of the injuries inflicted, and to the subsequent conduct of the accused) that the case did not fall within the 4th exception to s. 99, and that the prisoner was not guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but was protected by ss. 97 and 104 of the Penal Code, and had not exceeded the legal right of private defence of property.—QUEEN v. MOKEE, 12 W. R. 15. [Norman and Jackson JJ. June 28, 1867.]

A PRISONER'S confession must be taken in its entirety. Where a prisoner confessed that he did not suspect his wife's fidelity; that he left home on business; that on his return he saw what convinced him of his wife's infidelity and that, maddened at the sight, he killed both her and her paramour; held that he was guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and that the case was one in which he ought to be treated with lenity.—QUEEN v. SHEIKH BOODHOO, 8 W. R. 38. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 9, 1867.]

CULPABLE homicide is not murder unless the case comes expressly within the provisions of cl. 1, 2, 3, or 4 of s. 300 of the Penal Code. Under s. 299, an offence may amount only to culpable homicide, not murder, although none of the exceptions specified in s. 300 are applicable to the case. An express finding by the Sessions Judge, that the case does not fall under any of the clauses of s. 300, is tantamount to an acquittal of murder, and after such an acquittal, the High Court cannot, either as a Court of Appeal, or as a Court of Revision, look at the evidence for the purpose of reversing the acquittal, and of convicting the prisoner of murder. There had been a riot and fight between two factions, and some members of one party (A) were charged with the murder of the leader of the other party (B), and some members of the other party (B), were charged with causing grievous hurt to the leader of (A). Held that the members of each party should have been committed for trial separately, and that the Magistrate was wrong in committing the members of party (A) and of party (B) for trial all together upon a joint-charge as if they had had one common object.—QUEEN v. SHEIK BAZU, 8 W. R. 47; B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 750. [Peacock, C.J., and Loch, Bayley, Kemp, Seton-Karr, Phear, and Macpherson, JJ. July 27, 1867.]

IN charging a jury on the point of provocation in a case of culpable homicide, a Judge should tell the jury that, to bring the case within the exception to s. 300 of the Penal Code, the prisoner must have been deprived of the power of self-control by grave and sudden provocation; that there ought to have been sufficient cause for such loss of self-control; and that the provocation was not voluntarily provoked by the prisoner as an excuse for doing harm.—QUEEN v. GUNESH LUSKUR, 9 W. R. 72. [Glover, J. May 28, 1868.

To give an accused the benefit of excep. 1, s. 300 of the Penal Code, it ought to be shown distinctly, not only that the act was done under the influence of some feeling which took away from the person doing it all control over his action, but that that feeling had an adequate cause.—QUEEN v. HURI GIREE, 10 W. R. 26, 1 B. L. R. A. Cr. 11. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Aug. 7, 1868.]

ACCUSED was out in the jungles with his gun. An altercation arose between him and deceased, the former interfering to prevent the latter from committing real or supposed cattle-trespass. Deceased thereupon, with a large club, attacked accused, who fired without any particular aim, but lowering the muzzle of the gun, so as not to hit a vital part, and death ultimately resulted from the wound inflicted. Held that accused's act was not a legal exercise of the right of private defence, as it was not necessary for his defence that he should fire: he had only to stand back, and let deceased alone, and he was safe. Held accordingly that the accused was rightly convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—CROWN v. KUREEM BUKSH. Punj. Rec., No. 13 of 1868.

CERTAIN persons, whom the accused, a ferryman, was rowing across the river, were drowned by the sinking of a boat. Held on the facts of this case, that the accused could not be convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, as there was nothing to shew that he acted with the knowledge that he was likely by such act to cause death within the terms of s. 299 of the Penal Code. The prisoner was convicted under s. 282 of that Code of negligently conveying persons by water for hire in a vessel overloaded or unsafe.—In re MAGENEE BEHARA, 11 W. R. 3. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. Jan. 26, 1869.]

WHERE the accused, whose property had frequently been stolen, went out with a lathi to watch his property, and with the lathi struck a thief, who died from the effects of the blows, it was held (having regard to the nature of the injuries inflicted and to the subsequent conduct of the accused) that the case did not fall within the 4th excep. to s. 99, and that the prisoner was not guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but was protected by ss. 97 and 104 of the Penal Code, and had not exceeded the legal right of private defence of property.—QUEEN v. MOKEE, 12 W. R. 15. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. June 28, 1869.]

THE wife of the prisoner had been forcibly taken to the house of the deceased, a native physician, who alleged that her presence was necessary to the due performance of certain incantations. The prisoner, armed with a sword, and watching from the roof of the house, saw his wife being actually violated by the deceased. He jumped down from the roof, and struck deceased with his sword in several places, from the effects of which he died. Held that the prisoner's conviction for murder could not be sustained. The offence committed was culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. RAMTAHAL KAHAR, 3 B. L. R. A. Cr. 33. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. July 12, 1869.]

IN charging a jury in a case of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, a Judge should call upon the jury to state which description of culpable homicide they consider the accused to have committed, s. 304 of the Penal Code prescribing different punishments for that offence. Where the Judge omitted to require the jury to do this, the High Court held that the conviction was for the lighter description of the offence.—QUEEN v. AMEER KHAN, 12 W. R. 35; 6 B. L. R. Ap. 87n. [Jackson and Mitter, JJ. July 23, 1869.

To take the offence of homicide out of the category of murder by reason of grave and sudden provocation, the act must be done whilst the person doing it is deprived of self-control by the grave and sudden provocation. But when the act is done after the excitement had passed away, and there was time to cool, it is murder.—QUEEN v. YASIN SHEIK, 12 W. R. 68; 4 B. L. R. A. Cr. 6. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov. 23, 1869.]

WHERE the accused pleads guilty before a Sessions Judge to a charge of murder, the Sessions Judge might either convict him on that plea of that charge, or proceed to try him on the evidence; but he cannot, without trial, convict the accused of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, to which offence the accused did not plead guilty. Held, with reference to the provisions of ss. 97, 99, and 102 of the Penal Code, that, on the facts of this case, the accused had no reasonable apprehension of danger to himself from the threats of the deceased whom he killed, and that, therefore, the right of private defence of the body did not arise, and the case was not taken out of the category of murder by reason of the 2nd exception to s. 300 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. GOBADUR BHOOYAN, 13 W. R. 55, 4 B. L. R. Ap. 101. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. April 6, 1870.

CERTAIN persons made a sudden attack upon the prisoners for the purpose of cutting their crops. The prisoners resisted, and, having no time to complain to the police, inflicted a wound upon one of the assailants with a bamboo, from the effects of which he afterwards died. The Sessions Judge convicted the prisoners under ss. 148 and 304 of the Penal Code. In appeal, the High Court held on the facts of the case (and following 7 W. R. 113) that the accused, who were in peaceable possession of their property, and were attacked while in such possession, did not exceed the right of private defence of property under s. 103, Penal Code. The High Court accordingly directed an acquittal.—QUEEN v. GOOROO CHURN CHUNG, 14 W. R. 69, 6 B. L. R. Ap. 9. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Nov. 19, 1870.]

WHERE a Sessions Judge, in charging a jury in a case of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, omitted to draw their attention to the two classes of the culpable homicide mentioned in s. 304 of the Penal Code, the High Court considered that the accused were found guilty of the lighter description, and sentenced the accused to the punishment for such lighter description.—QUEEN v. KALICHURN DASS, 15 W. R. 17; 6 B. L. R. Ap. 86. [Mitter and Ainslie JJ. Feb. 11, 1871.]

WHERE an old woman of 70 so beat a lad of 18 as to cause his death, and the Assistant Commissioner was of opinion that the beating was in the shape of chastisement, such as a mother would inflict on a disobedient child, and convicted the accused under s. 304A of the Penal Code, held that the Assistant Commissioner had no jurisdiction in the case, and that he should have committed the accused for trial before the Sessions Court on a charge under s. 304.—MUSSAMUT AUHUCHIA DOSADIN v. MUSSAMUT ANOOP KOONWUR THAKOORANEE, 18 W. R. 23. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. June 26, 1872.]

PRISONER killed his mother by beating and kicking her. The Sessions Judge found that the death resulted from brutal beating and kicking, but acquitted of culpable homicide, because the violence was not such as the prisoner must have known to be likely to cause death. Held that this was no ground for acquitting of culpable homicide not amounting to murder; the question for the Judge was whether the act was done with the intention of causing bodily injury which was likely to cause death. The Sessions Judge convicted the prisoner on the charge of causing death by a rash act. Held that the section was wholly inapplicable. "Culpable rashness" and "culpable negligence" distinguished.—REG. v. NIDAMARTI NAGABHUSHANAM, 7 Mad. H. C. R. 119. [Holloway and Kindersley, JJ. Oct. 24, 1872.] Followed in Empress v. Idu Beg, I. L. R., 3 All. 776, infra.

To enable a person to plead the extenuating circumstances provided for in s. 300, Penal Code, excep. 1, the provocation and its effects must be sudden as well as grave; and the deprivation of the power of self-control must continue in order to benefit a man who kills another under circumstances of grave provocation.—QUEEN v. BECHOO SAOT, 19 W. R. 35. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. Feb. 17, 1873.]

THE High Court as a Court of Reference can only deal with cases in which a sentence of death has been passed. The prisoners, fearful of being punished if they allowed him to escape, and thinking that they were acting lawfully, in furtherance of a plan arranged for them by a police-constable and the lambardar of a village for the capture of an outlaw, for whose arrest a reward had been offered, and in pursuance thereof, killed him while endeavouring to escape. Held that the offence committed came under the third exception in s. 300 of the Penal Code, and was culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. AMAN, 5 N.-W. P. 130. [Spankie and Jardine, JJ. May 2, 1873.]

THE prisoners assaulted a thief so severely that he died. One hundred and forty-one marks of separate blows were found on the body of the deceased; and several of his ribs were broken. Held that s. 304A of the Penal Code was not applicable to the circumstances of the case, and that taking the offence out of the category of murder, it must still come under s. 304.—QUEEN v. MAN, 5 N.-W. P. 235. [Pearson, J. Aug. 4, 1873.]

IN a case in which the accused caused the death of a woman by beating, the medical officer who held the post-mortem examination considered that death resulted from rupture of the spleen, but the Civil Surgeon said that no opinion of the cause of death could be formed. The accused having been convicted of causing grievous hurt, and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment by the Deputy Magistrate, the Magistrate considered that the accused ought to have been committed to the Sessions on a charge of culpable homicide, but recommended that the High Court should enhance the sentence which had been passed to one of sufficient severity to meet the offence. Held that the High Court could not deal with the case in the mode suggested; but, under s. 297, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), the Court annulled the conviction by the Deputy Magistrate, and directed that the accused should be committed to the Sessions on charges of culpable homicide and of grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. HURISH PAL, 20 W. R. 63. [Jackson and Mitter, JJ. Sep. 19, 1873.]

IN a case in which the accused was tried on charges of murder, culpable homicide, and causing grievous hurt, the jury acquitted him of murder, but convicted him on the other counts. This verdict was recorded by the Sessions Judge, who then, in accordance with s. 263, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), questioned the jury as to the grounds for their verdict, and the jury eventually intimated their willingness to convict of murder. The Sessions Judge differed from the first verdict of the jury; but as he had recorded the first verdict, he doubted whether he could accept the second verdict, and referred the case to the High Court under s. 263. Held that s. 263 did not apply to such a case as this. There could be no verdict delivered, and no verdict finally recorded until the last of the questions put by the Sessions Judge to the jury was answered; and as it appeared from the answers of the jury that their findings of facts disclosed that the verdict ought to have been one of guilty on the charge of murder, the Sessions Judge should have entered the verdict of the jury as the verdict of guilty of murder. The case was accordingly returned to the Sessions Judge to enable him to do that, and to pass such sentence as the law directed. It is only when it is necessary in order to ascertain what the verdict of a jury really is that a Judge is justified under s. 263 in putting questions to the jury.—QUEEN v. SUSTIRAM MANDAL, 21 W. R. 1. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Nov. 19. 1873.]

WHERE a prisoner was charged under ss. 304, 325, and 323, and the jury brought in a verdict of guilty under s. 335, held that he was not acquitted of grievous hurt, but found guilty of the offence described in s. 322 with the extenuating circumstances which would confine the punishment within the limits specified in s. 335.—QUEEN v. LUKHINARAIN AGOORI, 23 W. R. 61. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. April 8, 1875.]

WHERE it appeared in the case of a person charged with murder that, while smarting from a severe blow from a stick in the midst of a sudden fight, and possibly apprehensive of further violence, finding a knife at hand, he took it up, and in the mêlée inflicted the wound which caused the death of the deceased, held that, under the circumstances, the accused was guilty, under the Penal Code, s. 304, of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. SOMIRUDDIN, 24 W. R. 48. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. Aug. 20, 1875.]

WHERE the prisoner knocked his wife down, put one knee on her chest, and struck her two or three violent blows on the face with the closed fist, producing extravasation of blood on the brain, and she died in consequence, either on the spot, or very shortly afterwards, held that, there being no intention to cause death, and the bodily injury not being sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the offence committed by the prisoner was not murder, but culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—REG v. GOVINDA, 1 L. R., 1 Bom. 342. [Kemball and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ. July 18, 1876.]

IN the course of a trivial dispute, the accused gave the deceased a severe push on the back, which caused him to fall to the road below, a distance of two-and-a-half cubits. In falling, the deceased sustained an injury from which tetanus resulted, which caused his death on the fifth day after. Held that, on these facts, the accused was not guilty of the offence described in s. 304A of the Penal Code, nor of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, because there was no likelihood of the result following, and, à fortiori, no designed causing of it.—REG. v. ACHARJYA, I. L. R., 1 Mad. 224 [Holloway and Innes, JJ. Jan. 19, 1877.]

UNDER s. 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), the High Court, to which a reference is made by a Court of Session for confirmation of a sentence of death on conviction of murder, cannot, in the absence of an appeal, alter the conviction to one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, if it be of opinion that the evidence does not establish the former but the latter offence. It must order a new trial for that purpose. Where the prisoners were tried on two charges of murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and the opinion of the assessors was taken on both charges, but the Sessions Judge, being of opinion that the evidence established the former charge, recorded a conviction and sentence for murder only, the High Court, being of opinion, on a reference under s. 287 of Act X. of 1872 that the offence proved was culpable homicide not amounting to murder, did not order a new trial, ab initio, but directed the Sessions Judge to complete the trial by recording a finding on the second charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—REG v. BALAPA BIN DANDAPA, I. L. R., 1 Bom. 630. [Melvill and Kemball, JJ. April 26, 1877.]

* WHERE death has resulted from a violent attack, the Magistrate is bound to commit to the Court of Session on a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Conviction of grievous hurt is contrary to law.—IN THE MATTER OF GOPINATH SHAHA, 1 C. L. R. 141. [Markby and Prinsep, JJ. Sep. 6, 1877.]

A SNAKE-CHARMER exhibited in public a venomous snake, whose fangs he knew had not been extracted; and to show his own skill and dexterity, but without any intention to cause harm to any one, placed the snake on the head of one of the spectators. The spectator tried to push off the snake, was bitten, and died in consequence. Held that the snake-charmer was guilty, under s. 304 of the Penal Code, of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and not merely of causing death by negligence, an offence punishable under s. 304A.—EMPRESS v. GONESH DOOBEY, I. L. R., 5 Cal. 351, 4 C. L. R. 580. [McDonell and Broughton, JJ. July 28, 1879.]

WHERE a mother abandoned her child, with the intention of wholly abandoning it, and knowing that such abandonment was likely to cause its death, and the child died in consequence of the abandonment, held that she could not be convicted and punished under s. 304 and also under s. 317 of the Penal Code, but s 304 only.—EMPRESS v. BANNI, I L. R., 2 All. 349. [Straight, J. Aug 4, 1879.]

WHERE a person hurt another, who was suffering from spleen disease, intentionally, but without the intention of causing death, or causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, or the knowledge that he was likely by his act to cause death, and by his act caused the death of such other person, held that he was properly convicted under s. 323 of the Penal Code of voluntarily causing hurt.—EMPRESS v. FOX, I. L. R., 2 All. 522. [Stuart, C.J. Dec. 16, 1879.] Followed in Empress v. Idu Beg, I. L. R., 3 All. 776, infra.

B VOLUNTARILY caused hurt to N, who was suffering from spleen-disease, knowing himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt, but without the intention of causing death, or causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, or the knowledge that he was likely by his act to cause death, and caused grievous hurt to N, from which N died. Held that B ought not to be convicted under s. 304A of the Penal Code of causing death by negligence, but under s. 325 of that Code of voluntarily causing grievous hurt.—EMPRESS v. O'BRIEN, I. L. R., 2 All. 766. [Stuart, C.J., and Spankie, J. Mar. 6, 1880.] Followed in Empress v. Idu Beg, I. L. R., 3 All. 776, infra.

WHERE death results in a fight between two bodies of men deliberately fighting together, a greater proportion of the men composing both sides being armed with deadly weapons, and it being further apparent from the evidence that the man slain was an adult, and that no unfair advantage was taken by the one side or the other during the fight, the offence committed is culpable homicide, but does not amount to murder.—SAMSHERE KHAN v. EMPRESS, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 154; 7 C. L. R. 158. [White and Field, JJ. July 31, 1880. Contra, Empress v. Rohimuddin, 4 C. L. R. 285.

ON a certain evening, M, a common workman, saw N committing adultery with his (M's) wife, and on the following morning, while labouring under the excitement provoked by their misconduct, came upon them, eating food together, while his wife had neglected to provide food for M. M took up a billhook, and killed N on the spot. Held that, if M connected the subsequent conduct of N and his wife with their misconduct of the preceding evening, and regarding it as implying an open avowal of their criminal relations, which, under the circumstances, he might have done, the provocation was sufficiently grave and sudden to deprive him of self-control, and to reduce the offence from murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—BOYA MUNIGADU v. REG, I. L. R., 3 Mad. 33. [Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. April 20, 1881.]

AN accused person, in answer to a charge of murder, stated that he had killed his wife, but that he had done so in consequence of his having discovered her in an act of adultery on the previous day. Held that such a statement did not amount to a plea of guilty on the charge, and that it was the duty of the Court to try whether the provocation therein disclosed was sufficiently grave and sudden to reduce the offence.—NETAI LUSKAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 11 Cal. 410. [Field and Beverley, JJ. Mar. 25, 1885.]

UPON the trial of a person charged with the murder of his wife, it was proved that the accused had entertained well-founded suspicions that his wife had formed a criminal intimacy with another person; that one night the deceased, thinking that her husband was asleep, stealthily left his side, that the accused took up an axe and followed her; found her in conversation with her paramour in a public place, and immediately killed her. Held that the act of the accused constituted the crime of murder, the facts not showing "grave and sudden provocation" within the meaning of s. 300, exception 1, of the Penal Code, so as to reduce the offence to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Queen-Empress v. Damarua (Weekly Notes, 1885, p. 197) distinguished by Straight, Offg. C. J.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MOHAN, I. L. R., 8 All. 622. Straight, Offg. C. J., and Brodhurst, J. June 26, 1886. Referred to in Queen-Empress v. Lochan, I. L. R., 8 All. 635, infra.

AN accused person was convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder in respect of the widow of his cousin, who lived with him. The evidence showed that the accused was seen to follow the deceased for a considerable distance with a gandasa, or chopper, under circumstances which indicated a belief on his part that she was going to keep an assignation, and with the purpose of detecting her in doing so. He found her in the act of connection with her paramour, and killed her with the chopper. Held that the conviction must be altered to one of murder, as the accused went deliberately in search of the provocation sought to be made the mitigation of his offence, and, under the circumstances disclosed, it could not be said that he was deprived of self-control by grave and sudden provocation. Queen Empress v. Damarua (Weekly Notes, 1885, p. 197) and Queen-Empress v. Mohan (I. SUBJECT to the other provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 28 gives power to the High Court and the Court of Session to try any offence under the Penal Code; and the provision it contains as to the other Courts does not cut down or limit the jurisdiction of the High Court or the Court of Session. Three persons were jointly committed for trial before the Court of Session, two of them being charged with culpable homicide not amounting to murder of J, and the third with abetment of the offence. At the trial, the Sessions Judge added a charge against all the accused of causing hurt to C, and convicted them upon both the original charges and the added charge. The assault upon C took place either at the same time as, or immediately after, the attack which resulted in the death of J. Held that the case did not come within the terms of s. 226 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), and the adding to the charge was an irregularity which was not covered by ss. 236 and 237, those sections having no application to such a state of things, but that, inasmuch as the Sessions Judge was addressed by the pleader who appeared for the accused, and heard all the objections raised, and witnesses might have been called for the defence upon the added charge, the provisions of s. 537 were applicable to the case. Held also that the Sessions Judge had power, under s. 28 of the Code, to try the charge, assuming that he had power to add it.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KHARGA, I. L. R., 8 All. 665. [Edge, C. J. Aug. 30, 1886.]

THE prisoner, a fully-developed adult man, was charged with causing the death of his wife, a girl aged about 11 years and 3 months, who had not attained puberty. The death was caused by hæmorrhage from a rupture of the vagina, caused by the prisoner having sexual intercourse with the girl. For the defence it was alleged that he had had sexual intercourse with the girl on several previous occasions without injury to her, and there were circumstances in the case which showed that this was possible, and even not improbable, though the medical evidence was to the effect that, if such intercourse had previously taken place, the penetration was probably not so complete or with so much sexual vigour as on the occasion when the injury was caused. The medical evidence was further to the effect that the girl had not attained puberty, and was immature, and wholly unfit for sexual intercourse; that under such circumstances, sexual intercourse between the prisoner and the girl was likely to be dangerous to her, and to cause injuries more or less serious according to the degree of penetration effected. The prisoner was charged with (a) culpable homicide not amounting to murder under s. 304 of the Penal Code; (b) causing death by doing a rash and negligent act under s. 304A, (c) voluntarily causing grievous hurt under s. 325, and (d) causing grievous hurt by doing an act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others under s. 338. Held that, in such a case, when the girl is a wife and above the age of 10 years and when, therefore, the law of rape does not apply, it by no means follows that the law regards the wife as a thing made over to be the absolute property of her husband, or as a person outside the protection of the criminal law, that no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down that sexual intercourse with a girl under a certain age must be regarded as dangerous and punishable, or over that age is safe and right, but that each case must be judged according to its own individual circumstances, that in such a case the jury have to consider and say whether, under the particular circumstances of the case, having regard to the physical condition of the girl, and to the intention the knowledge, the degree of rashness or negligence with which the accused is shown to have acted on the occasion in question he has brought himself within any of the provisions of the criminal law. Held further that, if the jury were of opinion (a) that the act of the prisoner caused the death of the girl that is to say, that the act of cohabitation on the part of the prisoner had the effect of rupturing the vagina, and so causing the haemorrhage which led to her death, (b) that the act of cohabitation between a fully-developed man like the prisoner and an immature girl like his wife was itself a thing likely to lead to dangerous consequences; (c) that that act was one of such a character as to indicate a reckless indifference to the welfare of the girl, or a want of reasonable consideration about what the prisoner was doing, one which the husband of the girl if he had had a reasonable regard to her welfare, and had exercised reasonable thought as to the act he contemplated doing, would have abstained from doing, they would be justified in finding that the prisoner caused the death of the girl by a rash and negligent act. Under no system of law with which Courts have to do in this country, whether Hindu or Mahomedan or that framed under British rule, has it ever been the law that a husband has the absolute right to enjoy the person of his wife without regard to the question of safety to her.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. HURREE MYTHEE, I. L. R., 18 Cal. 49. [Wilson, J. July, 1890.]

BEFORE a conviction can properly be maintained for the offence of rioting, it is necessary that there should be a clear finding as to the common object of the unlawful assembly, and also that the common object so found should have been stated in the charge in order that the accused person might have an opportunity of meeting it. Where a Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury referred to two possible common objects of an unlawful assembly, one of which only had been set out in the charge-sheet, held that, inasmuch as it was impossible to say which of the two common objects had been accepted by the jury, and it might well have been that they had accepted the one which had not been charged and which consequently the accused had not an opportunity of meeting, the conviction must be set aside. If one member of an unlawful assembly is armed with a deadly weapon, the other members cannot on that account be charged under s. 148 of the Penal Code. It is only the actual person who can be charged under that section.—SABIR v. QUEEN EMPRESS, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 276. [Trevelyan and Banerjee, JJ. Sep. 19, 1894.]

WHERE the prisoner by gripping and squeezing the testicles of deceased reduced them to a pulpy condition, thereby causing an injury which resulted in death due to the shock so inflicted on the nervous system: Held, per Davies, J., that the death was an unforeseen result for which prisoner could not be held liable and that she ought to be convicted under s. 323, Penal Code: Held, per Subramania Ayyar and Benson, JJ., that death was a probable consequence of the prisoner's act, and that she was guilty under s. 304, Penal Code, of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KALIYANI, I. L. R., 19 Mad 356. [Subramania Ayyar, Davies, and Benson, JJ. June 4, July 6 20, 21, 1896.]

A PERSON accused of murder under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code pleaded in defence that he had found his sister having illicit connection with a man named Thakuri, and had in a fit of passion killed them both on the spot. The statement being accepted was held to be a good plea of grave and sudden provocation so as to reduce the offence to one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. CHUNNI, I. L. R., 18 All 497. [Edge, C.J., and Blennerhassett, J. July 24, 1896.]

WHERE an old woman of 70 so beat a lad of 18 as to cause his death, and the Assistant Commissioner was of opinion that the beating was in the shape of chastisement, such as a mother would inflict on a disobedient child, and convicted the accused under s. 304A of the Penal Code, it was held that the Assistant Commissioner had no jurisdiction in the case, and that he should have committed the accused for trial before the Sessions Court on a charge under s. 304.—MUSSAMUT AUHUCHIA DOSADIN v. MUSSAMUT ANOOP KOONWUR THAKOORANEE. 18 W. R. 23. [Kemp and Glover, ]]. June 26, 1872.

PRISONER killed his mother by beating and kicking her. The Sessions Judge found that the death resulted from brutal beating and kicking, but acquitted of culpable homicide, because the violence was not such as the prisoner must have known to be likely to cause death. Held that this was no ground for acquitting of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The question for the Judge was, whether the act was done with the intention of causing bodily injury which was likely to cause death. The Sessions Judge convicted the prisoner on the charge of causing death by a rash act. Held that the section was wholly inapplicable. In distinguishing "culpable rashness" from "culpable negligence," the High Court made the following important observations: Culpable rashness is acting with the consciousness that the mischievous and illegal consequences may follow, but with the hope that they will not, and often with the belief that the actor has taken sufficient precautions to prevent their happening. The imputability arises from acting despite the consciousness (luxuria). Culpable negligence is acting without the consciousness that the illegal and mischievous effect will follow, but in circumstances which show that the actor has not exercised the caution incumbent upon him, and that, if he had, he would have had the consciousness. The imputability arises from the neglect of the civic duty of circumspection. It is manifest that personal injury consciously and intentionally caused cannot fall within either of these categories, which are wholly inapplicable to the case of an act or series of acts themselves intended, which are the direct producers of death. To say that because, in the opinion of the operator, the sufferer could have borne a little more without death following, the act amounts merely to rashness, because he has carried the experiment too far, results from an obvious and dangerous misconception. We have had great hesitation whether we ought not to have remitted this case for a finding, whether the Sessions Judge and the assessors think that the act was done with such knowledge as to constitute culpable homicide. We are, however, averse to re-opening criminal cases unless absolutely compelled to do so, and as the evidence makes out, at least, a case of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and a legal though inadequate sentence (rigorous imprisonment for two years) has been passed, we are able, under s. 426 of the Criminal Procedure Code 1861, simply to dismiss the appeal. As this is neither a case of rashness nor of negligence, it becomes unnecessary to consider whether in any case a conviction under this new section can properly follow, where the rashness or negligence amounts to culpable homicide. It is clear, however, that, if the words 'not amounting to culpable homicide' are a part of the definition, the offence defined by this section consists of the rash or negligent act not falling under that category, as much as of its fulfilling the positive requirement of being the cause of death." —REG. v. NIDAMARTI NAGABHUSHANAM. 7 Mad. WHERE there was medical evidence to show that milk had been administered to a child in such quantities as to kill it, but there was no evidence to show that the milk was administered by the orders of the mother, or that she knew the quantity that was being administered, held that there was not sufficient evidence to bring her within s. 304A of the Penal Code. The Sessions Judge found that the mother could not have been ignorant of the fact that her child was being over-fed, or of the probable consequences of such over-feeding. Such

WHERE an accused was charged with culpable homicide, and the evidence showed that the deceased had an enlarged spleen, and that his death was caused by rupture of the spleen occasioned by blows inflicted by the accused on the body of the deceased, held that it was not sufficient in order to find the accused guilty of a rash act under s. 304A of the Penal Code, that the jury should be satisfied only of the prevalence of the disease of enlargement of the spleen in the district and infer therefrom criminal rashness in beating the deceased; but that they should also be satisfied that the accused was aware of the prevalence of such disease in the district, and also aware of the risk to life involved in striking a person afflicted with that disease. —EMPRESS v. SAFATULLA, I. In falling the deceased sustained an injury from which tetanus resulted, which caused his death on the fifth day after. Held that, on these facts, the accused was not guilty of the offence described in s. 304A of the Penal Code, nor of culpable homicide not amounting to murder because there was no likelihood of the result following, and, a fortiori, no designed causing of it.—REG. v. ACHARJYA, I. S. 304A of the Penal Code does not apply to a case in which there has been a voluntary commission of an offence against the person. If a man intentionally commits such an offence, and consequences beyond his immediate purpose result, it is for the Court to determine how far he can be held to have the knowledge that he was likely by such act to cause the actual result; and if such knowledge can be imputed, the result is not to be attributed to mere rashness; if it cannot be imputed still the wilful offence does not take the character of rashness, because its consequences have been unfortunate. Acts probably or possibly involving danger to others, but which in themselves are not offences, may be offences under s. 336, 337, 338, or 304A, if done without due care to guard against the dangerous consequences. Acts which are offences in themselves must be judged with regard to the knowledge, or means of knowledge, of the offender, and placed in their appropriate place in the class of offences of the same character. Reg. v. Nidamarti Nagabhushanam (7 Mad. Ram!" and one of the accused admitting that he told the woman to say, "Ram! Abetment of suicide.

306. If any person commits suicide, whoever abets the commission of such suicide shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

CHARGE.—That you, on or about the day of , at , abetted the commission of suicide by A B, a person in a state of intoxication, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 306 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session [or High Court]—Crim. Pro Code (Act V. of 1898), Sch. V., Form XXVIII. (l.)

IN a case of suttee three of the prisoners aided a little boy in setting fire to a pile, while another, who did not co-operate in causing the death of the widow, took an active part in causing her to return to the pile, when she had left it after being partially burnt. Held that the first three prisoners were guilty of culpable homicide, and the other prisoner of abetment of suicide only. The High Court made the following remarks: "It is found by the assessors and the Judge that the first three defendants abetted a little boy in setting fire to the pile. The boy was the son of one of the appellants, who ordered him to apply the fire; the others, being present, aided and abetted. It is contended for these appellants that the offence, if proved, is only abetment of suicide, not culpable homicide; but I think that abetment of suicide is confined to the case of persons who aid and abet the commission of suicide by the hand of the person himself who commits the suicide. When another person, at the request of, or with the consent of, the suicide, has killed that person, he is guilty of homicide by consent, which is one of the forms of culpable homicide. In this case, the person who set fire, which caused the death by fire, is just as much guilty of the homicide as if he had fired a gun or thrown the deceased into the river." As to the other prisoner, the High Court remarked as follows: "The Judge simply states as the result of his opinion on the evidence affecting No 10, that, though apparently he did not at first co-operate to cause the death of the widow, he took an active part in causing her to return to the pile. . . . . I am of opinion that, as Umrao Chowdhry did not abet the acts of Nos. 3, 4, and 5 in setting fire to the pile, his action, as found by the Judge, only amounted to an abetment of suicide."—QUEEN v. SAHEBLOLL, 1 R. † The words italicized have been inserted by the Repealing and Amending Act (XII. of 1891).

NEITHER under s. 307, nor under s. 394, of the Penal Code, can a prisoner be sentenced to 14 years' transportation, the punishment awardable under those sections being transportation for life, or rigorous imprisonment for 10 years, with fine.—QUEEN v. BHAMOUR DOOSADH, 7 W. R. 41. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 11, 1867.]

IN order to constitute the offence of attempt to murder under s. 307 of the Penal Code, the act committed by the prisoner must be an act capable of causing death in the natural and ordinary course of events. Alter under s. 511 taken in connection with ss. 299 and 300. Therefore, where the prisoner presented an uncapped gun at F G (believing the gun to be capped) with the intention of murdering him, but was prevented from pulling the trigger, it was held that he could not be convicted of an attempt to murder upon a charge framed under s. 307, but that, under the same circumstances, he might be convicted upon a charge of simple attempt to murder framed under s. 511 in connection with ss. 299 and 300. Unnecessary allegations in a charge may be rejected as surplusage. Apparent inconsistency between the English law with reference to attempts as laid down, Reg. v. Collins (33 Law J., M. C., 177) and the provisions of the Indian Penal Code explained.—REG. v. FRANCIS CASSIDY, 4 Bom. H. C. R. 17. [Couch, C.J., and Westropp, J. Dec. 23, 1867.]

A YOUNG Brahman widow was confined of a child. The chief constable of police, acting, as he stated, on information that the accused was about to kill a baby, went to search her house with a number of men, and found her lying on the first floor, and discovered on the second floor a living new-born child wrapped up in a cloth with a cooking pot turned over it. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused of attempt to murder. The High Court, on appeal, reversed the conviction, on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to support it. It was also held in this case that the chief constable's statement that he "had information that the accused was about to kill the baby," was most improperly admitted as evidence against the accused. Action of the police censured. When a person abets the commission of an offence, and is present at the time when it is committed, he should be tried, under s. 114 of the Penal Code, for the same offence as the principal.—REG. v. CHIMA, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 164. [Gibbs and West, JJ. July 6, 1871.]

THE accused struck the deceased three blows on the head with a stick, with the intention of killing him. The deceased fell down senseless on the ground. The accused, believing that he was dead, set fire to the hut in which he was lying, with a view to remove all evidence of the crime. The medical evidence showed that the blows struck by the accused were not likely to cause death, and did not cause death, and that death was really caused by injuries from burning when the accused set fire to the hut. Held (Parsons, J., dissenting) that the accused was guilty of attempt to murder under s. 307 of the Penal Code. Per Parsons, J.—The accused was guilty of murder under s. 302 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN EMPRESS v. KHANDU, I. L. R., 15 Bom. 194. [Sargent, C.J., and Birdwood and Parsons, JJ. Sep. 23, 1890.]

IN a case in which it was found that all the accused were guilty of rioting armed with deadly weapons, that the fight was premeditated and pre-arranged, a regular pitched battle or trial of strength between the two parties concerned in the riot, and that one of the accused, in the course of the riot, and in prosecution of the common object of the assembly, killed or attempted to kill a man under such circumstances that his act amounted to an attempt to murder, the question arose whether that act could be said to bear a less grave character by reason of excep. 5 to s. 300 of the Penal Code. Per Curiam.—Held that, upon such finding, the case did not fall within the exception. Per Pigot, J. (Petheram, C.J., and Macpherson, J., concurring).—The 5th exception to s. 300 should receive a strict and not a liberal construction; and in applying the exception, it should be considered with reference to the act consented to or authorized, and next with reference to the person or persons authorized, and as to each of those some degree of particularity at least should appear upon the facts proved before the exception can be said to apply. Shamshere Khan v. Empress (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 154) and Queen v. Kukier Mather (unreported) dissented from, so far as they decide that from such a finding as the above consent to take the risk of death is inferred. Per O'Kinealy J.—Before excep 5 can be applied, it must be found that the person killed, with a full knowledge of the facts, determined to suffer death, or take the risk of death; and that this determination continued up to, and existed at, the moment of his death. Queen v. Kukier Mather (unreported) observed on. Per Ghose, J.—No general rule of law can be laid down in determining in cases of this description whether the person killed or wounded suffered death, or took the risk of death, with his own consent, it being a question of fact, and not of law, to be decided upon the circumstances of each case as it arises. Shamshere Khan v. Empress (I. S. 511 of the Indian Penal Code does not apply to attempts to commit murder, which are fully and exclusively provided for by s. 307 of the said Act. A person is criminally responsible for an attempt to commit murder when, with the intention or knowledge requisite to its commission, he has done the last proximate act necessary to constitute the completed offence, and when the completion of the offence is only prevented by some cause independent of his volition.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NIDDHA, I. L. R., 14 All. 38. [Straight, J. Aug. 5, 1891.]

with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both; and, if the woman be quick with child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation.—A woman who causes herself to miscarry is within the meaning of this section.

THE offence defined in s. 312 can only be committed when a woman is, in fact, pregnant. To constitute the act of abetment, however, it is not necessary that the act abetted should be committed. A, a woman, may fail involuntarily in causing abortion, not being pregnant, but B, who instigated her, believing her to be pregnant, may be guilty of abetting an offence.—REG. v. KABUL BATTUR, 15 W. R. 4. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 21, 1871.]

IN a case in which the child was full-grown, the Court declined to convict the accused of causing miscarriage under s. 312, Penal Code—that section supposing an expulsion of the child before the period of gestation is completed—but convicted them of an attempt to cause miscarriage under ss. 312 and 511 read together.—REG. v. ARUNJA BEWA, 19 W. R. 32. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. Feb. 4, 1873.]

A WOMAN is with child within the meaning of s. 312 of the Penal Code as soon as she is pregnant. Held, therefore, where a woman was acquitted on a charge of causing herself to miscarry, on the ground that she had only been pregnant for one month, and that there was nothing which could be called even a rudimentary fœtus or child, that the acquittal was bad in law.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. and, if the act is done without the consent of the woman shall be punished either with transportation for life or with the punishment above mentioned.

If act done without woman's consent.

Explanation.—It is not essential to this offence that the offender should know that the act is likely to cause death.

WHEN a poisonous drug was administered to a woman to procure miscarriage, and death resulted, and it was not proved that the accused knew that the drug would be likely to cause death, &c., they were acquitted by the High Court of murder, and convicted of an offence under s. 314 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. 315. Whoever, before the birth of any child, does any act with the intention of thereby preventing that child from being born alive, or causing it to die after its birth, and does by such act prevent that child from being born alive, or causes it to die after its birth, shall, if such act be not caused in good faith for the purpose of saving the life of the mother, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, or with fine, or with both.

Act done with intent to prevent child being born alive, or to cause it to die after birth.

316. Whoever does any act under such circumstances that, if he thereby caused death, he would be guilty of culpable homicide, and does by such act cause the death of a quick unborn child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Causing death of quick unborn child by act amounting to culpable homicide.

Illustration.

A, knowing that he is likely to cause the death of a pregnant woman, does an act which, if it caused the death of the woman, would amount to culpable homicide. The woman is injured, but does not die; but the death of an unborn quick child with which she is pregnant is thereby caused. A is guilty of the offence defined in this section.

317. Whoever, being the father or mother of a child under the age of twelve years, or having the care of such child, shall expose or leave such child in any place with the intention of wholly abandoning such child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, or with fine, or with both.

Ditto.

Exposure and abandonment of child under twelve years by parent or person having care of it.

Explanation.—This section is not intended to prevent the trial of the offender for murder or culpable homicide, as the case may be, if the child die in consequence of the exposure.

THE prisoner left her child, illegitimate and newly-born, near a road in a thorn-enclosure about 200 yards from the village. The child was found by a traveller, lived for about thirty hours, and then died. It was held that a conviction for murder could not be supported, as it might have been, had the child been left on a barren heath or in an unfrequented place, but that the mother was guilty of abandonment under s. 317.—MUSSAMMAT NANKI v. CROWN, Panj. Rec. No 23 of 1866.

HELD that, where, from the circumstances, it appeared that a child who had been exposed by the prisoner did not die in consequence of the exposure, except in a remote degree, the prisoner, though guilty under s. 317 of the Penal Code, could not be convicted of murder. That section contemplates cases in which death is caused from cold or some other result of exposure.—QUEEN v. KHODABUX FAKEER alias KHUDIRAM FAKEER, 10 W. R. 52. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov. 19, 1868.]

WHERE the prisoner caused the death of her infant child by purposely abstaining from giving the deceased any nourishment, but did not part with the custody of, or abandon, the child, it was held that the prisoner was wrongly convicted of an offence under s. 317, and that the Sessions Judge, in convicting her under s. 304, should have specified the exception under s. 300 which applied to the case.—MUSSAMMAT RAM DAI v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 18 of 1870.

S. 317 of the Penal Code was intended to prevent the abandonment or desertion by a parent of his or her children of tender years, in such a manner that the children, not being able to take care of themselves, may run the risk of dying or being injured.—In re FEIANI HARIANI, 16 W. R. 12. Bayley and Paul, JJ. June 15, 1871.]

K WAS delivered of a child at the house of S, her mother, K's husband being then away in Kashmir. K's mother took the child to the house of K's husband's sister, and placed the child naked at her feet or in her lap, saying, "This is your brother's child." S went away, and the child died some hours afterwards. It was held that S had not committed an offence under s. 317, nor had K abetted any such offence.—CROWN v. MUSSAMMAT KHAIRO, Panj. Rec., No. 33 of 1872.

ACCUSED, a married woman, eloped, leaving her child, 1½ months old, being at the time supported by her milk, in the house of her husband, who was in charge of it jointly with her, who was under the same legal obligation to protect it, and who, the Magistrate found, was certain, as the mother knew, to take care of it. It was held that there was not a "leaving with the intention of wholly abandoning" the child within the meaning of s. 317, and that the conviction was therefore unsustainable.—CROWN v. MUSSAMMAT BHURAN, Panj. Rec., No. 5 of 1878. Referred to and approved in Panj. Rec., No. 4 of 1879, infra.

WHERE a mother abandoned her child with the intention of wholly abandoning it, and knowing that such abandonment was likely to cause its death, and the child died in consequence of the abandonment, held that she could not be convicted and punished under s. 304 and also under s. 317 of the Penal Code, but s. 304 only.—EMPRESS v. BANNI, I. L. R., 2 All. 349 [Straight, J. Aug. 4, 1879.]

ACCUSED, a married woman, quarrelled with her husband, and left his house for her parents' house in another village, leaving her child, aged six months, in her husband's house. Her husband was not in the house at the time, but on his return shortly after he found the door shut, his wife absent, and the child lying on the floor crying. He informed the lambardar, who arranged for supplying milk for the child, and himself went to the thana to report the matter. It was held that, on the facts found, accused had not left her child with the intention of wholly abandoning it within the meaning of s 317, and that her conviction under that section was, therefore, not maintainable. Crown v. Mussammat Bhuran (Panj. Rec., No. 5 of 1878) referred to and approved.—EMPRESS v. MUSSAMMAT BHAGAN, Panj. Rec., No. 4 of 1879.

THE English law on the subject is 24 and 25 Vict., c. 100, s. 27. In order to sustain an indictment under it, it is only necessary to prove that the defendant wilfully abandoned or exposed the child mentioned in the indictment, that the child was then under two years of age, and that its life was thereby endangered, or its health had been or then was likely to be permanently injured. The following facts were held to warrant a conviction on an indictment framed on this section charging the prisoners with abandoning and exposing a child under the age of two years, whereby its life was endangered. One of the prisoners was the mother of a weakly bastard child. When it was five weeks old, both the prisoners put the child in a hamper at S, wrapped up in a shawl, and packed with shavings and cotton-wool, and the mother took the hamper from S to the booking-office of the railway-station at M (a distance of about four miles), and there left it, having paid the carriage of the hamper to G. The hamper was addressed to the lodgings of the child's father at G, and he had told the mother, previous to the child's birth, that, if she sent it to him, he would keep it. The mother told the clerk at the station to be very careful of the hamper, and to send it by the next train, which was done in ten minutes from the time of its delivery at the station. Upon the address were the words: "With care; to be delivered immediately." The hamper was, as above mentioned, duly sent by train, and was delivered at its address in G in a little less than an hour from the time of its being despatched from M. On its being opened, the child was alive, and lived for three weeks afterwards, when it died from causes not attributable to the conduct of the prisoners or either of them.—R. v. FALKINGHAM, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 222; 39 L. J. (M. C.) 47.

A WOMAN, who was living apart from her husband, and who had the actual custody of their child, under two years of age, brought the child on the 19th October, and left it outside the father's door, telling him she had done so. He knowingly allowed it to remain lying outside his door from about 7 P. M. till 1 A. M., when it was removed by a constable, being then cold and stiff. Upon this state of facts, it was held that, although the father had not the actual custody and possession of the child, yet, as he was by law bound to provide for it, his allowing it to remain where he did was an abandonment and exposure of the child by him, whereby its life was endangered, within the meaning of 24 and 25 Vict., c. 100, s. 27.—R. v. WHITE, L. R., 1 C. C. R. 311, 40 L. J. (M.C.) 134.

A WOMAN who was the mother of an illegitimate child, aged at the time about six months, left the child in charge of a blind woman in whose company she was, saying that she was going to get food, and would return shortly. She went away to another village, and did not return. Apparently she never intended to return. Upon these facts it was held by Blair and Aikman, JJ. (dissentiente Knox, J.) that the mother of the child could not properly be convicted of the offence defined by s. 317 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MIRCHIA, I. L. R., 18 All. 364. Knox, Blair, and Aikman, JJ. May 5 1896.]

UPON a charge being preferred against a mother of exposure and abandonment of her child, under s. 317, Indian Penal Code, the Sessions Judge believed that the accused had left the child at a particular spot with the intention that it should be found and cared for by the owner of a neighbouring house. He acquitted her, holding that the offence charged had not been committed, inasmuch as the child had been deliberately placed where it would be (as in fact it was), found and looked after. Held that the acquittal was wrong. The gist of the offence under s. 317 is the exposure or leaving with intention to wholly abandon, and the manner of exposing or leaving, and the consequences likely to ensue are not essential ingredients, though they may be taken into consideration in passing sentence. — KING-EMPEROR v. ANTAKKE, I. L. R., 24 Mad. 662.

318. Whoever, by secretly burying, or otherwise disposing of, the dead body of a child, whether such child die before, or after, or during its birth, intentionally conceals, or endeavours to conceal, the birth of such child, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

OF HURT.*

REPORT OF THE INDIAN LAW COMMISSIONERS ON HURT.

MANY of the offences which fall under the head of Hurt will also fall under the head of Assault. A stab, a blow which fractures a limb, the flinging of boiling water over a person, are assaults, and are also acts which cause bodily hurt. But bodily hurt may be caused by many acts which are not assaults. A person, for example, who mixes a deleterious portion, and places it on the table of another; a person who conceals a scythe in the grass on which another is in the habit of walking; a person who digs a pit in a public path, intending that another may fall into it, may cause serious hurt, and may be justly punished for causing such hurt. But they cannot without extreme violence to language, be said to have committed assaults.

We propose to designate all pain, disease, and infirmity, by the name of hurt.

We have found it very difficult to draw a line between those bodily hurts which are serious, and those which are slight. To draw such a line with perfect accuracy is, indeed absolutely impossible, but it is far better that such a line should be drawn, though rudely, than that offences, some of which approach in enormity to murder, while others are little more than frolics which a good-natured man would hardly resent, should be classed together.

We have, therefore designated certain kinds of hurt as grievous.

We have given this name to emasculation —to the loss of the sight of either eye—to the loss of the hearing of either ear—to the loss of any member or joint—to the permament loss of the perfect use of any member or joint—to the permanent disfiguration of the head or face—to the fracture and to the dislocation of bones. Thus far we proceed on sure ground. But a more difficult task remains. Some hurts which are not, like those kinds of hurt which we have just mentioned, distinguished by a broad and obvious line from slight hurts, may nevertheless be most serious. A wound, for example, which neither emasculates the sufferer, nor blinds him, nor destroys his hearing, nor deprives him of a member or a joint, nor permanently deprives him of the use of a member or a joint, nor disfigures his countenance, nor breaks his bones, nor dislocates them, may yet cause intense pain, prolonged disease, lasting injury to the constitution. It is evidently desirable that the law should make a distinction between such a wound and a scratch which is healed with a little sticking plaster. A beating, again, which does not maim the sufferer, or break his bones, may be so cruel as to bring him to the point of death. Such a beating, it is clear, ought not to be confounded with a bruise which requires only to be bathed with vinegar, and of which the traces disappear in a day

After long consideration we have determined to give the name of grievous bodily hurt to all hurt which causes the sufferer to be in pain, diseased, or unable to pursue his ordinary avocations during the space of twenty days.

This provision was suggested to us by article 309 of the French Penal Code. That article runs thus "Sera puni de la reclusion, tout individu qui aura fait des blessures ou porte des coups, s'il est resulte de ces actes de violence une maladie ou incapacite de travail personnel pendant plus de vingt jours." Reclusion, it is to be observed, signifies imprisonment and hard labour for a term of not less than five, nor more than ten, years.

This law appears from the procès verbal of Napoleon's Council of State to have been adopted without calling forth a single* observation. But it has since been severely criticised by French jurists, and has been mitigated by the French Legislature. Indeed, it ought to have been completely recast. For it is undoubtedly one of the most exceptionable laws in the Code.

A man who means only to inflict a slight hurt may, without intending or expecting to do so, cause a hurt which is exceedingly serious. A push which to a man in health is a trifle may, if it happens to be directed against a diseased part of an infirm person, occasion consequences which the offender never contemplated as possible. A blow designed to inflict only the pain of a moment may cause the person struck to lose his footing, to fall from a considerable height, and to break a limb. In such cases to punish the assailant with five years of strict imprisonment would be in the highest degree unjust and cruel. It is said, and we can easily believe it,† that, in such cases, the French juries have frequently refused, in spite of the clearest evidence, to pronounce a decision which would have subjected the accused to a punishment so obviously disproportioned to his offence.

We have attempted to preserve and to extend what is good in this article of the French Code, and to avoid the evils which we have noticed. It appears to us that the length of time during which a sufferer is in pain, diseased, or incapacitated from pursuing his ordinary avocations, though a defective criterion of the severity of a hurt is still the best criterion that has ever been devised It is a criterion which may, we think, with propriety, be employed, not merely in cases where violence has been used, but in cases where hurt has been caused without any assault, as by the administration of drugs, the setting of traps, the digging of pit-falls, the placing of ropes across a road. But, though we have borrowed from the French Code this test of the severity of bodily injuries, we have framed our penal provisions on a principle quite different from that by which the authors of the French Code appear to have been guided. In apportioning the punishment, we take into consideration both the extent of the hurt and the intention of the offender.

What we propose is that the voluntary infliction of simple bodily hurt shall be punished with imprisonment of either description which may extend to one year, or fine, or both; the voluntary infliction of grievous bodily hurt with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and must not be less than six months, to which fine may be added.

These are the ordinary punishments, but there are certain aggravating and mitigating circumstances which make a considerable difference.

Where bodily hurt is voluntarily inflicted in an attempt to murder the person hurt, we propose to punish the offender with transportation for life, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to life, and cannot be less than seven years. It does not appear to us that, where the murderous intention is made out, the severity of the hurt inflicted is a circumstance which ought to be considered in apportioning the punishment. It is undoubtedly a circumstance which will be important as evidence. A Court will generally be more easily satisfied of the murderous intention of an assailant who has fractured a man's skull, than of one who has only caused a slight contusion. But the proof might be complete. To take examples which are universally known: Harley was laid up more than twenty days by the wound which he received from Guiscard; the scratch which Damien gave Louis the Fifteenth was so slight that it was followed by no feverish symptoms. Yet it will be allowed that it would be absurd to make a distinction between the two assassins on this ground.

We propose that, when bodily hurt is inflicted by way of torture, the punishment shall be very severe. In England, happily, such a provision would be unnecessary. But the execrable cruelties which are committed by robbers in this country for the purpose of extorting property, or information relating to property, render it absolutely necessary here. We propose that in such cases, if the hurt inflicted be what we have designated as grievous, the offender shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to life, and which shall not be less than seven years. Where the hurt is not grievous, we propose that the imprisonment shall be for a term of not more than fourteen years, nor less than one year.

Bodily hurt may be inflicted by means the use of which generally indicates great malignity. A blow with the fist may cause as much pain, and produce as lasting injury, as laceration with a knife, or branding with a hot iron. But it will scarcely be disputed that, in the vast majority of cases, the offender who has used a knife or a hot iron for the purpose of wreaking his hatred is a far worse and more dangerous member of society than he who has only used his fist. It appears to us that many hurts which would not, according to our classification, be designated as grievous, ought yet, on account of the mode in which they are inflicted, to be punished more severely than many grievous hurts. We propose, therefore, that, where bodily hurt is voluntarily caused by means of any sharp instrument, of fire, of any heated substance, of any corrosive substance, of any explosive substance, of any poison, internal or external, or of any animal, the maximum of imprisonment may be increased, in cases of grievous bodily hurt, to fourteen years, in other cases, to three years.

In cases where bodily hurt is voluntarily caused on grave and sudden provocation, we propose to mitigate the punishment. This mitigation is common to cases of hurt and of grievous hurt. But voluntarily causing of grievous hurt on great and sudden provocation will still be punishable more severely than the voluntary causing of hurt not grievous on grave and sudden provocation. The provisions which we propose on this subject are framed on the same principles on which we have framed the law of manslaughter, and may be defended by the same arguments, by which the law of manslaughter is defended.

Hitherto we have been considering cases in which hurt has been caused voluntarily. But hurt may be caused involuntarily, yet culpably. There may have been no design to cause hurt, no expectation that hurt would be caused. Yet there may have been a want of due care not to cause hurt. For these cases of the involuntary yet culpable infliction of bodily hurt, we have provided rules which bear a close analogy to those which we have provided for cases of involuntary culpable homicide.

The provision contained in cl. 329 bears, it will be seen, a close analogy to those contained in cls. 308 and 309. We have provided under the head of Assault for cases in which an assault is committed in an attempt to cause grievous bodily hurt. But there may be most malignant and atrocious attempts to cause grievous bodily hurt without any assault. For example, Z is directed to use a lotion for his eyes. A substitutes for that lotion a corrosive substance intending that it may destroy Z's eyesight. Again: A makes up a letter addressed to Z, and sends it to the post-office, having placed a strongly explosive substance under the seal intending that the explosion may seriously injure Z. These are not assaults; yet they are evidently acts which deserve severe punishment, and that punishment is provided by cl. 329.

Hurt.

319. Whoever causes bodily pain, disease, or infirmity to any person, is said to cause hurt.

WHERE a wife died from a chance-kick on the spleen, inflicted by her husband on provocation given by the wife, the husband not knowing that the spleen was diseased, and showing by the blow itself, and by his conduct immediately afterwards, that he had no intention or knowledge that the act was likely to cause hurt endangering human life, held that the husband was guilty of an offence under ss. 319 and 321 of the Penal Code, and not of an offence under ss. 320 and 322. An admission by the husband in the presence of several witnesses that he had killed the wife, and that she died after receiving the kick, was held to be direct evidence against him.—QUEEN v. BYSAGOO NOSHYO, 8 W. R. 29. [Seton-Karr and Hobbouse, JJ. June 29, 1867.]

THE pain caused by a blow across the chest with an umbrella was held to be not of such a trivial character as to come within the meaning of the Penal Code, s. 95.—GOVT. OF BENGAL v. SHEO GHOLAM LALLA, 24 W. R. 67. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. Nov. 22, 1875.]

Grievous hurt.

320. The following kinds of hurt only are designated as "grievous":—

First.—Emasculation.

Secondly.—Permanent privation of the sight of either eye.

Thirdly.—Permanent privation of the hearing of either ear.

Fourthly.—Privation of any member or joint.

Fifthly.—Destruction or permanent impairing of the powers of any member or joint.

Sixthly.—Permanent disfiguration of the head or face.

Seventhly.—Fracture or dislocation of a bone or tooth.

Eighthly.—Any hurt which endangers life, or which causes the sufferer to be, during the space of twenty days, in severe bodily pain, or unable to follow his ordinary pursuits.

ATTEMPT at murder must not be confounded with causing grievous hurt with dangerous weapons.—GHOLAM RUSSOOL v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 32 of 1865.

THERE must be evidence to prove that hurt, as described in s. 320 of the Penal Code as grievous hurt, has been caused before a conviction can be had under s. 320 of that Code.—QUEEN v. KAMINEE DASSEE, 12 W. R. 25. [Norman and Jackson, JJ. July 6, 1869.]

THE accused were charged with causing grievous hurt. The Joint Sessions Judge, relying apparently on evidence that the injured person remained in a hospital for the space of twenty days, drew from that circumstance alone the inference that he was during that period unable to follow his ordinary pursuits, and convicted the accused under s. 320 of the Penal Code. Held, reversing the conviction, that, in the absence of any evidence that the injured person was unable to follow his ordinary pursuits during the space of twenty days, such an inference could not legally be drawn. Before a conviction can be passed for the offence of grievous hurt, one of the injuries defined in s. 320 of the Penal Code must be strictly proved, and that the eighth clause is no exception to the general rule that a penal statute must be construed strictly. Proof of being in a hospital for the space of twenty days cannot be taken as equivalent to prove of grievous hurt.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VASTA CHELA, I. L. R., 19 Bom. 247. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. Feb. 21, 1894.]

Voluntarily causing hurt.

321. Whoever does any act with the intention of thereby causing hurt to any person, or with the knowledge that he is likely thereby to cause hurt to any person, and does thereby cause hurt to any person, is said "voluntarily to cause hurt."

A DISABILITY for 20 days constitutes grievous hurt. A disability for a fortnight is punishable for voluntarily causing hurt.—QUEEN v. BISHNOORAM SURMA, 1 W. R. 9. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 30, 1864.]

WHERE a wife died from a chance-kick on the spleen, inflicted by her husband on provocation given by the wife, the husband not knowing that the spleen was diseased, and showing by the blow itself, and by his conduct immediately afterwards, that he had no intention or knowledge that the act was likely to cause hurt endangering human life, it was held that the husband was guilty of an offence under ss. 319 and 321 of the Penal Code, and not of an offence under ss. 320 and 322.—QUEEN v. BYSAGOO NOSHYO, 8 W. R. 29. [Seton-Karr and Hobhouse, JJ. June 29, 1867.]

322. Whoever voluntarily causes hurt, if the hurt which he intends to cause or knows himself to be likely to cause is grievous hurt, and if the hurt which he causes is grievous hurt, is said "voluntarily to cause grievous hurt."

Voluntarily causing grievous hurt.

Explanation.—A person is not said voluntarily to cause grievous hurt except when he both causes grievous hurt and intends or knows himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt. But he is said voluntarily to cause grievous hurt, if, intending or knowing himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt of one kind, he actually causes grievous hurt of another kind.

Illustration.

A, intending or knowing himself to be likely permanently to disfigure Z's face, gives Z a blow which does not permanently disfigure Z's face, but which causes Z to suffer severe bodily pain for the space of twenty days. A has voluntarily caused grievous hurt.

THE prisoners having abetted an assault and murder having been committed, it was held, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, that they were guilty of grievous hurt, but not of abetment of murder.—QUEEN v. GOLUCK CHUNG, 5 W. R. 75. [Campbell and Macpherson, JJ. April 28, 1866.]

WHERE A ordered B and C to seize and forcibly take D in the contemplation of an assault upon D, and D was so beaten and tortured that he died, it was held that A was guilty at least of abetting the commission of voluntarily causing grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. DOORGESSUR SURMA, 7 W. R. 61. [Hobhouse, J. April 30, 1867.]

WHERE a wife died from a chance-kick on the spleen, inflicted by her husband on provocation given by the wife, the husband not knowing that the spleen was diseased, and showing by the blow itself, and by his conduct immediately afterwards, that he had no intention or knowledge that the act was likely to cause hurt endangering human life, held that the husband was guilty of an offence under ss. 391 and 321 of the Penal Code, and not of an offence under ss. 320 and 322.—QUEEN v. BYSAGOO NOSHYO, 8 W. R. 29. [Seton-Karr and Hobhouse, JJ. June 29, 1867.]

WHERE a prisoner was charged under ss. 304, 325, and 323, and the jury brought in a verdict of guilty under s. 335, it was held that he was not acquitted of grievous hurt, but found guilty of the offence described in s. 322, with the extenuating circumstances which would confine the punishment within the limits specified in s. 335.—QUEEN v. LUKHINARAIN AGOORI, 23 W. R. 61. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. April 8, 1875.]

323. Whoever, except in the case provided for by section 334, voluntarily causes hurt, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Punishment for voluntarily causing hurt.

A DISABILITY for twenty days constitutes grievous hurt. A disability for a fortnight is punishable for voluntarily causing hurt.—QUEEN v. BISHNOORAM SURMA, 1 W. R. 9. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 30, 1864.]

THE wounding of a thief by a chaukidar in order to effect his arrest held, under the circumstances, to be justifiable.—QUEEN v. PROTAB CHAUKIDAR, 2 W. R 9. [Campbell and Glover, JJ. Jan. 16, 1865.]

THE prisoner and another were squabbling with the husband and son of the witness, Mussammat Mootka, at the door of the house. This witness from inside remonstrated and abused the prisoner. The prisoner then went inside the house, pulled the witness out by the hair of her head, threw her down, and stamped upon her chest and abdomen. She was 17 days in hospital, during three days of which, according to the deposition of the medical officer, her life was in danger.

Held that the hurt came under the eighth head of the hurts which are described as grievous.—QUEEN v. BASSOO RANNAH, 2 W. R. 29. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 30, 1865.]

IN cases of hurt or grievous hurt the question should be considered as to who was the aggressor, and whether the offence was committed in the exercise of the right of private defence.—QUEEN v. SOHUN, 2 W. R. 59. [Campbell and Jackson, JJ. April 10, 1865.]

THE prisoner, having received great provocation from his wife, pushed her with both arms so as to throw her with violence to the ground, and, after she was down, slapped her with his open hand. The woman died, and, on examination, it appeared that there were no external marks of violence on the body, but that there was a certain degree of disease of the spleen, and that death was caused by the rupture of the spleen. Under the above circumstances the prisoner was held guilty of causing hurt, and not of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.—QUEEN v. PUNCHANUN TANTEE, 5 W. R. 97. [Norman and Campbell, JJ. May 28, 1866.]

WHERE a person was tried and acquitted on a charge of using criminal force, he cannot afterwards be charged with committing hurt in respect of the same transaction.—KAPTAN v. G. M. SMITH, 16 W. R. 3; 7 B. L. R. Ap. 25. [Bayley and Paul, JJ. June 7, 1871.]

WHERE a person scourged another with nettles in order to extract property from the sufferer, and the Magistrate tried the case as one of hurt (under s. 323) and extortion (s. 384), although the accused ought to have been charged under s. 327, and tried by the Court of Session, the High Court declined to interfere under s. 404, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), and directed a new trial, believing that substantial justice had been done in the case.—IN THE MATTER OF TARINEE PROSAD BANERJEE, 18 W. R. 8. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. June 14, 1872.]

WHERE, according to the prisoner's own confession (which was the only direct evidence against her), she, with a view to chastising the deceased, her daughter, 8 or 10 years of age, for impertinence, but without any intention of killing her, gave her a kick on the back and two slaps on the face, the result of which was death, held that the conviction should be under s. 323, Penal Code, of voluntarily causing hurt, and the punishment, one year's rigorous imprisonment.—QUEEN v. BESHOR BEWA, 18 W. R. 29. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 9, 1872.]

WHERE a prisoner was charged under ss. 304, 325, and 323, and the jury brought in a verdict of guilty under s. 335, it was held that he was not acquitted of grievous hurt, but found guilty of the offence described in s. 322, with the extenuating circumstances which would confine the punishment within the limits specified in s 335.—QUEEN v. LUKHINARAIN AGOORI, 23 W. R. 61. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. April 8, 1875.]

RIOTING, and hurt in the course of such rioting, are distinct offences, and each offence is separately punishable.—EMPRESS v. RAM ADHIN, I. L. R., 2 All. 139. [Pearson, J. Feb. 13, 1879.]

WHERE a person hurt another, who was suffering from spleen-disease, intentionally, but without the intention of causing death, or causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, or the knowledge that he was likely by his act to cause death, and by his act caused the death of such other person, it was held that he was properly convicted, under s. 323 of the Penal Code, of voluntarily causing hurt —EMPRESS v. FOX, I. L. R., 2 All. 522. [Stuart, C.J. Dec. 16, 1879.]

WHERE the facts found showed that death resulted from violence intentionally directed against the deceased by the accused, the Chief Court, on the revision side, altered the conviction from one under s. 304A to one under s. 323 —EMPRESS v. GANDA SINGH, Panj. Rec., No. 11 of 1880.

A PERSON, without the intention to cause death, or to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, or the knowledge that he was likely by his act to cause death, or the intention to cause grievous hurt, or the knowledge that he was likely by his act to cause grievous hurt, but with the intention of causing hurt, caused the death of another person by throwing a piece of brick at him, which struck him in the region of the spleen and ruptured it, the spleen being diseased. Held that the offence committed was not the offence of causing death by a rash or negligent act, but the offence of voluntarily causing hurt. — EMPRESS v. RANDHIR SINGH, I. L. R., 3 All. 597. [Oldfield, J. Mar. 7, 1881.]

SIX accused persons were charged with, and convicted of, rioting, the common object of which was causing hurt to two particular men. Four of the accused were also charged with, and convicted of, respectively, causing hurt during the riot to the two men and a woman, and were sentenced to separate terms of imprisonment under ss. 147 and 323 of the Penal Code. Held that the sentences were legal. During the course of a riot, in which X was attacked and beaten by several of the rioters, one of them, K, inflicted grievous hurt on X by breaking his rib with a blow struck with a lathi. K and three others of the rioters were charged with offences under ss. 147 and 325 of the Penal Code, and K was convicted under those sections. The other three were convicted under s. 147, and also under s. 325 read with s. 109. Separate sentences were passed on K, and also on the other three for each of the offences. Held that the sentences on K were legal, but that, as there was nothing to show that the other three had abetted the particular blow which caused the grievous hurt, although they had, each of them, assaulted X, the conviction of them, under s. 325 read with s. 109, could not be supported.—IN THE MATTER OF MOHUR MIR v. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS AND IN MATTER OF KALI ROY v. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 725. [Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ. June 12, 1889.]

A WARRANT was issued by a Magistrate for the arrest of one Dalip under s. 114 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The warrant was sent to a certain thana to be executed. It was there, after being copied into a book kept for that purpose at the thana, made over to a particular constable for execution. When the constable to whom the warrant had been made over had left the thana, it was discovered that Dalip was in a village other than that in which he had been supposed to be. Thereupon the officer temporarily in charge of the thana made a copy from the book at the thana, endorsed on the back the names of one Nazir Husain and some other constables, and, having signed the endorsement, sent Nazir Husain and the others out with this paper to arrest Dalip. Nazir Husain and his companions arrested Dalip; but, as they were returning with him in custody, some of Dalip's friends, aided by Dalip himself, attacked them, rescued Dalip, and caused hurt to the police. Held that the police-officers concerned in arresting Dalip under the circumstances above described were not acting in the lawful discharge of their duty within the meaning of s. 332 of the Penal Code, so as to render the accused liable to conviction under that section: but inasmuch as they were acting in good faith under the colour of their office, s. 99 of the Penal Code applied, and Dalip and his associates might be properly convicted under ss. 147 and 323 of the Code. The words "in the discharge of his duty as such public servant" in the earlier portion of s. 332 of the Penal Code, mean in the discharge of a duty imposed by law on such public servant in the particular case, and do not cover an act done by him in good faith under colour of his office. The Queen v. Roxburgh (12 Cox. Cr. Ca. 8) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DALIP, I. L. R., 18 All. 246. [Edge, C.J., and Burkitt, J. Feb. 18, 1896.]

A FIRST-CLASS Magistrate took a case on his file, and commenced a regular enquiry therein under ss. 147 and 324 of the Penal Code; but, after hearing evidence, and being of opinion that only an offence under s. 323 of the Penal Code had been made out, he proceeded to deal with the case summarily. Held that, inasmuch as the evidence adduced was not sufficient to justify a committal, but clearly disclosed an offence over which he had summary jurisdiction, the Magistrate was right in acting as he did. Such a course is different to disregarding part of a charge for the purpose of dealing with a case summarily. The High Court will not interfere where a Magistrate has bonâ fide acted in the interests of justice. Empress v. Abdool Karim (I. L. R., 4 Cal. 18) distinguished.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RANGAMANI, I. L. R., 22 Mad. 459. [Boddam, J. Jan. 10, 1899.]

THE party of the accused accompanied by R went armed with lathis to fish in a tank in which R had a two-anna share. The complainant, who with some other co-sharers, represented an eleven-anna interest in the tank, went there with some of these co-sharers to protest on the ground that the accused had no share or interest in the tank. A fight ensued, in the course of which some of the complainant's party received slight injuries. Held that the accused were rightly convicted of rioting and voluntarily causing hurt under ss. 147 and 323 of the Penal Code. Ganouri Lal Das v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 16 Cal. 206) followed. Pachkauri v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 24 Cal. 686) referred to.—ANANT PANDIT v. MADHUSUDAN MANDAL, I. L. R., 26 Cal 574. [Prinsep and Stevens, JJ. Mar. 22, 1899.]

324. Whoever, except in the case provided for by section 334, voluntarily causes hurt by means of any instrument for shooting, stabbing, or cutting, or any instrument which, used as a weapon of offence, is likely to cause death, or by means of fire, or any heated substance, or by means of any poison or any corrosive substance, or by means of any explosive substance, or by means of any substance which it is deleterious to the human body to inhale, to swallow, or to receive into the blood, or by means of any animal, shall be punished with impri-

CAUSING hurt on grave and sudden provocation to the person giving the provocation is chargeable as an offence under s. 334, and not under s. 324.—REG. v. BHALA CHULA, 1 Bom. H. C. R. 17. [Sausse, C.J., and Forbes and Tucker, JJ. July 29, 1863.]

A PRISONER who, in the commission of lurking house-trespass by night, voluntarily attempts to cause grievous hurt to the owner of the house who tries to capture him, is punishable under s. 460, and not under ss. 457 and 324 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. LUKHUN DOSS, 2 W. THE offence of rioting armed with deadly weapons, and stabbing a person on whose premises the riot takes place, are distinct offences, and punishable as separate offences under ss. 148, 149, and 324 of the Penal Code, s. 149 being read as a proviso to s. 148.—QUEEN v. CALLACHAND, 7 W. HELD that, where the prisoners were charged under s. 148 of the Penal Code of rioting armed with deadly weapons, and also under s. 324 of voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapons, they should have been sentenced only under one or other of these sections, the charges being, properly speaking, only alternative charges. UPON the construction of s. 324 of the Penal Code, held that it is not necessary that the manner of use (of the weapon) must be such as is likely to cause death.—PRO., Nov. 5, 1872, 7 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 11.

UNDER s. 454 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1872, the collective punishment awarded under ss. 147, 148, and 324 of the Penal Code, must not exceed that which may be awarded for the graver offence.—IN THE MATTER OF JUBDAR KAZI; EMPRESS v. JUBDAR KAZI, I. L. R., 6 Cal. 718. [Mitter and Maclean, JJ. Feb. 18, 1881.]

THE offences of rioting armed with a deadly weapon and voluntarily causing hurt with a dangerous weapon to two persons are distinct offences, and a person charged with such offences can be convicted and sentenced in respect of the rioting and of the hurt caused to each of the persons injured. A and B were charged with rioting armed with deadly weapons under s. 148 of the Penal Code, and they were also charged, under s. 324 coupled with s. 149, with causing hurt by a dangerous weapon to X, and B was further charged under s. 324 with causing a like hurt to Y, A being also charged, under s. 324, coupled with s. 149, in respect of the hurt caused by B to Y. A and B were convicted on all charges, and separate sentences, to take effect in succession, were awarded in respect of each offence charged. The offences under s. 324 were committed during the riot. Held that the several acts, with regard to which the prisoners were charged, did not fall within the provisions of s. 71 of the Penal Code, inasmuch as it was not found that the causing of the hurt was the force or violence which alone constituted the rioting, and that consequently, under s. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the several sentences passed were strictly legal. —LOKE NATH SIRCAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 11 Cal. 340. [Tottenham and Ghose, JJ. Mar. 6, 1885.] Overruled by Nilmoney Poddar v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 442, infra.

FOUR persons were charged with being members of an unlawful assembly consisting of themselves and others, the common object of which assembly was resisting the execution of a legal process, namely, the arrest of a judgment-debtor by a Civil Court peon, who went with a warrant for his arrest, accompanied by other persons, A and B, for the purpose of identifying him, and with using force or violence in prosecution of the common object, such force or violence consisting of an assault on the Civil Court peon and another by means of a dangerous weapon on A. The Deputy Magistrate convicted all the accused of offences under ss. 147 and 353 of the Penal Code, and sentenced them to six months' rigorous imprisonment under the former section, and two months' rigorous imprisonment under the latter. He further convicted one of the accused of an offence under s. 324 in respect of the assault on A, and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment in respect of that offence, and directed that the sentences were to take effect one on expiry of the other. Held that the offence of rioting was completed by the assault on A, and that the assault on the peon was a further offence under the first sub-section of s. 235 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held, further, that, even if A had not been assaulted, the conviction and sentences passed for rioting and the assault on the peon were legal, inasmuch as the acts of the accused, taken separately, constituted offences under ss. 143 and 353 of the Penal Code, and combined an offence under s. 147; and, under s. 235, sub-s. 3 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the accused might be charged with, and tried at one trial for, the offence under s. 147, and those under ss. 143 and 353, and therefore also separately convicted and sentenced for each such offence, provided the punishment did not exceed the limit imposed by s. 71 of the Penal Code, as amended by s. 4 of Act VIII. of 1882, which limit had not been exceeded in the present case.—IN THE MATTER OF CHANDRA KANT BHATTACHARJEE v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 12 Cal. 495. [Mitter and Beverley, JJ. Dec. 11, 1885.]

SEPARATE sentences passed upon persons for the offences of rioting and grievous hurt are not legal where it is found that such persons individually did not commit any act which amounted to voluntarily causing hurt, but were guilty of that offence under s. 149 of the Penal Code. Empress v. Ram Partab (I. L. R., 6 All. 121) approved. Loke Nath Sirkar v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 11 Cal. 349) overruled. — NILMONEY PODDAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 442. [Petheram, C.J., and Mitter, Prinsep, Wilson, and Tottenham, JJ. Mar. 21, 1889.]

325. Whoever, except in the case provided for by section 335, voluntarily causes grievous hurt, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Punishment for voluntarily causing grievous hurt.

Cr. of Ses., Presy. Mag., or Mag. of 1st or 2nd class. Cognizable. Summons. Bailable. Not comp.

CHARGE.—That you, on or about the day of , at , voluntarily caused grievous hurt to , and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 325 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session [or High Court.]—Crim. Pro. Code (Act V. of 1898), Sch. V., Form XXVIII. (11.).

IN their 1st Report, the Indian Law Commissioners remark as follows: "An injury to the right hand may, in the case of a clerk, keep him from his work for 20 days, which, if it happened to the left hand, would be of no consequence. An injury to the foot may prevent one man from following his business in which walking is necessary, which, if it happened to another man in a sedentary employment, would not interrupt him at all. The proposed criterion is therefore unsatisfactory, but some criterion is necessary, and it is difficult to devise a better."

IN their 1st Report, the Indian Law Commissioners also remark as follows: "We agree with Mr. Bacon in what we conceive to be his meaning as to the duty of the Judge—that is to say, that he is not to trouble himself with seeking for direct proof of what the offender thought was likely to happen, but is to learn it from the nature of his act, taking him to have intended grievous hurt, or at least to have contemplated it as likely to occur, where he did what everybody knows is likely to cause grievous hurt, and the more certainly drawing his conclusion, when there is evidence of previous enmity against the party who has suffered. If the act was such that nothing more than simple hurt could reasonably be thought likely to ensue from it, then, although grievous hurt may unexpectedly have ensued, it would be his duty to convict the offender of simple hurt only under cl. 323, judging that grievous hurt was not in contemplation; for, according to cl. 322, a person can be convicted of grievous hurt only when the result and the intention correspond, or when grievous hurt has been suffered from an act which was intended to cause grievous hurt, though it may be of a different kind."

THE offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt is punishable by imprisonment, to which fine may be added; and not imprisonment or fine.—QUEEN v. MENAZOODIN, 2 W. R. 33. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Feb. 6, 1864.]

A DISABILITY for 20 days constitutes grievous hurt. A disability for a fortnight is punishable for voluntarily causing hurt.—QUEEN v. BISHNOORAM SURMA, 1 W. R. 9. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 30, 1864.]

THE offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt is punishable, not by fine alone, but by imprisonment, the offender being also liable to fine.—QUEEN v. SHARODA PERHAGUR, 2 W. R 32. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Feb. 3, 1865.]

WHEN there is neither intention, knowledge, nor likelihood, that the injury inflicted in an assault will, nor can, cause death, the offence is not culpable homicide not amounting to murder, but grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. MEGHA MEEAH alias JUCKON MEEAH, 2 W. R. 39. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 8, 1865.]

IN cases of hurt or grievous hurt, the question should be considered as to who was the aggressor, and whether the offence was committed in the exercise of the right of private defence.—QUEEN v. SOHUN, 2 W. R. 59. [Campbell and Jackson, JJ. April 10, 1865.]

HELD, by the majority of the Court (Seton-Karr, J., dissenting), that the offence of administering deleterious drugs, when life was not endangered, is punishable under s. 328, Penal Code, and not as for grievous hurt under s. 326.—QUEEN v. JOYGOPAL alias JUNGLEE, 4 W. R. 4. [Loch, Kemp, and Seton-Karr, JJ. Sep. 8, 1865.]

THE amount of punishment for cutting off a wife's nose for intriguing with another man depends on the time of the commission of the grievous hurt, whether at the instant, or long after, the husband found himself dishonoured.—QUEEN v. SULAMUT RUSSOOA, 4 W. R. 17. [Glover, J. Oct. 24, 1865.]

A SESSIONS JUDGE has no authority to interfere and direct a commitment in the case of a conviction for assault under s 352 or of hurt under s. 323 of the Penal Code, both of them being offences triable by the subordinate Court. When the result of a joint attack by several persons on one party is fracture of the arm of the party assaulted, the offence committed is grievous hurt, and not assault; and, as the attack was made in furtherance of a common object, all are equally guilty of the same offence.—QUEEN v. RAMTOHUL SINGH, 5 W R. 12. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 16, 1866.]

WHERE bone-fractures have been caused in addition to other injuries, the offence committed is grievous hurt triable by a Court of Session, and not hurt cognizable by a Magistrate.—QUEEN v. RAMTOHUL SINGH, 5 W. R. 65. [Jackson and Glover JJ. April 4, 1866.]

THE prisoners having abetted an assault, and murder having been committed, held, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, that they were guilty of abetment of grievous hurt, and not abetment of murder.—QUEEN v. GOLUCK CHUNG, 5 W. R. 75. [Campbell and Macpherson, JJ April 28, 1866.]

WHERE, in a case of robbery attended with death, there was no intention of causing death or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, the conviction was altered from voluntarily causing hurt in committing robbery to voluntarily causing grievous hurt in committing robbery.—QUEEN v. CHAKOR HAREE, 6 W. R. 16. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. June 30, 1866.]

WHERE A ordered B and C to seize and forcibly take D in the contemplation of an assault upon D, and D was so beaten and tortured as to have died in consequence, held that A was guilty at least of abetting the commission of voluntarily causing grievous hurt.—QUEEN v. DOORGESSUR SURNAH, 7 W. R. 61. [Hobhouse, J. April 30, 1867.]

To establish a charge of grievous hurt, it is not necessary to prove that the accused struck the complainant so severely as to endanger the latter's life.—QUEEN v. PURMANUND DEHULIA alias PURMESHUR, 18 W. R. 22. [Glover, J. June 25, 1872.]

THE High Court, in exercise of the powers conferred on it by s. 280 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), altered the conviction in this case by the Sessions Judge from grievous hurt into one for murder, and enhanced the punishment accordingly.—QUEEN v. SUFFIRUDDI PALWAN, 22 W. R. 5; 13 B. L. R. Ap. 23. [Kemp and Birch, JJ. April 22, 1874.]

WHERE a prisoner was charged under ss. 304, 325, and 323 of the Penal Code, and the jury brought in a verdict of guilty under s. 325, held that he was not acquitted of grievous hurt, but found guilty of the offence described in s. 322 with the extenuating circumstances which would confine the punishment within the limits specified in s. 335.—QUEEN v. LUKHINARAIN AGOORI, 23 W. R. 61. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. April 8, 1875.]

To make out the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt under s. 325, Penal Code, there must be some specific hurt voluntarily inflicted, and coming within some of the eight kinds enumerated in s. 320.—QUEEN v. BUDRI ROY, 23 W. R. 65 [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. April 23, 1875.]

AN accused struck a woman, carrying an infant in her arms, violently over the head and shoulders One of the blows fell on the child's head, causing death. Held that the accused had committed hurt on the infant under circumstances of sufficient aggravation to bring the offence within the definition of grievous hurt.—In re EMPRESS v. SAHAE RAE, I. L. R., 3 Cal. 623; 2 C. L. R. 30. [Markby and Prinsep, JJ. April 18, 1878.]

B VOLUNTARILY caused hurt to N, who was suffering from spleen-disease, knowing himself to be likely to cause grievous hurt, but without the intention of causing death, or causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, or the knowledge that he was likely by his act to cause death, and caused grievous hurt to N, from which N died. Held that B ought not to be convicted, under s. 304A of the Penal Code, of causing death by negligence, but, under s. 325 of that Code, of voluntarily causing grievous hurt.—EMPRESS v. O'BRIEN, I. L. R., 2 All. 766. [Stuart, C.J., and Spankie, J. Mar. 6, 1880.]

Followed in Empress v. Idu Beg, I. L. R., 3 All. 776, infra.

THE accused were charged, under s. 149 coupled with s. 325 of the Penal Code, with, while being members of an unlawful assembly, committing grievous hurt. The jury disbelieved the evidence as to the unlawful assembly, but unanimously found two of the accused guilty of grievous hurt under s. 325. Held that such verdict was, under s. 457 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872, legally sustainable, although that offence did not form the subject of a separate charge. S. 457 enables a verdict to be given on some of the facts which are a component part of the original charge, provided that those facts constitute a minor offence. It is only in a case where the jury are not unanimous that a Court may require them to retire for further consideration. Where a verdict is unanimous, it must be received by the Judge, unless contrary to law. Where a Judge dissents from the unanimous finding of a jury given in accordance with the law, the only procedure open to him to follow is that laid down in the fifth clause of s. 263 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872).—GOVT. OF BENGAL v. MAHAMDI, I. L. R., 5 Cal. 871; 6 C. L. R. 349. [Morris and Prinsep, JJ. May 20, 1880.]

WHERE a person struck another a blow, which caused death without any intention of causing death, or of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, or the knowledge that he was likely by such act to cause death, but with the intention of causing grievous hurt, held that the offence of which such person was guilty was not the offence of causing death by a rash act, but the offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt. Adamarti v. Nagabhushanam (7 Mad. H. C. R. 119), Queen v. Pemkoer (5 N.-W. P. 38), Queen v. Man (5 N.-W. P. 235), Empress v. Ketabdi Mundul (I. L. R., 4 Cal. 764), Empress v. Fox (I. L. R., 2 All. 522), Empress v. O'Brien (I. L. R., 2 All. 760) followed. The offences of murder, culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and causing death by a rash or negligent act, distinguished.—EMPRESS v. IDU BEG, I. L. R., 3 All. 776. [Straight, J. Aug. 12, 1881.]

A MEMBER of an unlawful assembly, some members of which have caused grievous hurt, cannot lawfully be punished for the offence of rioting as well as for the offence of causing grievous hurt.—EMPRESS v. RAM PARTAB, I. L. R., 6 All. 121. [Straight, J. Dec. 5, 1883.] Distinguished in Queen-Empress v. Ram Sarup, I. L. R., 7 All. 757, infra; and dissented from in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar, I. L. R., 9 All. 645, infra.

THREE persons, who were convicted (i) of riot under s. 147 of the Penal Code, (ii) of causing grievous hurt in the course of such riot, were respectively sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment under s. 147, and three months' rigorous imprisonment under s. 325. Held by Petheram, C.J., and Straight and Tyrrell, JJ., that, inasmuch as the evidence upon the record showed that the three prisoners had committed individual acts of violence with their own hands which constituted distinct offences of causing grievous hurt or hurt separate from, and independent of, the offence of riot, which was already completed, and the fact of the riot was not an essential portion of the evidence necessary to establish their legal responsibility under s. 325 of the Penal Code, the separate sentences passed under ss. 147 and 325 were not illegal. Queen-Empress v. Ram Partab (I. L. R., 6 All. 121) distinguished. Per Brodhurst, J., that the evidence showed that only one of the three prisoners had caused grievous hurt with his own hands, and that the others could only be properly convicted of that offence under the provisions of s. 149 of the Penal Code, but that the separate sentences passed under ss. 147 and 325 were not illegal. Queen-Empress v. Dungar Singh (I. L. R., 7 All. 29) followed. Also per Brodhurst, J.—Ill. g of s. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply merely to the case of persons who in addition to the offence of rioting have, with their own hands, committed the further offences of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, and of assaulting a public servant when engaged in suppressing a riot, and the convictions referred to in the illustration relate specially to convictions obtained under the provisions of s. 149 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAM SARUP, I. L. R., 7 All. 757. [Petheram, C.J., and Straight, Brodhurst, and Tyrrell, JJ. May 12, 1885.] Referred to in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar, I. L. R., 9 All. 645, infra; and approved in Queen-Empress v. Bana Punja, I. L. R., 17 Bom. 260, infra, under s. 326.

S. 149 of the Penal Code creates no offence, but was intended to make it clear that an accused person whose case falls within its terms cannot put forward the defence that he did not with his own hand commit the offence committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly, or such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object. In prosecution of the common object of an unlawful assembly, M, with his own hand, caused grievous hurt. M and other members of the assembly, as to whom it did not appear whether or not any of them personally used force or violence, were convicted of rioting under s. 147 and grievous hurt under s. 325 of the Penal Code, and were each sentenced to separate terms of imprisonment for each offence. The highest aggregate punishment, which was M's, was six years' rigorous imprisonment, being one year for rioting and five years for causing grievous hurt. Held that, assuming s. 71 of the Penal Code to be applicable, the sentences were not illegal, as the combined periods of imprisonment did not, in the case of any prisoner, exceed the maximum punishment of seven years' rigorous imprisonment which could have been awarded for the offence punishable under s. 325. Held also that the riot could not in any of the cases be considered a part of the offence under s. 325, that s. 71 did not apply, and that the sentences were legal Queen-Empress v. Ram Partab (I. L. R., 6 All. 121) dissented from. Queen-Empress v. Dungar Sing (I. L. R., 7 All. 29), Queen-Empress v. Ram Sarup (I. L. R., 7 All. 757), Queen v. Rubbee-oollah (7 W. R. 13), Luke Nath Sarkar v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 11 Cal. 349), Queen-Empress v. Pershad (I. L. R., 7 All. 414), Chandra Kant Bhattacharjee v. Queen-Empress (I. L. R., 12 Cal. 498), and Reg. v. Tukaya bin Tamana (I. L. R., 1 Bom. 214), referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BISHESHAR, I. L. R., 9 All. 645. [Edge, C.J., and Brodhurst, J. May 16, 1887.]

THE accused were charged before a Magistrate of the second class with causing grievous hurt as members of an unlawful assembly under ss. 149 and 325 of the Penal Code. The evidence showed that one of the accused had used an axe in causing the hurt. The Magistrate apparently ignored this fact, and he convicted the accused under s. 325 of the Code. The accused appealed The District Magistrate who heard one appeal, and the First-class Magistrate who heard the rest of the appeals, were both of opinion that the offence committed by the accused was one of causing grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon within the meaning of s. 326 of the Penal Code, and as such beyond the jurisdiction of the Second-class Magistrate. But they did not think it proper, under the circumstances of the case, to quash the convictions. The Sessions Judge, on examining the record of the case, was of opinion that, as the offence committed by the accused was not cognizable by the trying Magistrate, his proceedings were void ab initio under s 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He, therefore, referred the case to the High Court, and recommended that the convictions under s. 325 should be set aside. Held that the proceedings before the Second-class Magistrate were not void ab initio, as he had jurisdiction to try the accused for offences punishable under ss. 149 and 325 of the Penal Code, with which they were originally charged. Held, also, that, though it was the duty of the trying Magistrate, when the evidence disclosed a circumstance of aggravation, such as the use of a dangerous weapon, which made the offence cognizable by a higher Court, to adopt the proper procedure to send the case to the higher Court, still it was not necessary to quash the proceedings, as the accused were not in any way prejudiced, and the sentences were not inadequate.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GUNDYA, I. L. R., 13 Bom. 502. [Jardine and Candy, JJ. Jan. 28, 1889.]

SIX accused persons were charged with and convicted of rioting, the common object of which was causing hurt to two particular men. Four of the accused were also charged with, and convicted of, respectively, causing hurt during the riot to the two men and a woman, and were sentenced to separate terms of imprisonment under ss. 147 and 323 of the Penal Code. Held that the sentences were legal. During the course of a riot, in which X was attacked and beaten by several of the rioters, one of them, K, inflicted grievous hurt on X by breaking his rib with a blow struck with a lathi; K and three others of the rioters were charged with offences under ss. 147 and 325 of the Penal Code, and K was convicted under those sections. The other three were convicted under s. 147, and also under s. 325 read with s. 109. Separate sentences were passed on K and also on the other three for each of the offences. Held that the sentences on K were legal, but that, as there was nothing to show that the other three had abetted the particular blow which caused the grievous hurt, although they had each of them assaulted X, the conviction of them, under s. 325 read with s. 109, could not be supported.—IN THE MATTER OF MOHUR MIR v. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS AND IN THE MATTER OF KALI ROY v. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 16 Cal. 725. [Trevelyan and Beverley, JJ. June 12, 1889.]

THE prisoner, a fully-developed adult man, was charged with causing the death of his wife, a girl aged about 11 years and 3 months, who had not attained puberty. The death was caused by hæmorrhage from a rupture of the vagina caused by the prisoner having sexual intercourse with the girl For the defence, it was alleged that he had had sexual intercourse with the girl on several previous occasions without injury to her, and there were circumstances in the case which showed that this was possible, and even not improbable, though the medical evidence was to the effect that, if such intercourse had previously taken place, the penetration was probably not so complete or with so much sexual vigour as on the occasion when the injury was caused. The medical evidence was further to the effect that the girl had not attained puberty, and was immature and wholly unfit for sexual intercourse: that, under such circumstances, sexual intercourse between the prisoner and the girl was likely to be dangerous to her, and to cause injuries more or less serious according to the degree of penetration effected. The prisoner was charged with (a) culpable homicide not amounting to murder under s. 304 of the Penal Code; (b) causing death by doing a rash and negligent act under s 304A; (c) voluntarily causing grievous hurt under s 325; and (d) causing grievous hurt by doing an act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others under s 338. Held that, in such a case, when the girl is a wife and above the age of 10 years, and when therefore the law of rape does not apply, it by no means follows that the law regards the wife as a thing made over to be the absolute property of her husband or as a person outside the protection of the criminal law, that no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down that sexual intercourse with a girl under a certain age must be regarded as dangerous and punishable, or over that age as safe and right, but that each case must be judged according to its own individual circumstances; that in such a case the jury have to consider and say whether, under the particular circumstances of the case, having regard to the physical condition of the girl, and to the intention, the knowledge, the degree of rashness or negligence with which the accused is shown to have acted on the occasion in question, he has brought himself within any of the provisions of the criminal law. Held, further, that, if the jury were of opinion (a) that the act of the prisoner caused the death of the girl, that is to say, that the act of cohabitation on the part of the prisoner had the effect of rupturing the vagina, and so causing the hæmorrhage which led to her death; (b) that the act of cohabitation between a fully-developed man like the prisoner and an immature girl like his wife was itself a thing likely to lead to dangerous consequences; (c) that that act was one of such a character as to indicate a reckless indifference to the welfare of the girl or a want of reasonable consideration about what the prisoner was doing, one which the husband of the girl, if he had had a reasonable regard to her welfare, and had exercised reasonable thought as to the act he contemplated doing, would have abstained from doing, they would be justified in finding that the prisoner caused the death of the girl by a rash and negligent act. Under no system of law with which Courts have to do in this country, whether Hindu or Mahomedan, or that framed under British rule, has it ever been the law that a husband has the absolute right to enjoy the person of his wife without regard to the question of safety to her.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. HURREE HOHUN MYTHEE, I. L. R., 18 Cal. 49. [Wilson, J. July 25, 26, 1890.]

AN accused in a trial by jury is entitled to the verdict of the jury on questions of fact, and where a verdict is vitiated owing to misdirection by the Judge, the Appeal Court has no option but to set aside the verdict and direct a re-trial. Were the Appeal Court to go into the facts in such a case, it would be substituting the decision of the Judges of that Court for the verdict of the jury, who have the opportunity of seeing the demeanour of the witnesses, and weighing the evidence with the assistance which this affords, whereas the Judges of the Appeal Court can only arrive at a decision on the perusal of the evidence. Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales, L. R. (1894), A. C. 57, referred to. S. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not warrant an Appeal Court, in a case where there has been misdirection in a charge to a jury, going into the evidence with a view to decide whether there is sufficient evidence to justify a conviction. Under s. 418 an appeal in a case tried by a jury lies on matters of law only, and the Appeal Court has no power to try the accused on matters of fact. The word "erroneous" in cl. (d) of s. 423 must not be read as "wrong on the facts," but must be read in connection with the words that follow as meaning that the verdict has been vitiated and rendered bad or defective by reason of a misdirection or a misunderstanding of the law. Fourteen accused were charged with rioting armed with deadly weapons, and with murder and causing grievous hurt during such riot. The common object alleged by the prosecution was to compel the payment of certain money by one of the persons of the opposite party. Some of the accused who admitted their presence at the scene of the occurrence, stated that they had been attacked on account of an allegation being made that one of the opposite party had enticed away another's wife, and that they had merely acted in self-defence. The case was tried before a jury, and on the close of the case for the prosecution, the Sessions Judge, considering that possibly the common object alleged by the prosecution might be considered not to have been proved, amended the charge, and added an alternative common object to it, viz., that the object of the assembly was to punish one of the opposite party for enticing away another's wife. There was no evidence on the record to prove

ply.—In the Matter of Jothe Ghorahe, 1 W. R. 7. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 18, 1864.]

The offence of administering deleterious drugs, when life was not endangered, is punishable under s. 328, Penal Code, and not as for grievous hurt under s. 326.—Queen v. Joygopal alias Junglee, 4 W. R. 4. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Sep. 8, 1865.]

Held that a person who placed in his toddy-pots juice of the milk-bush, knowing that, if taken by a human being, it would cause injury, and with the intention of thereby detecting an unknown thief who was in the habit of stealing the toddy from such pots, and which toddy was drunk by, and caused injury to, certain soldiers who purchased it from an unknown vendor, was rightly convicted, under s. 328 of the Penal Code, of "causing to be taken an unwholesome thing with intent to cause injury," and that s. 81, which says that, "if an act be done without any criminal intention to cause harm, it is not an offence," did not apply to the case.—Reg. v. Dhania Daji, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 59. [Newton and Tucker, JJ. July 23, 1868.]

Voluntarily causing hurt to extort confession, or to compel restoration of property.

330. Whoever voluntarily causes hurt for the purpose of extorting from the sufferer, or from any person interested in the sufferer, any confession or any information which may lead to the detection of an offence or misconduct, or for the purpose of constraining the sufferer or any person interested in the sufferer to restore, or to cause the restoration of, any property or valuable security, or to satisfy any claim or demand, or to give information which may lead to the restoration of any property or valuable security, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

(a.) A, a police-officer, tortures Z in order to induce Z to confess that he committed a crime. A is guilty of an offence under this section.

(b.) A, a police-officer, tortures B to induce him to point out where certain stolen property is deposited. A is guilty of an offence under this section.

(c.) A, a revenue-officer, tortures Z in order to compel him to pay certain arrears of revenue due from Z. A is guilty of an offence under this section.

(d.) A, a zemindar, tortures a raiyat in order to compel him to pay his rent. A is guilty of an offence under this section.

In this section the word "offence" denotes a thing punishable under this Code, or under any special or local law as defined in this Code.—S. 40, Penal Code.

To bring a case under s. 330 of the Penal Code it must be proved that the hurt to the complainant was caused with intent to extort a confession of some offence or misconduct

* In ss. 329 and 330, the word "offence" denotes a thing punishable under this Code, or under any special or local law as defined in ss. 41 and 42 of this Code.—See s. 40 of this Code, supra.

punishable under the Penal Code. That section, therefore, does not apply to a case where the confession extorted had reference to a charge of witchcraft.—QUEEN v. BABOO MOONDU, 13 W. R. 23. [Kemp and Jackson, JJ. Feb. 12, 1870.]

A CHARGE may be made under s. 330 of causing hurt for the purpose of extorting information which might lead to the detection of an offence, even if the supposed offence has not been committed. The offence which that section intended to describe is that of inducing a person by hurt to make a statement or a confession, having reference to an offence or misconduct; and whether that offence or misconduct has been committed is wholly immaterial.—QUEEN v. NIM CHAND MOOKERJEE, 20 W. R. 41. [Markby and Birch, JJ. June 27, 1873.]

E B, in order to constrain his wife to satisfy his demand that she should return to his house, voluntarily caused hurt to her. He was convicted under s. 330 of the Penal Code. Held, on appeal, that the conviction under that section was bad.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ELLA BOYAN, I. L. R., 11 Mad., 257. [Kernan and Brandt JJ. Aug. 9, 1887.]

A POLICEMAN who stands by, acquiescing in an assault on a prisoner committed by another policeman for the purpose of extorting a confession, is guilty of abetment of an offence under s. 330 of the Indian Penal Code. Nothing but fear of instant death is a defence for a policeman who tortures any one by order of a superior. The maxim respondeat superior has no application in such a case. Under the Bombay Police Act (Bom. Act IV. of 1890) every police-officer is bound to shelter a person in custody, and to arrest persons committing assaults likely to cause grievous bodily injury. If he omits to perform this duty, he is guilty of abetment. When the law imposes a duty to act on a person, his illegal omission to act renders him liable to punishment.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. LATIFKHAN, I. L. R., 20 Bom. 394. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. Mar. 12, 1895.]

331. Whoever voluntarily causes grievous hurt for the purpose of extorting from the sufferer, or from any person interested in the sufferer, any confession or any information which may lead to the detection of an offence or misconduct, or for the purpose of constraining the sufferer or any person interested in the sufferer to restore, or to cause the restoration of, any property or valuable security, or to satisfy any claim or demand, or to give information which may lead to the restoration of any property or valuable security, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

EIGHT persons, who were charged with a number of others, were tried on various charges consisting of rioting armed with deadly weapons (s. 148, Penal Code), assaulting or obstructing a public servant when suppressing a riot (s. 152), and voluntarily causing hurt and grievous hurt to deter a public servant from his duty (ss. 332 and 333). The common object set out in the charge was "to resist the execution of a decree obtained by Suresh Chunder Deb against Shaik Ali Yar in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge of Alipore, dated 30th April 1891, and also by means of criminal force, or show of criminal force, to overawe the members of the police-force in the execution of their lawful powers as police-officers," and it was held that resistance to the police was one of the component parts of the offence of rioting charged. At the trial in the Court of Session all eight accused were convicted of the offence charged under s. 148, and each was sentenced to the maximum punishment allowed under that section, viz., three years' rigorous imprisonment. Seven out of the eight were convicted of offences under s. 152, and sentenced each to an additional term of two years' rigorous imprisonment for those offences. Two out of the seven accused were further convicted of offences under s. 332 of the Penal Code, the hurt therein charged being caused to police-officers engaged in suppressing the riot, and each sentenced to a further additional term of two years' rigorous imprisonment for that offence. The eighth accused who was not convicted of an offence under s. 152 was convicted of an offence under s. 333, the grievous hurt being similarly caused to a police-officer, and for that offence was sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment in addition to the sentence of three years passed on him under s. 148. It was contended on appeal—(1) that the sentences passed under s. 152 in addition to those under s. 148 were illegal; (2) that separate sentences under s. 152 and ss. 332 and 333 were illegal; (3) that the cumulative sentences under s. 148 and ss. 332 and 333 were illegal in so far as they exceeded the maximum sentence provided for either of the offences. Held, as regards (1), that, as resistance to the police was one of the component parts of the offence of rioting of which the accused were convicted and sentenced to the maximum punishment provided by s. 148, and having regard to the provisions of s. 71, the additional sentences under s. 152 were illegal. Held, further, that s. 152 contemplates an assault or obstruction to some particular public servant; and that, as the charge against the accused as framed was merely to the effect that they assaulted and obstructed members of the police force in the discharge of their duties, &c., the conviction under that section could not be upheld. Held, as regards (2), that separate sentences under s. 152 and ss. 332 and 333 were illegal, as the hurt inflicted on the police-officers was the violence used towards them which constituted the essence of the offence under s. 152. Held, as regards (3), that the separate sentences passed under s. 148 and ss. 332 and 333 were not illegal, there being nothing in s. 71 of the Penal Code which limits the amount of punishment that may be imposed for these offences.—FERASAT v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. S. 304A of the Penal Code does not apply to a case in which there has been the voluntary commission of an offence against the person. If a man intentionally commits such an offence, and consequences beyond his immediate purpose result, it is for the Court to determine how far he can be held to have the knowledge that he was likely by such act to cause the actual result; and, if such knowledge can be imputed, the result is not to be attributed to mere rashness. If it cannot be imputed, still the wilful offence does not take the character of rashness, because its consequences have been unfortunate. Acts, probably or possibly involving danger to others, but which in themselves are not offences may be offences under s. 336, 337, 338, or 304A if done without due care to guard against dangerous consequences. Acts, which are offences in themselves, must be judged with regard to the knowledge, or means of knowledge, of the offender, and placed in their appropriate place in the class of offences of the same character.—EMPRESS v. KETABDI MUNDUL, I L. DEFENDANT was convicted under s. 338 of the Penal Code of causing grievous hurt. The evidence showed that the defendant was being driven in a carriage to her house through the streets of the town between the hours of 7 and 8 P.M.; that the carriage was being driven at an ordinary pace and in the middle of the road; that the night was dark and the carriage without lamps, but that the horse-keeper and coachman were shouting out to warn foot-passengers; that the defendant's carriage came into contact with the complainant's father, an old deaf man; and that complainant's father was thereupon knocked down, run over, and killed. Held, upon a reference, that the question for the Court was, whether there was any evidence that the death of the deceased was induced by an act negligently and rashly directed by the accused, and that there was no such evidence. The conviction was accordingly quashed.—PRO, Aug. 17, 1871, 6 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 31.

OF WRONGFUL RESTRAINT AND WRONGFUL CONFINEMENT.*

REPORT OF THE INDIAN LAW COMMISSIONERS ON WRONGFUL RESTRAINT AND WRONGFUL CONFINEMENT.

BY wrongful restraint we mean the keeping a man out of a place where he wishes to be, and has a right to be. Wrongful confinement, which is a form of wrongful restraint, is the keeping a man within limits out of which he wishes to go, and has a right to go.

The offence of wrongful restraint, when it does not amount to wrongful confinement, and when it is not accompanied with violence, or with the causing of bodily hurt, is seldom a serious offence, and we propose, therefore, to visit it with a light punishment.

The offence of wrongful confinement may be also a slight offence. But, when attended by aggravating circumstances, it may be one of the most serious that can be committed.

One aggravating circumstance is the duration of the confinement. Confinement for a quarter of an hour may sometimes be a mere frolic, which would deserve only a nominal punishment, which, indeed, might be so harmless as not to amount to an offence. But wrongful confinement continued during many days will always be a most serious offence. We have attempted to frame the law on this subject in such a manner as to give the offender a strong motive for abridging the detention of his prisoner. Another aggravating circumstance is the circumstance that the offender persists in wrongfully confining a person notwithstanding an order issued by a competent authority for the liberation or production of that person. The mode in which these orders are to be issued will be set forth in the Code of Procedure. A third aggravating circumstance is the circumstance that the offender uses criminal confinement for purposes of extortion. For all these aggravated forms of wrongful confinement, we have provided severe punishment.

We have also provided a separate punishment for a person who, while detaining another in wrongful confinement, omits to supply his prisoner with every thing necessary to health, ease, and comfort. The effect of this provision is that a person who wrongfully confines another will be answerable for any bodily hurt which he may cause by wrongfully omitting so to supply his prisoner.

Exception.—The obstruction of a private way over land or water, which a person, in good faith, believes himself to have a lawful right to obstruct, is not an offence within the meaning of this section.

WHERE a police-officer refused to let a person go home until he had given bail, he was held to have been guilty of wrongful restraint under s. 339 of the Penal Code.—SHEO SARUN SAHAI v. MAHOMED FAZIL KHAN, 10 W. R. 20. [Loch and Glover, JJ. July 17, 1868.]

MALICE is not an essential ingredient in the offence of "wrongful confinement" as defined by s. 340 of the Penal Code. The offence is complete when a person is wrongfully restrained in such a manner as to be prevented from proceeding beyond certain circumscribing limits. And a person is wrongfully restrained when he is voluntarily obstructed so as to be prevented from proceeding in any direction in which he has a right to proceed. The accused, as abkari-inspector, visited a toddy-shop where the complainant and one Dhanjibhai were employed as agents for the sale of toddy. Having reason to suspect that an offence under the Abkari Act (Bom. Act V. of 1878) had been committed, the accused made an inquiry, in the course of which the complainant made certain statements implicating his fellow-servant. The accused thereupon resolved to prosecute Dhanjibhai, and make the complainant a witness in the case. In order to prevent him being tutored, the accused ordered his sepoy to bring the complainant to his camp, and there detained him during the night, and, on the following morning, sent him in charge of a sepoy to a Magistrate's Court, where the complainant repeated the statements made by him before the accused. He was then allowed to go away. The accused prosecuted Dhanjibhai, and, in the course of his trial, admitted in his deposition that he had ordered his sepoy to bring the complainant to his camp, and had detained him there during the night. After the termination of Dhanjibhai's trial, the complainant charged the accused with wrongful confinement under s. 342 of the Penal Code. The accused pleaded that the complainant had voluntarily come to his tent to have his statements reduced to writing, and that he had, of his own accord, stopped in his camp during the night. The trying Magistrate held this plea proved, and discharged the accused under s. 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882). The Sessions Judge held that, though the accused had detained the complainant in his camp during the night, still he was not guilty of any offence under the Penal Code, as he had acted without malice, and to the best of his judgment. He, therefore, declined to interfere, or order any further enquiry. Held, by the High Court on revision, that the trying Magistrate had wrongly omitted to take into consideration the admissions made by the accused in his deposition in Dhanjibhai's case. Those admissions had an important bearing on the present case. They were admissible in evidence against the accused, and, as they were left out of consideration, the inquiry was necessarily incomplete and imperfect. Further inquiry was, therefore, ordered. The mere circumstance that the accused had acted without malice, and to the best of his judgment, did not protect him, if his act otherwise satisfied the definition of s. 340 of the Penal Code.—DHANIA v. F. BY English law, to constitute the injury of false imprisonment, two points are requisite: (1) the detention of the person, and (2) the unlawfulness of such detention. Every confinement of the person is an imprisonment, whether it be in a common prison, or in a private house, or in the stocks, or even by forcibly detaining one in the public streets. Unlawful or false imprisonment consists in such confinement or detention without sufficient authority; false imprisonment also may arise by executing a lawful warrant or process at an unlawful time, as on a Sunday.—BLACK. COM., vol. 3, p. 136.

THE plaintiff, accused of a certain offence for which he was not arrestable without warrant, received a letter from the District Superintendent of Police, directing him to proceed to Russulkonda to present himself before a Magistrate. Two constables were directed to accompany him to prevent him from speaking to any one. They, in fact, accompanied him to the place. The High Court held that this amounted to wrongful confinement, and awarded Rs. 200 damages with costs to be paid by the District Superintendent of Police.—PARANKUSAM NARASAYA PANTULU v. CAPTAIN R. It requires merely that there should be an invasion of right, and diminution of the value of one's property, caused by that invasion of right, which must have been contemplated by the doer of it when he did it. —IN THE MATTER OF JUGGESWAR DASS; JUGGESWAR DASS v. KOYLASH CHUNDER CHATTERJEE, I. L. R., 12 Cal. 55. [Garth, C.J., and Prinsep, Wilson, Field, and O'Kinealy, JJ. Sep. 4, 1885.]

WHERE an accused person alleges that an offence with which he is charged has been compounded so as to take away the jurisdiction of the Criminal Courts to try it, the onus is on him to show that there was a composition valid in law. M, a European British subject, charged with the compoundable offences of wrongful restraint and wrongful confinement of coolies employed on a tea garden of which he was the manager, pleaded that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the cases, as they had been compounded by the complainants. The alleged compromise consisted in a Bengali paper signed by the coolies, stating that they "made rasinama" (compromise) "of the case of their own accord," and a paper in English signed by M, these papers being given to the District Superintendent of Police, who had investigated the complaints, and who stated that he asked the coolies as to the contents of the Bengali paper, and they said that they had signed it voluntarily, and stated its purport; and that one of them said in the presence of the others that it was a rasinama. G, one of the coolies, also wrote on the paper the words in Uriya, "I will not carry on the case." The Bengali paper was written by the darogah of the police station in presence of M. The paper signed by M was as follows: "I hereby agree with these Ganjam people that there shall be no legal proceedings of any kind taken against them with the exception of those who have not completed their agreements. Those whose agreements have not been completed, proceedings will be taken against them on 22nd May, if they have not returned to the garden before then." Neither of the papers were explained to G, so as to make them intelligible to him; for, though the Bengali paper was read out, G did not understand that language. G was one of the coolies who had completed his agreement with M. Held per Prinsep, J.: The compounding of an offence signifies that the person against whom the offence has been committed has received some gratification to act as an inducement for his desiring to abstain from a prosecution; here there was no forbearance on the part of M to proceed against G, who had served out the term of his engagement, and, therefore, there was no consideration for the agreement to compound. Having regard, moreover, to the ignorance and inferior intelligence of G, it was of vital importance for M to show what led to the alleged agreement, and how it was that the darogah was instrumental to it, which he had not done. Per Trevelyan, J.: Compounding an offence supposes an arrangement by which the parties have settled their differences, and, in the more usual acceptation of the term, implies that the prosecutor has received some consideration or gratification for dropping the prosecution. Although the provisions of the Contract Act may not apply, the proof of the arrangement must be similar to that which the Court requires for the proof of any agreement which is in issue; and, unless it appears that the parties were free from influence of every kind, and were fully aware of their respective rights, it would be impossible to give effect to a so-called arrangement or composition. Having regard to the fact that the writer of the Bengali agreement had not been called, and that the contracting parties were, on the one side, ignorant coolies, strangers to the land, and to the language in which the document was written, and on the other a European of some education, assisted by his Bengali clerk, and having also the assistance of the police, it was not proved that G knew what he was about and was fairly contracting. Held, therefore, by the Court that there was, under the circumstances, no compounding of the offences with which M was charged valid in law such as to deprive the Magistrate of jurisdiction to try them.—MURRAY v. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 21 Cal. 103. [Prinsep and Trevelyan, JJ. June 28, 1893.]

HELD by the majority of the Court (Kemp, J., dissenting) that the prisoners were rightly convicted of wrongful confinement of a woman, the facts of the case showing that she never went willingly to the house of the prisoners, and was not a willing inmate while she was there.—QUEEN v. AMEER DARAZ, 4 W. R. 3. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ., Sep. 7, 1865.]

THE time during which a party is kept in wrongful confinement is immaterial, except with reference to the extent of punishment. In no case is a police-officer justified by s. 152, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), in detaining a person for a single hour, except upon some reasonable ground justified by all the circumstances of the case. —QUEEN v. SUPROSUNNO GHOSAUI, 6 W. R. 88. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Dec. 10, 1886.]

THE High Court declined to interfere with an order of a Deputy Magistrate discharging an accused without trial in a case under s. 342 of the Penal Code, because the complainant and his witnesses were not present.—SANTOO MUNDLE v. ABDOOL BISWAS, 13 W. R. 35; 7 B. L. R. 8n. [Loch and Hobhouse, JJ. Mar. 2, 1870.]

FOUR persons, two of them police-constables and two village-officers, were convicted of wrongful confinement and abetment thereof. The defendants, the village-officers, maliciously directed the arrest of certain persons for resisting the detention of certain pigs found trespassing. Held a good conviction. —PRO., June 13, 1873, 5 Mad H. C. R. Ap. 24.

IN a case of a police-officer charged under s. 342 of the Penal Code, where there was no malice, no intention of doing an act of the nature spoken of in s. 339 or 340, and no voluntary obstruction or restraint, though there was probably excessive and mistaken exercise of powers not civilly excusable in a police-officer, the facts were held not to amount to the criminal offence of wrongful restraint.—IN THE MATTER OF BUDROOL HOSSEIN, 24 W. R. 51. [Jackson and McDonell, JJ. Sep. 1, 1875.]

S. 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882) authorizes the arrest by the police, not only of persons against whom a reasonable complaint has been made or a reasonable suspicion exists of their having been concerned in a "cognizable offence," but also of persons against whom "credible information" to that effect has been received. Semble.—Where the arrest is legal, there can be no guilty knowledge "superadded to an illegal act," such as it is necessary to establish against the accused to justify a conviction under s. 220 of the Penal Code. It is only where there has been an excess, by a police-officer, of his legal powers of arrest, that it becomes necessary to consider whether he has acted corruptly or maliciously, and with the knowledge that he was acting contrary to law.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. AMARSANG JETHA, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 506. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Dec. 7, 1885.]

ON the 29th December 1887 the accused, a police-constable, was on duty at a temporary post near the Arthur Crawford Market. His turn of duty lasted from 4 to 7 A.M. Between 6-30 and 7 A.M., he saw the complainant carrying under his arm three pieces of cloth. Suspecting that the cloth was stolen property, he went up to the complainant, and questioned him. In answer to one of the questions, the complainant stated that the cloth was made in England. The accused, noticing that each piece bore Gujarathi marks, and not knowing that such marks are placed on English-made goods, concluded that this statement was false, and that the cloth had been stolen. He took hold of one of the pieces of cloth in order to examine it more closely. The complainant objected to this, and there was a scuffle between them for the possession of the cloth. The accused then arrested the complainant, and took him to a European inspector, to whom he stated the facts, alleging that he had arrested the complainant, because he had assaulted him. The inspector, seeing that the complainant was an old man, and, on the accused saying he was not hurt, let the complainant go. The complainant then lodged a complaint before the Acting Chief Presidency Magistrate, charging the accused with wrongful restraint and wrongful confinement, offences punishable under ss. 341 and 342, respectively of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860). The defence was that the complainant had assaulted the accused, and had been, on that account, arrested and kept in confinement until released by the inspector of police. The Magistrate found that there was no justification for the suspicion which the accused professed to entertain; that there were no reasonable grounds for questioning the complainant about the cloth in his possession; and that the scuffle was caused solely by the action of the accused in treating the complainant, without any valid reason, as a suspected thief. The Magistrate convicted the accused of wrongful confinement under s. 342 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860), and sentenced him to four months' rigorous imprisonment. Held by the High Court, that the conviction was wrong. The accused having, under the circumstances of the case, an honest suspicion that the cloth in the possession of the complainant was stolen property, was justified in putting questions to the complainant, the answers to which might clear away his suspicions, and, having received answers which were not, in his opinion, satisfactory, he acted under a bond-fide belief that he was legally justified in detaining what he suspected to be stolen property. The putting of questions to the complainant, not for the purpose of causing annoyance or from idle curiosity, but in order to clear up his suspicions, was an indication of good faith, as defined in s. 52 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860). He was, therefore, protected by s. 79 of the Code. Even though the act of the accused in detaining the cloth might not have been strictly justifiable by law—that is, even though there might not have been a complete basis of fact to justify a reasonable suspicion that the cloth was stolen property—still the complainant had no right of private defence under s. 99 of the Code, as the accused was a public servant acting in good faith under colour of his office, and his act was not one which caused the apprehension of death or of grievous hurt. The complainant was not justified in refusing to allow the accused to inspect the cloth, in snatching it from his hands, and in scuffling with him. He was, therefore, legally arrested, under s. 54, cl. (5), of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), for obstructing a police-officer while acting in the execution of his duty. Held, also, that the High Court will exercise its powers under ss 435 and 439 in the interests of justice in exceptional cases, as where the enquiry in the lower Court has been faulty. —BHAWOO JIVAJI v. MUTJI DAYAL, I. L. R., 12 Bom. 377. [Birdwood and Parsons, JJ. Mar. 22, 1888.]

S. 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882) does not empower a police-officer to arrest, without a warrant, a British subject in British India on a charge of criminal breach of trust or other cognizable offence committed outside British India. Mukund was a native Indian subject of the Queen-Empress, residing at Belgaum. A complaint was filed against him in the Sangli State, charging him with committing breach of trust within the territories of that State. Thereupon he obtained an order from the District Magistrate of Belgaum, dated 15th November 1891, which exempted him from arrest for the offence of criminal breach of trust without a warrant issued by himself or by the Political Agent of the Southern Maratha Country. This order was communicated to Mukund through the accused, who was chief constable at Belgaum. On the 27th November 1891, a police-officer from the Sangli State came to Belgaum with a warrant issued by the Sangli Court for the arrest of Mukund on the charge of criminal breach of trust. The chief constable thereupon directed Mukund's arrest. Mukund brought to the notice of the chief constable the District Magistrate's order of the 15th November 1891, but he was detained in custody till the matter was reported to the First-class Magistrate, who ordered his discharge. In the meantime the complaint filed against Mukund in the Sangli State was dismissed without requiring his extradition. Mukund thereupon prosecuted the chief constable on a charge of wrongful arrest and wrongful confinement. Held that the chief constable had no power to arrest the complainant without a warrant, and that he was guilty of the offence of wrongful confinement under s 342 of the Penal Code.—In re MUKUND BABU VETHE, I. L. R., 19 Bom. 72. [Jardine and Ranade, JJ. Jan. 29, 1894.]

AFTER a charge has been drawn up the accused is entitled to have the witnesses for the prosecution recalled for the purposes of cross-examination; s. 256 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives the Magistrate no discretion in the matter. After a charge has been drawn up, it is the duty of the Magistrate to require the accused to state whether he wishes to cross-examine, and, if so, which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken. The fact that there has been already some cross-examination before the charge has been drawn up, does not affect this privilege. It is only after the accused has entered upon his defence that the Magistrate is given a discretion to refuse such an application, on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice.—ZAMUNIA v. RAM TAHAL, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 370. [Prinsep and Stanley, JJ. Feb. 7, 1900.]

THE accused, a Sub-Inspector of Police, arrested one J, wrongfully confined him, and extorted from him Rs. 200 under a threat that he, the accused, would not release J, unless the money were paid. This money was paid on this account by P, a money-lender, who lent J the money for this purpose. Accused was convicted under ss. 342 and 384 of the Penal Code. In appeal the Sessions Judge held that P was not an accomplice, and, having considered his evidence, accordingly dismissed the appeal. Held that it was sufficiently shown that the money was not voluntarily given, that it was given by J to obtain his release from police custody, in which he was detained on no reasonable or sufficient ground, and it was extorted, because the Sub-Inspector refused to release J, as he was bound to do, unless he were paid that money. That P paying such money under such circumstances could not

THE accused induced the complainants, who, he alleged, were indebted to him in various sums of money, to consent to live on his premises, and to work off their debts. The complainants were to, and did in fact, receive no pay, but were fed by the accused as his servants. He insisted on their working for him, and punished them by beating them if they did not do so. The complainants in addition alleged that they were prevented leaving the accused's premises, and that they were locked up at night. On these allegations the accused was convicted by the first Court of offences under ss. 344, 370, and 374 of the Penal Code On appeal the convictions under the two former sections were quashed, the evidence as to detention being disbelieved: but that under s. 374 was upheld on the ground that, by magnifying the complainants' debts to him, and never settling their accounts, the accused had unlawfully compelled them to go on working for him against their will On a rule to show cause why the conviction should not be quashed, held (by Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J.) that the conviction was erroneous, and must be set aside. Petheram, C.J.—A person who insists that another, who has consented to serve him, shall perform his work, does not unlawfully compel such person to labour against his will within the meaning of s. 374 of the Penal Code, because it is a thing which such person has agreed to do: but if he assaults such person for not working to his satisfaction, he commits an offence punishable under s 352. Held by Norris, J.—That upon the facts of the case the complainants never gave their full and free consent to work and labour for the accused, and that the accused therefore did unlawfully compel them to labour against their will, and that the conviction under s. 374 was right.—MADAN MOHAN BISWAS v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. Of Criminal Force and Assault.†

349. A person is said to use force to another if he causes motion, change of motion, or cessation of motion to that other, or if he causes to any substance such motion, or change of motion, or cessation of motion as brings that substance into contact with any part of that other's body, or with anything which that other is wearing or carrying, or with anything so situated that such contact affects that other's sense of feeling:

Force.

* In ss. 347 and 348 the word "offence" denotes a thing punishable under this Code, or under any special or local law as defined in ss. 41 and 42 of this Code.—See s. 40 of this Code, supra.

† Offences punishable under ss. 352, 355, and 358, are compoundable.—See the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), s. 345. As to stage of proceedings at which no composition is allowable without the leave of the Court, see ibid, sub-s. 5.

As to punishment for an offence under s. 354, enquired into by a Council of Elders in a Punjab Frontier District or in Baluchistan, see the Punjab Frontier Crimes Regulation (IV. of 1887), s. 14.

Provided that the person causing the motion, or change of motion, or cessation of motion, causes that motion, change of motion, or cessation of motion, in one of the three ways hereinafter described:

First.—By his own bodily power.

Secondly.—By disposing any substance in such a manner that the motion or change or cessation of motion takes place without any further act on his part or on the part of any other person.

Thirdly.—By inducing any animal to move, to change its motion, or to cease to move.

Criminal force.

350. Whoever intentionally uses force to any person, without that person's consent, in order to the committing of any offence, or intending by the use of such force to cause, or knowing it to be likely that, by the use of such force, he will cause, injury, fear, or annoyance to the person to whom the force is used, is said to use criminal force to that other.

Illustrations.

(a.) Z is sitting in a moored boat on a river. A unfastens the mooring, and thus intentionally causes the boat to drift down the stream. Here a intentionally causes motion to Z, and he does this by disposing substances in such a manner that the motion is produced without any other act on any person's part. A has therefore intentionally used force to Z; and if he has done so without Z's consent, in order to the committing of any offence, or intending or knowing it to be likely that this use of force will cause injury, fear, or annoyance to Z, A has used criminal force to Z.

(b.) Z is riding in a chariot. A lashes Z's horses, and thereby causes them to quicken their pace. Here A has caused change of motion to Z by inducing the animals to change their motion. A has therefore used force to Z; and if A has done this without Z's consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten, or annoy Z, A has used criminal force to Z.

(c.) Z is riding in a palanquin. A intending to rob Z, seizes the pole, and stops the palanquin. Here A has caused cessation of motion to Z, and he has done this by his own bodily power. A has therefore used force to Z, and as A has acted thus intentionally, without Z's consent, in order to the commission of an offence, A has used criminal force to Z.

(d.) A intentionally pushes against Z in the street. Here A has, by his own bodily power, moved his own person so as to bring it into contact with Z. He has therefore intentionally used force to Z; and if he has done so without Z's consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten, or annoy Z, he has used criminal force to Z.

(e.) A throws a stone intending or knowing it to be likely that the stone will be thus brought into contact with Z, or with Z's clothes, or with something carried by Z, or that it will strike water, and dash up the water against Z's clothes, or something carried by Z. Here, if the throwing of the stone produce the effect of causing any substance to come into contact with Z or Z's clothes, A has used force to Z; and if he did so without Z's consent, intending thereby to injure, frighten, or annoy Z, he has used criminal force to Z.

(f.) A intentionally pulls up a woman's veil. Here A intentionally uses force to her; and if he does so without her consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby injure, frighten, or annoy her, he has used criminal force to her.

(g.) Z is bathing. A pours into the bath water which he knows to be boiling. Here A intentionally, by his own bodily power, causes such motion in the boiling water as brings that water into contact with Z, or with other water so situated that such contact must affect Z's sense of feeling. A has therfore intentionally used force to Z; and if he has done this without Z's consent, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause injury, fear, or annoyance to Z, A has used criminal force.

(h.) A incites a dog to spring upon Z without Z's consent. Here, if A intends to cause injury, fear, or annoyance to Z, he uses criminal force to Z.

THE following cases of assault under the English law amount to the use of criminal force under the Penal Code: "A master taking indecent liberties with a female scholar, without her consent, though she does not resist (Reg. v. Day, 9 C. and P. 722); a medical man unnecessarily stripping a female patient naked, under the pretence that he cannot otherwise judge of her illness if he himself take off her clothes (Reg. v. Rosinski, 1 Mood. C. C. 12); parish-officers cutting off the hair of a pauper in the poor-house by force and against her will (Forde v. Skinner, 4 C. and P. 239), taking a new-born child from the mother, under pretence of taking it to an institution to be nursed, and instead putting it into a bag, and hanging it on some palings by the wayside (Reg. v. March, 1 C. and K. 496); spitting in a man's face (6 Mod 149); striking a horse upon which a man is riding, and thus causing him to be thrown (1 Mod. 24; W. Jones 444); and every touching or laying hold (however trifling) of another's person or clothes in an angry, revengeful, rude, insolent, or hostile manner (1 Hawk, c. 62, s. 2; see also Rawlins v. Till, 3 M. and W. 28; Goward v. Buddeley, 4 H. and N. 478). All cases of trifling assault will be met by s. 95, Penal Code.—STARLING'S INDIAN CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, 3rd ed, p 298.

351. Whoever makes any gesture or any preparation, intending or knowing it to be likely that such gesture or preparation will cause any person present to apprehend that he who makes that gesture or preparation is about to use criminal force to that person, is said to commit an assault.

Assault.

Explanation.—Mere words do not amount to an assault. But the words which a person uses may give to his gestures or preparations such a meaning as may make those gestures or preparations amount to an assault.

Illustrations.

(a.) A shakes his fist at Z, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause Z to believe that A is about to strike Z. A has committed an assault.

(b.) A begins to unloose the muzzle of a ferocious dog, intending or knowing it to be likely that he may thereby cause Z to believe that he is about to cause the dog to attack Z. A has committed an assault upon Z

(c.) A takes up a stick, saying to Z, "I will give you a beating." Here, though the words used by A could in no case amount to an assault, and though the mere gesture unaccompanied by any other circumstances might not amount to an assault, the gesture explained by the words may amount to an assault.

352. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person otherwise than on grave and sudden provocation given by that person shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Punishment for assault or criminal force otherwise than on grave provocation.

Any Mag. Uncog. Summons. Bailable. Comp.

Explanation.—Grave and sudden provocation will not mitigate the punishment for an offence under this section, if the provocation is sought or voluntarily provoked by the offender as an excuse for the offence; or if the provocation is given by anything done in obedience to the law, or by a public servant in the lawful exercise of the powers of such public servant; or if the provocation is given by anything done in the lawful exercise of the right of private defence.

Whether the provocation was grave and sudden enough to mitigate the offence is a question of fact.

ANY gestures calculated to excite in the party threatened a reasonable apprehension that the party threatening intends immediately to offer violence, or, in the language of the Penal Code, is "about to use criminal force" to the person threatened, constitute, if coupled with a present ability to carry such intent into execution an assault in law. Mere words do not amount to an assault, but the words which the party threatening uses at the time may either give his gestures such a meaning as may make them amount to an assault, or, on the other hand, may prevent them from being held to amount to an assault. In order to have this latter effect, the words must be such as clearly to show the party threatened that the party threatening has no present intention to use immediate criminal force.—CAMA (A. C.) v. MORGAN (H. F.), 1 Bom. H. C. R. 205 [Arnould, Acting C.J., and Newton and Tucker, JJ. Sep. 28, 1864.]

IN a case of assault, a sentence inflicting a fine of Rs. 50 and awarding imprisonment for one month in default of payment of the fine, is illegal, with reference to ss. 65 and 352 of the Penal Code. — IN THE MATTER OF JEHAN BUKSH, 16 W. R. 24. [Kemp and Ainslie, JJ. Sep. 2, 1871.]

THE rules or executive orders of Government printed at pages 26 and 27 of Mr. Nairne's Revenue Handbook have not the force of law, and a public servant, acting in obedience thereto, cannot be considered as acting in execution of his duty as a public servant, if his act is otherwise illegal. Accordingly, where, on a complaint by a sepoy in the Revenue Department deputed by a forest settlement officer to impress some carts for the use of the latter, that the accused assaulted and prevented him from seizing his cart, a Magistrate of the first class convicted the accused under s. 353 of the Penal Code for assaulting and obstructing a public servant in the execution of his duty, and sentenced the accused to undergo twenty-one days' rigorous imprisonment, held that the conviction under s. 353 of the Penal Code should be set aside. The only offence of which, upon the evidence, the accused was guilty, was that of simple assault under s. 352 of the Penal Code.—In re RAKHMAJI, I. L. R., 9 Bom. 558 [Nanabhai Haridas and Wedderburn, JJ. July 6, 1885.]

BLACKSTONE thus defines assault under the English law: "It is an attempt or offer to beat another without touching him, as if one lifts up his cane, or his fist, in a threatening manner at another, or strikes at him, but misses him: this is an assault insultus, which Finch describes to be an unlawful setting upon one's person, and though no actual suffering is proved, yet the party injured may have redress by action for damages as a compensation for the injury."—BLACK COM., vol. 3, p. 127.

AN accused person was convicted under s. 457 of the Penal Code of house-breaking by night in order to commit an offence (mischief and assault), and also under ss. 426 and 352 for the offences of mischief and assault, and punished separately for each offence. These offences formed parts of one transaction. Held that the sentences were legal.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NIRICHAN, I. L. R., 12 Mad. 36. [Kernan and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. April 17, 1888.]

The accused was charged under s. 352 and s. 379 of the Penal Code, but convicted under s. 352, being discharged under s. 379. The Magistrate ordered the complainant to pay compensation for bringing a frivolous and vexatious charge under s. 560 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The order for paying compensation was set aside on the ground that s. 560 could only operate when there was a complete discharge or acquittal.—MUKTI BEWA v. JHOTI SANTRA, I. L. R., 24 Cal. 53. [Macpherson and Banerjee, JJ. Aug. 24, 1896.]

WHERE, in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution on a charge of assault which was dismissed, it appeared from the facts as found by the lower Courts that there was "Criminal Intimidation" on the part of the plaintiff, although he was not charged with that offence by the defendant. Held that the plaintiff would not be entitled to any damages, as no malice or dishonest motive could be imputed to the defendant in bringing the charge of "assault."—MADHU LAL AHIR GAYAWAL v. SAHI PANDE DHAMI, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 532. [Ghose and Harington, JJ. April 27, 1900.]

353. Whoever assaults or uses criminal force to any person being a public servant in the execution of his duty as such public servant, or with intent to prevent or deter that person from discharging his duty as such public servant, or in consequence of anything done, or attempted to be done, by such person in the lawful discharge of his duty as such public servant, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Prcsy. Mag. or Mag. of 1st or 2nd class. Cognizable. Warrant. Bailable. Not comp.

Assault or criminal force to deter a public servant from discharge of his duty.

WHERE substantially only one offence has been committed, the several acts which, taken together, constitute that offence, cannot legally be treated as separate offences, and the prisoner cannot legally be sentenced in respect of these as well as in respect of the principal offence.—QUEEN v. CHUNDER KANT LAHOREE, 12 W. R. 2; 3 B. L. R., A Cr., 14 * [Macpherson and Jackson, JJ. June 11 1869.]

A COLLECTORATE peada, who had been deputed to keep the peace during a distraint, was assaulted by the prisoners while on his road to execute the order with which he had been entrusted, the prisoners attempting to deprive him of his parwana. Held that they were rightly convicted under s. 353 of assaulting a public servant while in the execution of his duty.—QUEEN v. METHI MULLAH, 13 W. R 49. [Kemp and Jackson, JJ. Mar 26, 1870.]

THE rules or executive orders of Government printed at pages 26 and 27 of Mr. Nairne's Revenue Handbook have not the force of law, and a public servant, acting in obedience thereto, cannot be considered as acting in execution of his duty as a public servant, if his act is otherwise illegal. Accordingly, where, on a complaint by a sepoy in the Revenue Department, deputed by a forest settlement-officer to impress some carts for the use of the latter, that the accused assaulted and prevented him from seizing his cart, a Magistrate of the first class convicted the accused under s. 353 of the Penal Code for assaulting and obstructing a public servant in the execution of his duty, and sentenced the accused to undergo twenty-one days' rigorous imprisonment, held that the conviction under s. 353 of the Penal Code should be set aside. The only offence of which, upon the evidence, the accused was guilty, was that of simple assault under s. 352 of the Penal Code.—In re RAKHMAJI, I. L. R., 9 Bom. 558 [Nanabhai Haridas and Wedderburn, JJ. July 6, 1885.]

FOUR persons were charged with being members of an unlawful assembly consisting of themselves and others, the common object of which assembly was resisting the execution of a legal process, namely, the arrest of a judgment-debtor by a Civil Court peon who went with a warrant for his arrest accompanied by other persons, A and B, for the purpose of identifying him, and with using force or violence in prosecution of the common object, such force or violence consisting of an assault on the Civil Court peon and another by means of a dangerous weapon on A. The Deputy Magistrate convicted all the accused of offences under ss. 147 and 353 of the Penal Code, and sentenced them to six months' rigorous imprisonment under the former section, and two months' rigorous imprisonment under the latter. He further convicted one of the accused of an offence under s. 324 in respect of the assault on A, and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment in respect of that offence, and directed that the sentences were to take effect one on the expiry of the other. Held that the offence of rioting was completed by the assault on A and that the assault on the peon was a further offence under the first sub-section of s. 235 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held, further, that even if A had not been assaulted, the conviction and sentences passed for rioting and the assault on the peon were legal inasmuch as the acts of the accused, taken separately, constituted offences under ss. 143 and 353 of the Penal Code, and combined an offence under s. 147; and under s. 235, sub-s. 3, of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the accused might be charged with, and tried at, one trial for the offence under s. 147, and those under ss. 143 and 353 and, therefore, also separately convicted and sentenced for each such offence provided the punishment did not exceed the limit imposed by s. 71 of the Penal Code, as amended by s. 4 of Act VIII. of 1882, which limit had not been exceeded in the present case.—IN THE MATTER OF CHANDRA KANT BHATTACHARJEE: CHANDRA KANT BHATTACHARJEE v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 12 Cal. 495. [Mitter and Beverley, JJ. Dec. 11, 1885.]

A WARRANT issued for the arrest of a debtor under the provisions of s. 251 of the

* In the B. L. R. the name of the case is "Queen v. Kalisankar Sandyal and others."

Civil Procedure Code was initialled by the Munsarim of the Court, sealed with the seal of the Court, and delivered to the proper officer for execution. The debtor forcibly resisted the officer, and was tried and convicted, under s. 353 of the Penal Code, of assaulting a public servant in the execution of his duty as such. In revision, it was contended, with reference to the requirements of s. 251 of the Civil Procedure Code, that the warrant of arrest, having been initialled only, was bad, and the officer could not legally execute it, and consequently no offence under s. 353 of the Penal Code had been committed. Held that this contention could not be allowed, and, although it was proper that the person signing a warrant should write his name in full, it could not be said that, because the signature was confined to the initials of the name, it was not the duty of the officer to execute the warrant. Held also, with reference to s. 99 of the Penal Code, that the act of the accused did not cease to be an offence on the ground that it was done in the exercise of the right of private defence.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. JANKI PRASAD, I. L. R., 8 All. 293. [Oldfield, J. May 4, 1886.]

RACES were held in a certain enclosed ground at Poona which belonged to the Military Authorities, and was lent for the purpose to the Western India Turf Club. The part of the ground to which the public were admitted was fenced in by ropes, and soldiers were stationed at intervals to prevent any persons entering or leaving the enclosure otherwise than through the passages provided for the purpose. The Inspector of Police, who was present on duty in that capacity, contrary to the regulations prescribed by the stewards of the races, crossed over the fencing ropes into the enclosure instead of going in by the regular entrance. This was reported to the Honorary Secretary of the Club, who had general charge of the arrangements. He sent for the Inspector, and after an interview with him, ordered two soldiers, who were in attendance to keep order, to put him out of the enclosure. They accordingly did so, laying hands on him in the first instance, but immediately at his request letting him go, and merely escorting him outside. He thereupon, under s. 353 of the Penal Code, charged the Secretary of the Club with using criminal force to a public servant in the exercise of his duty. Held that the offence had been committed. Under s. 47 of the Police Act (Bom. Act IV. of 1890), the police had a right of free access to the race-course.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ROSS, I. L. R., 22 Bom. 746. [Parsons and Ranade, JJ. Dec. 3, 1896.]

IN a case where an Excise Sub-Inspector attempted to search a house for gurjat-ganja, a "foreign exciseable article," under the Excise Act (Ben. Act VII. of 1878), and resistance was offered, held that gurjat-ganja being a "foreign exciseable article" under s. 4 of the Act as amended by Ben. Act IV. of 1881, the excise officer had no legal authority to enter and search the house under s. 40 of the Act; he had authority only to enter and search for any "exciseable article" as defined in s. 4 of the Act; and that no offence either under s. 141 or s. 353 of the Penal Code was committed. Held also that s. 75 of the Act does not apply to a "foreign exciseable article."—JAGARNATH MANDHATA v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 24 Cal. 324. [Ghose and Gordon, JJ. Jan. 19, 1897.]

A NOTICE of demand of a house-tax under the Local Boards Act (Mad. Act V. of 1884) was affixed to the house. The owner, who was a potter and cultivator by occupation, was in the village at the time. He did not pay the tax. A warrant of distress was issued, the house-register not having been completely filled up, and a bucket and spade belonging to the defaulter were attached. The defaulter successfully resisted the distraint. Held that the provisions of the Act had been sufficiently complied with as regards the preliminary steps for making the demand and the service of notice, and the fact that the spade and the bucket were protected from attachment under s. 94, did not justify the resistance, and accordingly that the defaulter was guilty of offences under Penal Code, ss. 186 and 353.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. POOMALAI CHAYAN, I. L. R., 21 Mad. 296. [Subramania Ayyar and Davies, JJ. Jan. 26, 1898.]

ONE of the accused was convicted under s. 353 of the Penal Code (assaulting or using criminal force to a public servant in the execution of his duty), and two others, of the abetment of an offence under that section. But the warrant of attachment under which the public servant was acting was not produced at the trial, nor was any secondary evidence given to show its contents. Held, in the absence of any evidence as to the terms of the warrant, either by the production of the original, or in the form of secondary evidence, it was impossible to hold that the conviction was good.—TAFAZZUL AHMED CHOWDHRY v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 26 Cal. 630. [Prinsep and Hill, JJ. May 31, 1899.]

N, S, and G were appointed special constables under s. 17 of the Police Act. A Police Inspector accompanied by some police went to their village, and informed them that they had been so appointed, and requested them to accompany him to the police-station of B, which they declined to do. The Inspector then had N arrested, whereupon N shook himself free, and N, S, and G with other persons, who had assembled, abused and threatened the police, and compelled them to withdraw from the village. N, S, and G were convicted under s. 19 of the Police Act, and they were also convicted with other persons under s. 353, read with s. 149, of the Penal Code. Held that the refusal of N, S, and G to accompany the Inspector constituted no offence under s. 19 of the Police Act, as the order was intended not for any purpose of the police duty, but simply that they might obtain the authority of their appointment and the necessary arms. Held, further, that the refusal of N to accompany the Inspector was not an offence, for which N could be arrested, and as the police when obstructed were not acting in lawful discharge of their duty, none of the persons concerned could be convicted of an offence under s. 353 of the Penal Code, but they were guilty of rioting under s. 147 of that Code.—RAMAN SINGH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 28 Cal. 411. [Prinsep and Handley, JJ. July 6, 1900.]

A WARRANT of arrest which contains a wrong description of the accused is not a valid warrant, and a conviction under ss. 225B and 353 of the Penal Code of such accused person, who resisted or used criminal force upon his being arrested under such warrant, is illegal. In order to have a conviction for an illegal disobedience of a warrant, the onus is on the prosecution to show that the accused is the person, against whom the warrant has issued. It is not for the accused to show that he is not the person against whom the warrant was issued.—DEBI SINGH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 28 Cal. 399. Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ. Feb. 8. 1901.

AN indecent assault upon a woman does not amount to an attempt to commit rape, unless the Court is satisfied that there was a determination in the accused to gratify his passions at all events, and in spite of all resistance.—EMPRESS v. SHANKAR, I. L. R., 5 Bom 403. Melvill and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ. Mar. 2. 1881.

Explanation.—The last section is subject to the same explanation as section 352.

THE prisoner, a fully-developed adult man, was charged with causing the death of his wife, a girl aged about 11 years and 3 months, who had not attained puberty. The death was caused by hæmorrhage from a rupture of the vagina caused by the prisoner having sexual intercourse with the girl. For the defence it was alleged that he had had sexual intercourse with the girl on several previous occasions without injury to her, and there were circumstances in the case which showed that this was possible, and even not improbable, though the medical evidence was to the effect that, if such intercourse had previously taken place, the penetration was probably not so complete or with so much sexual vigour as on the occasion when the injury was caused. The medical evidence was further to the effect that the girl had not attained puberty, and was immature and wholly unfit for sexual intercourse, that, under such circumstances, sexual intercourse between the prisoner and the girl was likely to be dangerous to her, and to cause injuries more or less serious according to the degree of penetration effected. The prisoner was charged with (a) culpable homicide not amounting to murder under s 304 of the Penal Code; (b) causing death by doing a rash and negligent act under s. 304A, (c) voluntarily causing grievous hurt under s. 325; and (d) causing grievous hurt by doing an act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others under s. 338. Held that, in such a case, when the girl is a wife and above the age of 10 years, and when therefore the law of rape does not apply, it by no means follows that the law regards the wife as a thing made over to be the absolute property of her husband, or as a person outside the protection of the criminal law; that no hard-and-fast rule can be laid down that sexual intercourse with a girl under a certain age must be regarded as dangerous and punishable, or over that age as safe and right, but that each case must be judged according to its own individual circumstances; that, in such a case, the jury have to consider and say whether, under the particular circumstances of the case, having regard to the physical condition of the girl, and to the intention, the knowledge, the degree of rashness or negligence with which the accused is shown to have acted on the occasion in question, he has brought himself within any of the provisions of the criminal law Held further that, if the jury were of opinion (a) that the act of the prisoner caused the death of the girl, that is to say, that the act of cohabitation on the part of the prisoner had the effect of rupturing the vagina, and so causing the hæmorrhage which led to her death, (b) that the act of cohabitation between a fully-developed man like the prisoner and an immature girl like his wife was itself a thing likely to lead to dangerous consequences; (c) that that act was one of such a character as to indicate a reckless indifference to the welfare of the girl or a want of a reasonable consideration about what the prisoner was doing, one which the husband of the girl, if he had had a reasonable regard to her welfare, and had exercised reasonable thought as to the act he contemplated doing, would have abstained from doing, they would be justified in finding that the prisoner caused the death of the girl by a rash and negligent act. Under no system of law with which Courts have to do in this country, whether Hindu or Mahomedan, or that framed under British rule, has it ever been the law that a husband has the absolute right to enjoy the person of his wife without regard to the question of safety to her—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. HURREE MOHUN MYTHEE, I. L. R., 18 Cal. 49. [Wilson, J. July 25, 26, 1890.]

OF KIDNAPPING, ABDUCTION, SLAVERY, AND FORCED LABOUR.*

Kidnapping.

359. Kidnapping is of two kinds: kidnapping from British India, and kidnapping from lawful guardianship.

---

* As to punishment for offences under ss. 363 to 369, enquired into by a Council of Elders in the Punjab Frontier Districts or in Baluchistan, see the Punjab Frontier Crimes Regulation (IV. of 1887), s. 14.

Offences punishable under s. 374 are compoundable.—See the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898), s. 345. As to stage of proceedings at which no composition is allowable without the leave of the Court, see ibid, sub-s. (5).

THIS offence may be committed on a child by removing that child out of the keeping of its lawful guardian or guardians. On a grown man it can only be committed beyond the limits of the Queen's territories, or by receiving him on board a ship for that purpose. The enticing a grown-up person by false promises to go from one place in the Queen's territories to another place, also within those territories, may be a subject for civil action, and, under certain circumstances, for a criminal prosecution, but it does not come under the head of kidnapping.—INDIAN LAW COMMISSIONERS' REPORT.

360. Whoever conveys any person beyond the limits of British India without the consent of that person, or of some person legally authorized to consent on behalf of that person, is said to kidnap that person from British India.

Kidnapping from British India.

361. Whoever takes or entices any minor under fourteen years of age if a male, or under sixteen years of age if a female, or any person of unsound mind, out of the keeping of the lawful guardian of such minor or person of unsound mind, without the consent of such guardian, is said to kidnap such minor or person from lawful guardianship.

Kidnapping from lawful guardianship.

Explanation.—The words "lawful guardian" in this section include any person lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of such minor or other person.

Exception.—This section does not extend to the act of any person who, in good faith, believes himself to be the father of an illegimate child, or who, in good faith, believes himself to be entitled to the lawful custody of such child, unless such act is committed for an immoral or unlawful purpose.

THE consent of a girl under 16 years, kidnapped or abducted to compel her marriage, does not affect the offence; nor is it necessary that the taking or enticing should be shown to be by means of force or fraud—QUEEN v. AMGAD BUGEAH, 2 W. R. 61. [Glover, J. April 18, 1865.]

THE abduction of a minor girl under 16 years of age out of the custody of her lawful guardian is punishable under s. 361 of the Penal Code. It is not necessary to such a conviction that the abduction was forcible—QUEEN v. MODHOO PAUL, 3 W. R. 9. [Glover, J. May 9, 1865.]

THE consent of a kidnapped person is immaterial; and it is not necessary for a conviction under s. 361, Penal Code, that the taking or enticing should be shown to have been by means of force or fraud.—QUEEN v. BHUNGEE AHUR, 2 W. R. 5. [Glover, J. June 5, 1865.]

A PERSON, in carrying off, without the consent of her lawful guardian, a girl to whom he was betrothed by his father, who, after permitting her to reside occasionally in his house, suddenly changed his mind, and broke off the marriage, is guilty of kidnapping from lawful gurdianship pnnishable under s. 363 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. GOOROODOSS RAJBUNSEE, 4 W. R. 7: 5 Rev., Jud., and Police Journal 149. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Sep. 11, 1865.]

IN the case of a runaway, enticed after a voluntary abandonment of her home to emigrate, a charge of kidnapping from lawful guardianship cannot be sustained.—QUEEN v. GOUDHUR SINGH, 5 Rev., Jud., and Police Journal 151. [Kemp, Seton-Karr, and Glover, JJ. Sep. 12, 1865.]

TO bring a case under s. 361 of the Penal Code, there must be a taking or enticing of a child out of the keeping of the lawful guardian without his consent—QUEEN v. GUNDER SINGH, 4 W. R. 6. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Sep. 12, 1865.]

A CHARGE of kidnapping from lawful guardianship should contain the name of the guardian.—EXTRACT (para. 6) of letter No. 149 from Registrar, High Court, dated Feb. 16, 1866, 1 Wyman's Rev., Cir., and Crim. Reporter 16.

UNDER s. 361 of the Penal Code (kidnapping from lawful guardianship), the consent of a minor is immaterial, nor do force and fraud form elements of the offence.—QUEEN v. SOOKEE, 7 W. R. 36. [Glover, J. Feb. 25, 1867.]

TO support a conviction for kidnapping under ss. 361 and 363 of the Penal Code, it must be shown that the accused took or enticed away from lawful guardianship the person kidnapped.—Queen v. Neela Bebee, 10 W. R. 33. Loch and Glover, JJ. Sep. 3, 1868.]

If, knowing a girl has been kidnapped, a person wrongfully confines her, and subsequently detains her as a slave, he is guilty of two separate offences punishable under the Penal Code. Slavery is a condition which admits of degrees, and a person is treated as a slave if another asserts an absolute right to restrain his personal liberty, and to dispose of his labour against his will, unless that right is conferred by law, as in the case of a parent or guardian, or a jailor.—Queen v. Mirza Sikundur Bukhut, 3 N.-W. P. 146. [Turner and Turnbull, JJ. June 20, 1871.]

D S had two wives, N and J, by the latter of whom he had two daughters. In February 1876, he went with his wife, N, to a marriage in another village, leaving J and her two daughters at home. During the temporary absence of D S, J removed her two daughters to the house of her brother-in-law, M, and married the elder girl aged 8 years, to one G, with the assistance of three other persons. The Chief Court held (1) that the word "woman" in s 366 included a minor female; (2) that there was a kidnapping from the lawful guardianship of D S within the meaning of ss 361 and 366 notwithstanding the consent of the mother, J, to the girl's removal. Per Smyth, J.—Because the girl during the temporary absence of the father D S, continued in his possession and under his control as her lawful guardian and was not under the guardianship of her mother J. Per Plowden, J.—Because the consent of a mere custodian in breach of the trust reposed by the person from whom the right to custody is derived is not the consent of the guardian in whose keeping the minor still continues through the custodian.—Dheea Singh v. Mussammut Kahno Pam Rec. No. 8 of 1878.

A child under ten years of age is, prima facie, subject to guardianship, and any one removing such child without permission properly obtained takes the risk of such act upon himself; the fact of having omitted to inquire whether the child had a guardian or not is no defence to a charge of kidnapping a minor from lawful guardianship under s 361 of the Penal Code.—Empress v. Omsbaksh, I. L. R., 3 Bom. 178. West and Pinhey, JJ. Dec. 12, 1878.

The mother of an illegitimate child is its proper and natural guardian during the period of nurture. And where the mother, on her death-bed, entrusts the care of such child to a person who accepts the trust, and maintains the child, such a person is "lawfully entrusted" with the care and custody of the minor within the meaning of s. 361 of the Penal Code. The explanation of the words "lawful guardian" in s 361 is intended to obviate the difficulty the prosecution might be put to in being bound to prove strictly in cases of abduction, that the person from whose care the minor has been abducted was the guardian of such minor within the meaning of the legal acceptation of the word.—Empress v. Pemantle, I. L. R., 8 Cal. 971. [Garth, C J., and Cunningham and Maclean, JJ. July 9, 1882.]

The following extract from Starling's Criminal Law and Procedure is well worth perusal: 'The general principles as to the principal offence involved in these sections are admirably laid down by Bramwell, B., in the case of Reg v. Olliver (10 Cox's Crim Cases 402): 'If a young woman leaves her father's house without any persuasion, inducement, or blandishment held out to her by a man, so that she has fairly got away from home, and then goes to him, although it may be his moral duty to return her to her parents' custody, yet his not doing so is no infringement of this Act of Parliament, for the Act does not say he shall restore her, but only that he shall not take her away.' (See also 5 R. J. and P. J. 152.) 'It is, however, equally clear that, if the girl acting under his persuasion, leaves her father's house, although he is not present at the moment, yet, if he avails himself of that leaving which took place at his persuasion that would be a taking her out of the father's possession, because the persuasion would be the motive cause of her leaving. Again, although she may not leave at the appointed time and although he may not wish that she should have left at that particular time, yet if, finding she has left, he avails himself of that to induce her to continue away from her father's custody, in my judgment he is also guilty, if his persuasion operated on her mind so as to induce her to leave.' If a woman be forcibly taken away, and afterwards married, or defiled with her own consent, it is within the provisions of these sections, for the offender is not to escape by having prevailed over the weakness of a woman whom he originally got into his power by such base means (Fulwood's Case, Cro. Car 488; Swenden's Case 5 St. Tr. 450, 1 Hale 660). And so, too, if she be taken away and married with her own consent, if this be effected by means of fraud: for she cannot be considered, while under the influence of fraud, to be a free agent (R v. Wakefield, Lancaster Assizes 1827). Under s. 361, it is immaterial whether the girl consents or not, and the taking need not be by force, actual or constructive (Reg. v. Mankleton, Dears C. C. 159). It is no legal excuse that the defendant made use of no other means than the common blandishment of a lover to induce her to elope with him (R. v. Twistleton, 1 Lev 257; 1 Hawk, c. 44, s. 10). Where a girl was persuaded by the defendant to leave her father's house, and go away with him, without the father's consent, and accordingly left her home alone by a preconcerted arrangement between them, and went to a place appointed, where she was met by the prisoner, and they then went away together without the intention of returning, this was held to be a taking of the girl out of the father's possession, and certainly it would amount to an enticing (Reg. v. Mankleton, supra). So where the defendant, by concert with the girl, met her and stayed with her away from her father's house for several nights sleeping with her, and the jury found that the father did not consent and that the defendant knew that he did not, and that he took the girl away with him in order to gratify his passions, and then let her return home, and not with the intention of keeping her away from her home permanently, the conviction was held right (Reg. v. Timmins, 1 Bell, C. C., 276). Where a girl under sixteen was found in the streets by herself and seduced away, it was held that she was not taken out of the possession of her father, although he was living in the same place and the girl was living with him (Reg. v. Green, 3 F. and F. 274). A was indicted for fraudulently alluring C out of the possession of her mother and stepfather, the latter having the lawful care of her, and B with being an accessory before the fact. C was sent by her mother to live with her grandmother. Instead of going there she went to B's house, and did not return home when desired by her mother. After remaining with B a month, she left with A, her paternal uncle, and was married to him without her mother's knowledge. It was held that there was no evidence that the alluring was fraudulent, or that the girl was taken out of her mother's possession, and that the facts did not support the indictment (Reg. v. Burrell, 1 L. R. 154). These illustrations are all of cases of abduction of women, but they will sufficiently illustrate the principles involved in the interpretation of the foregoing sections. If the offence be under s. 361, the child must be shown to be under fourteen if a male, and under sixteen if a female, and it will be no defence to say that the accused did not know the child was under the age, but thought he or she was over the specified age, unless he has substantial ground for supposing that such is the fact, so as to bring the case within s. 79 of the Penal Code, for it was ruled in the case of Reg. v. Olliffe, supra, that a man deals with an unmarried girl at his peril; and in that case the fact that she had told him she was seventeen was held not to excuse him. See also Reg. v. Robins, 1 F. and F. 50, where Cockburn, C. J., ruled to the same effect."

THE husband of a Hindu girl of fifteen is her lawful guardian; and if the father of the minor takes away the girl from her husband without the latter's consent, such taking away amounts to kidnapping from lawful guardianship, even though the father may have had no criminal intention in so doing.—IN THE MATTER OF DHURONIDHUR GHOSE, I. L. R., 17 Cal. 298. Tottenham and Banerjee, JJ. Sep. 28 1889.

IN a trial with a jury under s. 366 of the Indian Penal Code, the Judge on the question of intent charged the jury in the following words: "It remains only to consider the question of intent. The charge was that the girl was kidnapped in order that she might be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. As to this, it is sufficient to say that no other intercourse is possible under the circumstances. When a man carries off a young girl at night from her father's house, the presumption is that he did so with the intent indicated above. It would be open to him, if he had admitted the kidnapping to prove that he had some other object, but no other object is apparent on the face of the facts. Held that this amounted to a misdirection of the jury. The question of intent was a pure question of fact; but the way in which it had been put to the jury left them no option, but to adopt the view taken by the Judge.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. HOSAIN, I. L. R., 14 All 25. Straight, J. Aug. 1, 1891.

S, a girl of the age of eight years, lived ordinarily under the guardianship of her father. A sister of S was married to a nephew of one K and, with her husband, lived in the house of K. S, with her father's knowledge and consent, visited her sister in K's house and had remained there for about a month when four brothers (being cousins of S) came to K's house one night and took S to their own house, which was close by, and S was at once married to one of them. The father of S was not asked for his consent, and it was known by the nephews and by K that the father objected to such a marriage. K was present at the marriage and consented to it, hoping to reconcile the girl's father to it subsequently. The father, however, sought the aid of the police, to whom S was given up by her cousins after having been detained by them in their house for thirty-six hours. The four cousins were then charged, under section 366 of the Indian Penal Code, with kidnapping S from lawful guardianship with intent that she might be compelled to marry one of them. The charge was framed in general terms, and did not state from whose guardianship the kidnapping was alleged to have taken place. The trial was, however, conducted on the footing that the kidnapping was from the guardianship of K. The accused were acquitted, on the ground that K was at the time the lawful guardian of the girl, and it had not been shown that she had been taken without K's consent. Upon an appeal being preferred by Government against that acquittal, held that the accused had been rightly acquitted of the charge of kidnapping S from the guardianship of K; but that the question whether they were guilty of kidnapping S from the guardianship of her father had not been and ought to be tried. The word "include" in the explanation to section 361 of the Indian Penal Code is not intended to limit the protection which the section gives to parents and minors, but rather to extend that protection by including in the term "lawful guardian" any person lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of the minor. The fact that a father allows his child to be in the custody of a servant or friend for a limited purpose and for a limited time does not determine the father's rights as guardian or his legal possession for the purposes of the Criminal Law. If the facts are not inconsistent with a continuance of the father's legal possession of the minor, the latter must be held to be in the father's possession or keeping even though the actual possession should be temporarily with a friend or other person.—JAGANNADHA RAO v. KAMARAJU, I. L. R. 24 Mad. 284. [Davies and Benson, JJ. Sep. 25, Nov. 8, 1900.]

Ct. of Ses., Presy. Mag., or Mag. of 1st class. Cognizable. Warrant. Not bailable. Not comp.

363. Whoever kidnaps any person from British India or from lawful guardianship shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Punishment for kidnapping.

THE prisoners having been sentenced for abetment of abduction of a woman under ss. 109 and 498, and for wrongful confinement of her under s. 343, it was held that both sentences could not stand, and that, as the essence of the case was abduction, the prisoners, as abettors therein, should be punished for it alone.—QUEEN v. ISHWAR CHUNDER JOGEE, W. R. Gap. 1864, 21. [Loch and Seton-Karr, JJ. April 12, 1864.]

THE subject of an Independent State, though not amenable to the British Courts on a charge of culpable homicide committed out of British territories, may be so amenable on a charge of kidnapping from those territories.—QUEEN v. DHURMONARAIN MOITRO, 1 W. R. 29. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 9, 1864.]

THE conviction of a procuress changed from abduction to enticing, the woman alleged to have been abducted having been of a mature age and a free agent. The conviction of the other prisoners also changed from abetting wrongful concealment under s. 368 of the Penal Code to abetment under s. 116.—QUEEN v. SRIMOTEE PODDEE, 1 W. R. 45. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 16, 1864.] But according to the ruling in Empress v. Kallu (I. L. R., 5 All. 233), and s. 199 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V of 1898), it is illegal to alter a charge of abduction to one of enticement.—ED.

A CONVICTION of abduction quashed, no force or deceit having been practised on the person abducted.—QUEEN v. KOMUT DASS, 2 W. R. 7. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 10, 1865.]

THE abduction of a girl, under 16 years of age, with intent to marry, &c., without the consent of her lawful guardian, is punishable under ss. 363 and 366 of the Penal Code. The consent of the kidnapped person is immaterial nor is it necessary to show that the taking or enticing away was by force or fraud.—QUEEN v. KOORDAN SING, 3 W. R. 15. [Glover, J. May 15, 1865.]

A PERSON, in carrying off, without the consent of her lawful guardian, a girl to whom he was betrothed by his father, who, after permitting her to reside occasionally in his house, suddenly changed his mind, and broke off the marriage, is guilty of kidnapping from lawful guardianship punishable under s. 363 of the Penal Code. The fact of the betrothal, however, would considerably diminish the heinousness of the offence.—QUEEN v. GOOKOODOSS RAJBUNSSEE, 4 W. R. 7; 5 Rev., Jud., and Police Journal 149. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Sep. 11, 1865.]

WHERE a girl of 11 years of age was taken out of the custody of her lawful guardian by the first prisoner, and offered for sale in marriage to another, and the second prisoner illegally concealed her, the conviction of the former was upheld under s. 363 of the Penal Code only; and the conviction of the latter under s. 368 only, while the separate conviction of both under s. 366 was quashed.—QUEEN v. ISREE PANDAY, 7 W. R. 56. [Norman, J. April 8, 1867.]

AN enticing-away of a child playing on a public road is kidnapping from lawful guardianship.—QUEEN v. MUSSAMUT OOZEERUN, 7 W. R. 62. [Glover, J. May 4, 1867.]

THE offence described in s. 363 of the Penal Code is included in that described in s. 369, the kidnapping and the intention of dishonestly taking property from the kidnapped child being included in the latter section.—QUEEN v. SHAMA SHEIKH, 8 W. R. 35. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 8, 1867.]

To support a conviction for kidnapping under ss. 361 and 363, it must be shown that the accused took or enticed away from lawful guardianship the person kidnapped.—QUEEN v. NEELA BIBEE, 10 W. R. 33. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Sep. 3, 1868.]

To constitute the offence of kidnapping under s. 363 of the Penal Code, it must be shown that the person was abducted from lawful guardianship, and lawful guardianship is the guardianship of a person who is lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of a minor.—QUEEN v. BUTUKO, 2 N.-W. P. 286. [Turner, Offg. C.J. July 8, 1870.]

A WARRANT for the arrest of a person on a charge of abduction should state the intent with which the offence was committed. BIDHOOMOOKHEE DABEE v. CREENATH HALDAR, 15 W. R. 4; 6 B. L. R. Ap. 129. [Jackson and Mookerjee, JJ. Jan. 21, 1871.]

ACCUSED was convicted by the Magistrate of abetting the kidnapping of a minor. Accused, knowing that the minor had left home without the consent of his parents and at the instigation of one Komaren, the actual kidnapper, undertook to convey the minor to Kandy in Ceylon, and was arrested on the way thither. The Sessions Judge reversed the conviction on the ground that there was no concert between the accused and Komaren previous to the completion of the kidnapping by the latter. Held by the High Court that, so long as the process of taking the minor out of the keeping of his lawful guardian continued, the offence of kidnapping might be abetted, and that, in the present case, the conviction should be of an offence punishable under ss. 363 and 116 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. SAMIA KAUNDAN, I. L. R., 1 Mad. 173. [Morgan, C.J., and Innes, J. Dec. 5, 1876.]

CERTAIN persons were charged under s. 417 of the Penal Code, and were discharged by the Magistrate inquiring into the offence under s. 215 of Act X of 1872. The Court of Session, considering that the accused persons had been improperly discharged, forwarded the record to the Magistrate of the District, suggesting to him to make the case over to a Subordinate Magistrate, with directions to inquire into any offence other than the offence in respect of which the accused persons had been discharged, which the evidence on the record showed to have been committed. The Subordinate Magistrate to whom the case was made over made an inquiry, and committed the accused persons for trial before the Court of Session on charges under ss. 363 and 420 of the Penal Code. It was contended that the Court of Session was not competent to "direct the accused persons to be committed" under s. 296 of Act X. of 1872, the case not being a "Sessions case" within the meaning of that section, and that the commitment was consequently illegal. Held that there was no "direction to commit" within the meaning of that section, that is to say, to send the accused persons at once to the Sessions Court without further inquiry, and whether or not the inquiry was made in consequence of the suggestions of the Court of Session was immaterial, and that the inquiry upon the charges under ss. 363 and 420 of the Penal Code was rightly held by the Subordinate Magistrate, and the commitment could not be impeached.—EMPRESS v. BHUP SINGH, I. THE accused were convicted by the Magistrate of the District of Lahore, exercising enhanced powers under s. 36, Criminal Procedure Code, of kidnapping a married woman being a minor, from lawful guardianship, for the purposes of prostitution, and sentenced under ss. 363 and 372, Penal Code, to terms of imprisonment exceeding three years. The proceedings were forwarded to the Sessions Judge, Lahore Division, for confirmation of the sentences. The Sessions Judge, holding that ss. 363 and 372, Penal Code, were inapplicable to married female minors, annulled the convictions, and directed the re-trial of the accused on a charge under s. 498, Penal Code. The Chief Court held that the order of the Sessions Judge was illegal: 1st, because ss. 363 and 372 were applicable to married as well as to unmarried female minors; and, secondly, because the Sessions Judge was not competent, under s. 36, Criminal Procedure Code to direct a new trial upon a new charge; and, 3rdly, because no complaint had been preferred of an offence falling under s. 498, Penal Code.—CROWN v. KANNU, Panj. Rec., No. 12 of 1879

A MOTHER cannot have a right to the custody of her legitimate children adversely to the father. Ordinarily the custody of the mother is the custody of the father, and any removal of the children from place to place by the mother ought to be taken to be consistent with the right of the father as guardian, and not as a taking out of his keeping. But where a Hindu woman left her husband's house, taking with her her infant daughter, and went to the house of A, and on the same day the daughter was married to B, the brother of A, without the father's consent, it was held that A was rightly convicted under ss. 109 and 363 of the Penal Code of abetting the offence of kidnapping.—IN THE MATTER OF PRAN KRISHNA SURMA: EMPRESS v. PRAN KRISHNA SURMA, I. THE absence of the certificate of the Political Agent required by s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is an absolute bar to the trial of a case to which the provisions of that section apply. Semble that the offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship punishable under s. 363 of the Penal Code is not a continuing offence.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAM SUNDAR, I. J, A MINOR girl, was taken away from her husband's house to the house of K and there kept for two days. Then one M came and took her away to his own house and kept her there for twenty days and subsequently clandestinely removed her to the house of the petitioner, and from that house the petitioner and M took her through different places to Calcutta. The petitioner was convicted under s. 363 of the Penal Code for kidnapping a girl under 16 years of age from the lawful guardianship of her husband. Held (by the majority of the Full Bench) that the taking away out of the guardianship of the husband was complete before the petitioner joined the principal offenders in taking the girl to Calcutta, and that the petitioner, therefore, could not be convicted under s. 363 of the Penal Code. Held, further, that the offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship is complete when the minor is actually taken from lawful guardianship; it is not an offence continuing so long as she is kept out of such guardianship. Per Rampini, J.—The offence of kidnaping under s. 363 is not necessarily or in all cases complete as soon as the minor is removed from the house of the guardian; when the act of kidnapping is complete is a question of fact to be determined according to the circumstances of each case.—NEMAI CHAITORAJ v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. THERE can be no conviction of the offence of kidnapping under s 366 of the Penal Code, unless it is proved that the accused has taken the girl out of the keeping or custody of her lawful guardian without her consent —QUEEN v MOHIM CHUNDER SIL, 16 W. R 42. [Ainslie, J Sep 2, 1871.]

D S had two wives, N and J, by the latter of whom he had two daughters. In February 1876, he went with his wife, N, to a marriage in another village leaving J and her two daughters at home. During the temporary absence of D S, J removed her two daughters to the house of her brother-in-law, M, and married the elder girl (aged 8 years) to one G with the assistance of three other persons. The Chief Court held (1) that the word "woman" in s. 366 included a minor female; (2) that there was a kidnapping from the lawful guardianship of D S within the meaning of ss. 361 and 366, notwithstanding the consent of the mother, J, to the girl's removal. Per Smyth, J.—Because the girl, during the temporary absence of the father D S, continued in his possession and under his control as her lawful guardian, and was not under the guardianship of her mother, J. Per Plowden, J.—Because the consent of a mere custodian in breach of the trust reposed by the person from whom the right to custody is derived is not the consent of the guardian in whose keeping the minor still continues through the custodian.—DHERA SINGH v. MUSSAMMAT KAHNO. Panj. Rec., No. 8 of 1878.

WHERE a girl, under 16 years of age, who was travelling with a chance-protector (not her lawful guardian), went off with the accused voluntarily, and without any false inducement or force on his part, and without any agreement between the accused and the girl or her protector that she should prostitute herself, and the accused subsequently hired out the girl on two occasions for the purpose of sexual intercourse the Chief Court, reversing the order of the lower Court, held that no offence was made out against accused under s 373 or s. 366. In order to constitute an offence under s. 373, there must be a taking possession of the minor under some agreement or understanding either with some third person or the minor, that the minor is to be employed for some purpose specified in the section.—HARDEO v. EMPRESS, Panj. Rec., No. 7 of 1880.

THE mother of an illegitimate child is its proper and natural guardian during the period of nurture. And where the mother, on her death-bed, entrusts the care of such child to a person who accepts the trust, and maintains the child, such a person is "lawfully entrusted with the care and custody of the minor within the meaning of s 361 of the Penal Code. The explanation of the words "lawful guardian" in s. 361 is intended to obviate the difficulty the prosecution might be put to in being bound to prove strictly in cases of abduction that the person from whose care the minor has been abducted was the guardian of such minor within the meaning of the legal acceptation of the word.—EMPRESS v. PEMANTLE, I. L. R., 8 Cal. 971. [Garth, C J., and Cunningham and Maclean, JJ July 9, 1882.]

IN a trial with a jury under s 366 of the Indian Penal Code, the Judge, on the question of intent, charged the jury in the following words: "It remains only to consider the question of intent. The charge was that the girl was kidnapped in order that she might be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. As to this, it is sufficient to say that no other inference is possible under the circumstances. When a man carries off a young girl at night from her father's house, the presumption is that he did so with the intent indicated above. It would be open to him, if he had admitted the kidnapping, to prove that he had some other object; but no other object is apparent on the face of the facts." Held that this amounted to a misdirection of the jury. The question of intent was a pure question of fact; but the way in which it had been put to the jury left them no option but to adopt the view taken by the Judge.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. HUGHES, I. L. R., 14 All. 25. [Straight, J. Aug. 1, 1891.]

THE complainant charged the accused with an offence under s 366 of the Penal Code in respect of his wife. The Deputy Magistrate convicted the accused of an offence under s. 498 of the Penal Code, and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The Sessions Judge, being of opinion that the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to convict the accused under s. 498, there being no complaint by the husband under s. 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the offence did not fall under s. 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code, referred the case to the High Court. Held that such a case is within the intention of s. 238. The intention of the law is to prevent Magistrates inquiring of their own motion into cases connected with marriage, unless the husband or other person authorized moves them to do so. But when the husband is complainant, and brings his complaint under s. 366, a conviction under s 498 may properly be had if the evidence be such as to justify a conviction for the minor offence, and yet insufficient for a conviction for the graver one.—JATRA SHEKH, v. REAZAT SHEKH, I. L. R., 20 Cal. 483. [Pigot and Hill, JJ. Sep. 19, 1892.] But see contra Empress v. Kallu, I. L. R., 5 All. 433.

AN offence under s. 365 of the Penal Code is, within the meaning of s. 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code a minor offence as compared with offences under s. 366 and s. 376 of the Penal Code, and the High Court, in dealing with a case under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code, can convict an accused of the former offence without a formal charge having been framed. Per Banerjee, J.—The words "minor offence" have not been defined by law, they are to be taken, not in any technical sense, but in their ordinary sense.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SITANATH MANDAL, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 1006. [Macpherson and Banerjee, JJ. July 16, 1895.]

RAM DEI, Chajju, Piru, and Kamar, were committed by the Joint-Magistrate of Muzaffarnagar to the Court of the Sessions Judge of Saharanpur. Upon the case which was before the Joint Magistrate it appeared that Ram Dei had committed the offence punishable under s. 366 of the Penal Code in the district of Bijnor, and possibly the other three persons had committed the offence punishable under s. 368 of the Penal Code in the district of Muzaffarnagar; Chajju and Piru also possibly having committed the offence punishable under that section in Bijnor. Under the above circumstances, the High Court, maintaining the order of commitment made by the Joint Magistrate, directed the case to be transferred for trial to the Court for the trial of Sessions cases arising in the Bijnor district, namely, that of the Sessions Judge of Moradabad. Reg. v. Samia Kaundan (I. S, a girl of the age of eight years, lived ordinarily under the guardianship of her father. A sister of S was married to a nephew of one K, and with her husband, lived in the house of K. S, with her father's knowledge and consent, visited her sister in K's house, and had remained there for about a month when four brothers (being cousins of S) came to K's house one night and took S to their own house which was close by and S was at once married to one of them. The father of S was not asked for his consent, and it was known by the nephews and by K that the father objected to such a marriage. K was present at the marriage and consented to it, hoping to reconcile the girl's father to it subsequently. The father, however, sought the aid of the police, to whom S was given up by her cousins after having been detained by them in their house for thirty-six hours. The four cousins were then charged, under s. 366 of the Indian Penal Code, with kidnapping S from lawful guardianship with intent that she might be compelled to marry one of them. The charge was framed in general terms and did not state from whose guardianship the kidnapping was alleged to have taken place. The trial was, however, conducted on the footing that the kidnapping was from the guardianship of K. The accused were acquitted, on the ground that K was at the time the lawful guardian of the girl, and it had not been shown that she had been taken without K's consent. Upon an appeal being preferred by Government against that acquittal, held that the accused had been rightly acquitted of the charge of kidnapping S from the guardianship of K, but that the question whether they were guilty of kidnapping S from the guardianship of her father had not been and ought to be tried. The word "include" in the explanation to s. 361 of the Indian Penal Code is not intended to limit the protection which the section gives to parents and minors, but rather to extend that protection by including in the term "lawful guardian" any person lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of the minor. The fact that a father allows his child to be in the custody of a servant or friend for a limited purpose and for a limited time does not determine the father's rights as guardian or his legal possession for the purposes of the Criminal Law. If the facts are not inconsistent with a continuance of the father's legal possession of the minor, the latter must be held to be in the father's possession or keeping even though the actual possession should be temporarily with a friend or other person.—JAGANNADHA RAO v. KAMARAJU, I. L. R., 24 Mad. 284. Davies and Benson, JJ. Sep. 25 Nov. 8 1900.

THE conviction of a procuress changed from abduction to enticing, the woman alleged to have been abducted having been of mature age and a free agent The conviction of the other prisoners also changed from abetting wrongful concealment under s. 368 of the Penal Code to abetment under s. 116.—QUEEN v. S. 368 of the Penal Code refers to some other party who assists in concealing any person who has been kidnapped and not to the kidnappers.—QUEEN v. SHEIKH OOZEER 6 W. R 17. Loch, J. July 2, 1868.

IF knowing that a girl has been kidnapped, a person wrongfully confines her, and subsequently detains her as a slave, he is guilty of two separate offences punishable under the Penal Code. Slavery is a condition which admits of degrees and a person is treated as a slave if another asserts an absolute right to restrain his personal liberty and to dispose of his labour against his will, unless that right is conferred by law, as in the case of a parent, or a guardian or a gator.—QUEEN v. MIRZA SIKUNDAR BUKHT, 3 N.-W. P. 146. Turner and Turnbull JJ. June 20, 1871.

THE mere fact of a girl being received into a house, and retained there by the owner, even after he may have become aware, or found reason to believe that she had been kidnapped, does not amount to concealment of her, unless an intention of keeping her out of view be apparent.—QUEEN v. JHUKRUE, 5 N.-W. P. 133. [Pearson and Jardine, JJ May 3, 1873.]

THE mere circumstance of a girl, who had been kidnapped, staying in the house of a person for a day or two, does not warrant the conclusion that she was wrongfully concealed by that person with the object of baffling any search that might be made for her.—QUEEN v. MUSSUMUT CHUBBOOA, 5 N.-W. P. 189 Pearson and Jardine, JJ. June 11, 1873.

TO constitute the offence of "wrongfully concealing" a person who has been kidnapped or abducted, there must be a withdrawal of that person from the actual observation of others, by removal or otherwise; and merely giving false information about such person is not sufficient.—PHUTA SINGH v CROWN, Panj Rec., No. 10 of 1874.

RAM DEI, Chajju Piru, and Kamar, were committed by the Joint Magistrate of Muzaffarnagar to the Court of the Sessions Judge of Saharanpur. Upon the case which was before the Joint Magistrate it appeared that Ram Dei had committed the offence punishable under s. 360 of the Penal Code in the district of Bijnor, and possibly the other three persons had committed the offence punishable under s. 368 of the Penal Code in the district of Muzaffarnagar. Chajju and Piru also possibly having committed the offence punishable under that section in Bijnor. Under the above circumstances, the High Court, maintaining the order of commitment made by the Joint Magistrate, directed the case to be transferred for trial to the Court for the trial of Sessions cases arising in the Bijnor district, namely, that of the Sessions Judge of Moradabad Reg. v. Samia Kaundan (I. Selling minor for purposes of prostitution, &c.

THE dedication of a minor girl under the age of 16 years to the service of a Hindu temple, by the performance of the shej ceremony, where it was shown that it was almost invariably the case that girls so dedicated led a life of prostitution, was a disposing of such minor, knowing it to be likely that she would be used for the purpose of prostitution, within the meaning of s. 372 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. JAILI BHABIN, 6 Bom. H. C. R. 60. [Warden and Lloyd, JJ. Sep 27, 1869.]

S, a married Mahomedan girl under 16, while living with N, her grandmother, and, in the absence of her husband, formed an adulterous intrigue with two Hindus, with the knowledge of N. S and N were then induced by the Hindus to remove to another village, that S might take up the trade of a prostitute. They there met J, a public woman, with whom they went to reside, and who introduced visitors to S, and received the money paid by them, in exchange for the board and food supplied to S and N. N was convicted, under s. 372, of disposing of a minor for the purpose of prostitution, and J was convicted, under s. 373, of obtaining possession of a minor for the purpose of prostitution. Held per Jackson, J.—That, on the facts proved, no offence was committed under the Penal Code. Per Glover, J.—N and J were both guilty under ss. 372 and 373 respectively, and their appeals should be dismissed.—QUEEN v. NOOR JAN, 6 B. L. R. Ap. 34; 14 W. R. 39. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. July 30, 1870.]

THE prisoners were convicted, the one of disposing of, and the other of receiving, two children, females, under the age of 16 years, with intent that such females should be used for the purpose of prostitution. The evidence showed that the children were disposed of and registered as dancing-girls of a pagoda for the purpose of being brought up as dancing-girls. Held that offences under ss. 372 and 373 of the Penal Code had been committed, and that the prisoners were properly convicted.—Ex-parte PADMAVATI, 5 Mad. H. C. R. 415. [Holloway and Innes, JJ. Aug. 4, 1870.]

To constitute an offence under s. 372 of the Penal Code it is not necessary that there should have been a disposal tantamount to a transfer of possession or control over the minor's person — REG. v. ARNACHELLAM, I. L. R., 1 Mad. 164. [Morgan, C.J., and Innes, J. July 18, 1876.]

THE accused were convicted by the Magistrate of the district of Lahore, exercising enhanced powers under s. 36, Criminal Procedure Code, of kidnapping a married woman, being a minor, from lawful guardianship, for the purpose of prostitution, and sentenced under ss. 363 and 372, Penal Code to terms of imprisonment exceeding three years. The proceedings were forwarded to the Sessions Judge, Lahore Division, for confirmation of the sentences. The Sessions Judge, holding that ss. 363 and 372, Penal Code, were inapplicable to married female minors, annulled the convictions, and directed the re-trial of the accused on a charge under s. 498, Penal Code. Held that the order of the Sessions Judge was illegal. 1st, because ss. 363 and 372 were applicable to married as well as to unmarried female minors; 2nd, because the Sessions Judge was not competent, under s. 36, Criminal Procedure Code, to direct a new trial upon a new charge; and, 3rd, because no complaint had been preferred of an offence falling under s. 498, Penal Code. —CROWN v. KAMMU, Panj. Rec. No. 12 of 1879.

THE facts which must be proved in order to support a conviction under ss. 372 and 373 discussed and explained. The gist of the offence under either section consists in the intention that the minor shall be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution, or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or with the knowledge that it is likely that such minor will be employed or used for any such purpose. In the absence of any intention or knowledge of the kind referred to, the mere buying, selling, letting, or obtaining possession of, a minor is not per se a criminal act, as the law of India now stands. Per Rattigan, J.—An "unlawful" act may either be defined in connection with the definition of the term "illegal," as contained in s. 43 of the Penal Code, or it may be said that every act is unlawful which the law has prohibited; but, if the purpose be not "unlawful" within either of these definitions, although it may be immoral in a purely ethical sense, the offence will not be made out. The principle laid down by the Chief Justice of the Madras High Court (5 Mad. H. C. R. 472), that to bring a case within the section "it is essential to show that possession of the minor has been obtained under a distinct arrangement come to between the parties that the minor's person should be for some time completely in the keeping and under the control and direction of the party having possession, whether ostensibly for a proper purpose or not; thus, excluding the supposition that an obtaining of possession, in the sense of merely having sexual intercourse with a woman, could have been, in the contemplation of the framers of the section," approved. Held per Rattigan, J., in the present case, that, as the facts failed to prove with reference to certain of the accused, and did not necessarily raise the presumption that they, in either obtaining possession of the girl (the subject of the charge), or in subsequently attempting to dispose of her, intended that she should be employed or used for some unlawful and immoral purpose, nor was there anything to shew that the said accused knew or had reason to believe that the girl was otherwise than unmarried, there was therefore not sufficient evidence to establish a charge under s 372 or s 373 of the Penal Code, and that the said accused should be acquitted. If the intention of the accused was to dispose of the minor for the purposes of sexual intercourse, which was intended to be illicit, the purpose would be clearly immoral; but, to prove this kind of intercourse unlawful, within the meaning of s 43 of the Penal Code, it would be necessary to produce such evidence as would support a civil action for seduction, because, in the absence of such evidence, the seduction would not furnish ground for a civil action, and consequently would not be pronounced "unlawful" within the terms of the above section. If the intention of the accused was to dispose of the girl upon the condition of marriage, the purpose would not be "unlawful," as, although by Hindu and Mahomedan law, a marriage contracted for a minor by any other than his or her lawful guardian would, no doubt, be irregular, and, under certain circumstances, capable of being set aside, it could hardly be said to be "unlawful and immoral" within the meaning of ss 372 and 373 of the Penal Code, construing the first of these expressions as above. Held per Brandreth, J. (dissenting from Rattigan, J., as to the acquittal of two of the above-mentioned accused), that the Magistrate of the District (Sialkot), in the present condition of the district, with regard to the public notoriety of the traffic and the vigorous efforts of the police to suppress it, was justified in presuming that all parties who sheltered or passed on the girl in the present case were acting in concert, and knew well that she was a married woman who had been seduced from her husband to be sold for the advantage of the gang to some new husband; and that, therefore, they were guilty of an offence under s. 372, as they had combined to dispose of a minor under the age of 16 years, with the intent that such minor should be used for an unlawful and immoral purpose, viz., a second illegal marriage. Held per Barkley, J. (differing from Brandreth, J., as to this), that it would not be safe to presume that the accused knew, or had reason to believe, that the girl in question was married; but (dissenting from Rattigan, J., as to this) that, even on this assumption, the facts established amounted to an offence. The purpose for which the prisoners obtained possession of the girl was to dispose of her in marriage for a pecuniary consideration, such purpose was clearly "immoral," and the purpose of bringing about an unlawful marriage would be an "unlawful" purpose, whether, under the circumstances of the case, it would be an offence or not, as it would be a purpose to do a thing which the person intending it had no lawful power or right to do. For, to give validity to the marriage of a Hindu minor, the consent, either of one of the guardians prescribed for the purpose by Hindu law, or of some one to whom such guardian had presumably delegated his authority, is essential, and, in the absence of such consent, there is no marriage, though, in considering whether consent has been given, the subsequent conduct of the guardian may be taken into account. Held, therefore, that one of the accused was guilty of an offence under s. 373 of the Penal Code, though not under s. 372, as he had not effected his purpose of disposing of the girl when arrested.—KHUSHALA v EMPRESS, Panj Rec., No. 27 of 1880.

A DANCING-WOMAN of a temple applied to the manager of the temple for the appointment of a minor girl, whom she falsely described as her daughter, to her "kothu" miras; the Manager ordered that the girl be placed on the pay-abstract like other dancing-girls, and she was employed about the temple, though the ceremony of tying the bottu (after which the girl could not be married) did not take place. Held that the above facts constituted primâ-facie evidence that an offence under the Penal Code, s. 372, had been committed by the dancing-woman, the manager above named, and the parents of the girl.—SRINIVASA v. ANNASAMI, I. L. R., 15 Mad. 41. [Collins, C.J., and Wilkinson, J. Oct. 10, 1891.]

THE accused dedicated his minor daughter as a Basivi by a form of marriage with an idol. It appeared that a Basivi is incapable of contracting a lawful marriage, and ordinarily practises promiscuous intercourse with men, and that her sons succeed to her father's property. Held the accused had committed an offence under the Penal Code, s. 372.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v BASAVA, I. L. R., 15 Mad. 75. [Parker and Shephard, JJ. Nov. 5, 17, 1891.]

A DANCING-WOMAN (fourth accused) of a temple applied to the manager (first accused) of the temple for the appointment of a girl under the age of sixteen, whom she had adopted as her daughter, to her "kothu" mirasi office, to which duties more or less connected with the preparation of provisions of the temple were attached. The manager, before whom the girl had sung and danced, ordered that she be placed on the pay-abstract like other dancing-girls, and she was employed in the above-mentioned duties about the temple for about five months. It appeared that the dancing-women of the temple lived, partly at least, by prostitution, and there was evidence that the girl sang and danced in the temple, received wages, and wore a bottu (an emblem of marriage). The Magistrate upon the facts refused to frame a charge against the manager of the temple and the adoptive mother of the minor under the Penal Code, s. 372. Held per Collins, C.J. (Parker, J., diss.), that the Magistrate should have framed a charge. On a petition under the Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 435, 439, preferred by the complainant, who was a dismissed servant of the temple, after the prosecution had been pending for two years, it appeared that the girl had suffered no harm. Held that, whether or not the Magistrate should have framed a charge, the High Court was not bound to send the case for re trial.—SRINIVASA v. ANNASAMI, I. L. R., 15 Mad. 323. [Collins, C.J., and Parker, J. Mar. 8, 9, 22, 1892.]

THE accused dedicated his minor daughter, five or six years of age, to the service of a temple as a dancing-girl. The evidence showed that dancing-girls attached to a temple, as a rule, led immoral lives. Held that these facts were sufficient to constitute an offence under s. 372 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. TIPPA, I. L. R., 16 Bom. 737. [Jardine and Telang, JJ. Mar. 10, 1892.]

A young prostitute under 16 years of age was brought to a house of assignation by the accused at the request of the complainant, and for his supposed use on that one occasion, it not being contemplated that the girl should be sold or let out for a period of employment, or for the purpose of being employed by the complainant as a prostitute, or for the purpose of being disposed of by him for that course of life. Held that such a letting out by the accused was not within the meaning of s. 372 of the Penal Code which, on the authorities, contemplates a case of letting or hiring or other similar transaction, by which the possession of a girl is obtained with the intention of employing her habitually for the purpose of indiscriminate sexual intercourse. Dowlath Bee v. Shaik Ali (5 Mad. H. C. R. 473) followed.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v SUKEE RAUR, I. L. R., 21 Cal. 97. [Pigot J. Aug. 26, 1893.]

IN order to constitute an offence under s. 373 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that the intention or knowledge of likelihood as to the employment of the minor for purposes of prostitution should be, with reference to employment, either immediate or at some definite, and not very remote, future period, but an offence under the section is complete as soon as a girl is purchased with the guilty intention or knowledge of likelihood that she will, while still a minor under the age of 16 years, be employed for that purpose, although the point of time for such employment may be remote by reason of her physical incapacity for the purpose. H, the father of two girls, twins about a year old, sold one of them to K, a prostitute, for Rs. 9, and within ten days of such sale also sold her the other for Rs. 14. K was shown to have previously purchased another child whom she had brought up from her infancy, and who was then living with her, and leading the life of a prostitute. Both H and K made confessions as to the guilty knowledge and intention with which the sale of the two children was made. K's confession was made within two hours after her arrest, and immediately thereafter she was committed to hajat for seven days. On the seventh day, on being brought up for trial before the Deputy Magistrate, she retracted her confession, and assigned an innocent reason for her purchase of the girl. H and K were tried jointly—H being charged with an offence under s. 372, viz., selling the girls for the purpose of prostitution, and K with an offence under s. 373, viz., buying for the same purpose. Neither was charged with abetting the other. The two confessions were used as evidence, and there was other evidence tending to prove the intention and guilty knowledge. The Deputy Magistrate convicted each of the offence with which they were charged. On appeal the Sessions Judge acquitted K on the ground that the offence under s. 373 could not be committed unless the intention was that the minor was to be used for the purpose of prostitution at some definite future time, and that it would be carrying the law too far to hold that the intention had reference to a period some 12 or 14 years after the purchase when the minor became capable of being used for that purpose. Held, for the reasons above stated, that the acquittal on that ground was erroneous. Held, further, that, having regard to the circumstances under which the confession of K was given and retracted, it was open to suspicion, and could not safely be acted upon, and that the confession made by H was not legally admissible against her, as they were not being tried jointly for the same offence. Held, also, that having regard to the provisions of s. 106, ill. (a) of the Evidence Act, and to the fact that there was evidence, apart from the confessions, which tended to show the knowledge and intention which the character and circumstances of the act suggested, the onus lay on K to show that the intention was other then that which the act suggested, or that the employment of the girls as prostitutes was not intended till after they had attained the age of 16 years, and that, as she had failed to show this, and the evidence all tended the other way, the acquittal was erroneous, and must be reversed. —THE DEPUTY LEGAL REMEMBRANCER v. KARUNY BAISTORI, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 164. [Banerjee and Sale, JJ. Oct. 19, 1864.]

A MINOR girl under the age of sixteen years was taken by accused No. 1, under the direction of accused No. 2, from Sholapur to Tuljapur (in the Nizam's territory), and there dedicated to the goddess Amba, with intent or knowing it to be likely that the minor would be used for purposes of prostitution. The District Magistrate of Sholapur convicted accused No. 1 of an offence under section 372 and accused No. 2 of abetment of the offence under s. 372 and 108A of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced them each to six months' rigorous imprisonment. Held that as the offence of the disposal of the minor took place out of British India, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the offence, in the absence of a certificate of the Political Agent or the sanction of the Local Government as required by s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898.) Held, also, that accused No. 2 was not guilty of abetment, and s. 108A of the Indian Penal Code had no application to the present case. Mere intention not followed by any act cannot constitute any offence, and an indirect preparation which does not amount to an act which amounts to a commencement of the offence does not constitute either a principal offence or an attempt or abetment of the same. The intention of either of the accused while they were staying at Sholapur did not constitute any offence, and their removal with the girl to Tuljapur did not by itself constitute an abetment.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BAKU, I. L. R., 24 Bom. 287. [Ranade and Crowe, JJ. Oct. 9, 1899.]

373. Whoever buys, hires, or otherwise obtains possession of, any minor under the age of sixteen years, with intent that such minor shall be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution, or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or knowing it to be likely that such minor will be employed or used for any such purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

WITH reference to the clause—obtains possession of any minor, &c.—it has been held that, where the charge is the purchase or acquisition of the minor for an immoral purpose, the proper Court to try the offence under s. 373 is the Court having jurisdiction in the place in which the purchase or acquisition was made, and not the Court having jurisdiction in the place of subsequent retention in another district.—C. N. A., N.-W. P., Pt. II., 131.

THE prisoner was tried upon a charge of having obtained possession of Dowlath Bee, a minor, aged ten years, with intent that she should be used for an unlawful and immoral purpose, that is to say, for the purpose of illicit intercourse, and having thereby committed an offence under s. 373 of the Penal Code. The evidence showed that the prisoner met Dowlath Bee, a girl eleven years old, in a street at Triplicane, and promised to give her a pice if she would accompany him into an uninhabited house close by, and allow him to have sexual intercourse with her. The girl went willingly with the prisoner; and both were detected in the act of having sexual intercourse. The girl had gone out without permission, had not attained the age of puberty, and the evidence tended to show that the girl had not before had sexual connection. The jury convicted the prisoner. Held by the High Court that the case proved against the prisoner did not make out the offence charged.—DOWLATH BEE v. SHAIK ALI, 5. Mad. H. C. R. 473. [Scotland, C.J., and Holloway and Innes, JJ. May 27, 1870.] Followed in Queen-Empress v. Sukee Kaur, I. L. R., 21 Cal. 97, see under s. 372, supra.

THE prisoners were convicted, the one of disposing of, and the other of receiving, two children, females under the age of 16 years, with intent that such females should be used for the purpose of prostitution. The evidence showed that the children were disposed of and registered as dancing-girls of a pagoda for the purpose of being brought up as dancing-girls. Held that offences under ss. 372 and 373 of the Penal Code had been committed, and that the prisoners were properly convicted.—Ex-parte PADMAVATI, 5 Mad H. C. R. 415. [Holloway and Innes, JJ. Aug. 4, 1870.]

WHERE a girl, under 16 years of age, who was travelling with a chance-protector (not her lawful guardian), went off with the accused voluntarily and without any false inducement or force on his part, and without any agreement between the accused and the girl or her protector that she should prostitute herself, and the accused subsequently hired out the girl on two occasions for the purpose of sexual intercourse held, reversing the order of the lower Court, that no offence was made out against accused under s. 373 or s. 366. In order to constitute an offence under s. 373, there must be a taking possession of the minor under some agreement or understanding, either with some third person or the minor, that the minor is to be employed for some purpose specified in the section.—HARDEO v. EMPRESS, Panj. Rec., No. 7 of 1880.

CERTAIN persons falsely representing that a minor girl of a low caste was a member of a higher caste, induced a member of such higher caste to take her in marriage, and to pay money for her, in the full belief that such representation was true. Held per Stuart, C.J., that such persons could not be convicted, on these facts, of offences under ss. 372 and 373 of the Penal Code. Per Oldfield, J., and Straight, J., that, if such girl was disposed of for the purpose of marriage, it could not be said, because the marriage might be invalid under Hindu law, that such persons acted with the intention that she should be employed or used for the purpose of prostitution, or for any unlawful and immoral purpose, or that they knew it to be likely that she would be employed or used for such purpose, and consequently they could not be convicted of an offence under those sections. Per Pearson, J., and Spankie, J., that such girl having been disposed of for the purpose of marriage, although the marriage might be objectionable under Hindu law, it did not appear that it was wholly invalid, and, therefore, such intent or knowledge could not certainly be presumed, and such persons could not be convicted of offences under those sections.—EMPRESS v. SRI LALL, I. L. R., 2 All. 694. [Stuart, C. J., and Pearson, Spankie, Oldfield, and Straight, JJ. Feb. 9, 1880.]

IN order to constitute an offence under s. 373 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that the intention or knowledge of likelihood as to the employment of the minor for purposes of prostitution should be, with reference to employment, either immediate or at some definite, and not very remote, future period, but an offence under the section is complete as soon as a girl is purchased with the guilty intention or knowledge of likelihood that she will, while still a minor under the age of 16 years, be employed for that purpose, although the point of time for such employment may be remote by reason of her physical incapacity for the purpose. H, the father of two girls, twins about a year old, sold one of them to K, a prostitute, for Rs 9, and within ten days of such sale also sold her the other for Rs. 14. K was shown to have previously purchased another child whom she had brought up from her infancy, and who was then living with her, and leading the life of a prostitute. Both H and K made confessions as to the guilty knowledge and intention with which the sale of the two children was made. K's confession was made within two hours after her arrest, and immediately thereafter she was committed to hazat for seven days. On the seventh day, on being brought up for trial before the Deputy Magistrate, she retracted her confession, and assigned an innocent reason for her purchase of the girl. H and K were tried jointly—H being charged with an offence under s. 372, viz., selling the girls for the purpose of prostitution, and K with an offence under s. 373, viz., buying for the same purpose. Neither was charged with abetting the other. The two confessions were used as evidence, and there was other evidence tending to prove the intention and guilty knowledge. The Deputy Magistrate convicted each of the offence with which they were charged. On appeal the Sessions Judge acquitted K on the ground that the offence under s. 373 could not be committed unless the intention was that the minor was to be used for the purpose of prostitution at some definite future time, and that it would be carrying the law too far to hold that the intention had reference to a period some 12 or 14 years after the purchase when the minor became capable of being used for that purpose. Held, for the reasons above stated, that the acquittal on that ground was erroneous. Held, further, that, having regard to the circumstances under which the confession of K was given and retracted, it was open to suspicion, and could not safely be acted upon, and that the confession made by H was not legally admissible against her, as they were not being tried jointly for the same offence. Held, also, that having regard to the provisions of s. 106, ill. (a) of the Evidence Act, and to the fact that there was evidence, apart from the confessions, which tended to show the knowledge and intention which the character and circumstances of the act suggested, the onus lay on K to show that the intention was other than that which the act suggested, or that the employment of the girls as prostitutes was not intended till after they had attained the age of 16 years, and that, as she had failed to show this, and the evidence all tended the other way, the acquittal was erroneous, and must be reversed.—THE DEPUTY LEGAL REMEMBRANCER v. KARUNA BAISTOBI, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 164. [Banerjee and Sale, JJ. Oct 19, 1894.] Approved in Queen-Empress v. Chanda, I. L. R., 18 All 24, infra.

To constitute the offence provided for by s. 373 of the Penal Code it is necessary, first, that a minor under sixteen years of age shall be bought, hired, or otherwise obtained possession of; and, secondly, that the minor shall be bought, hired, or otherwise obtained possession of with the intent that the same minor, while still under the age of sixteen years, shall be employed for the purposes of prostitution, or with the knowledge that it is likely that the said minor, while still under the age of sixteen years will be employed or used for an unlawful and immoral purpose. The offence is complete so soon as the obtaining possession, with the requisite intention or knowledge, of the minor, is accomplished, though the minor may not enter upon prostitution until years after she has attained maturity, or may never enter upon such a profession at all. The Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Karuna Baistobi (I. L. R., 22 Cal. 164) approved.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. CHANDA, I. L. R., 18 All. 24. [Knox, Banerji, and Aikman, JJ. June 26, 1895.]

IN a charge against a dancing girl under s. 373 of the Indian Penal Code for having purchased a young girl with intent that she would be used for the purposes of prostitution or knowing it to be likely that she would be so used, evidence was given of the fact of purchase for a consideration, and that numerous other dancing girls residing in the neighbourhood were in the habit of obtaining girls and bringing them up as dancing girls or prostitutes, and that there were no instances of girls brought up by dancing girls ever having been married. On its being contended that there was no evidence of intent to support a conviction under s. 373 of the Indian Penal Code. Held that there was evidence before the Court to support the conviction.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PAPA SANI, I L. R., 23 Mad. 159. [Boddam and Moore, JJ. Aug. 31, 1899.]

OF RAPE.*

375. A man is said to commit "rape" who, except in the case hereinafter excepted, has sexual intercourse with a woman under circumstances falling under any of the five following descriptions:—

Rape.

First.—Against her will.

Secondly.—Without her consent.

Thirdly.—With her consent, when her consent has been obtained by putting her in fear of death or of hurt.

Fourthly.—With her consent, when the man knows that he is not her husband and that her consent is given because she believes that he is another man to whom she is, or believes herself to be, lawfully married.

Fifthly.—With or without her consent, when she is under twelve † years of age.

Explanation.—Penetration is sufficient to constitute the sexual intercourse necessary to the offence of rape.

Exception.—Sexual intercourse by a man with his own wife, the wife not being under twelve † years of age, is not rape.

If the sexual intercourse was by a man with his own wife, the following is the procedure: Police not to arrest without warrant. Summons to issue in the first instance. Bail to be taken. Not compoundable. Triable by Court of Session. In any other case the following is the procedure: Police may arrest without warrant. Warrant to issue in the first instance. Not bailable. Not compoundable. Triable by Court of Session.

376. Whoever commits rape shall be punished with transportation for life, or with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

SEXUAL intercourse by a man with a woman without her free consent, i.e., a consent obtained without putting her in fear of injury, amounts to rape; and the Judge should leave the question to the jury, and not direct them to find that the woman's consent after considerable struggle renders the charge of rape nugatory.—QUEEN v. AKBAR KAZEE, 1 W. THE measure of punishment in a case of rape should not depend on the social position of the party injured, but on the greater or less atrocity of the crime, the conduct of the criminal, and the defenceless and unprotected state of the injured female.—QUEEN v. JHANTAH NOSHYO, 6 W. UNDER ss. 57, 376, and 511 of the Penal Code, a sentence of ten years' transportation or of five years' rigorous imprisonment, may be passed for the offence of attempt to commit rape; but a sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment, commutable under s. 59 of the Penal Code to seven years' transportation, is illegal.—QUEEN v. JOSEPH MERIAM, 10 *W. AN offence under s. 365 of the Penal Code is, within the meaning of s. 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a minor offence as compared with offences under s. 366 and s. 376 of the Penal Code; and the High Court, in dealing with a case under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code, can convict an accused of the former offence without a formal charge having been framed. Per Banerjee, J.—The words "minor offence" have not been defined by law, they are to be taken, not in any technical sense, but in their ordinary sense.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SITANATH MANDAL, I. WITH reference to ss. 59 and 377, Penal Code, when an offence is punishable either with transportation for life or imprisonment for a term of years, if a sentence of transportation for a term less than life is awarded, such term cannot exceed the term of imprisonment.—REG. v. NAIADA, I. THE accused was tried by the Sessions Court for an unnatural offence, and convicted on a charge which did not allege the time when, place where, or point to any known or unknown person with whom, the offence was committed, and without any proofs of those particulars, the facts proved against him only being that he habitually wore woman's clothes, and exhibited physical signs of having committed the offence. The High Court, in the exercise of its criminal revisional jurisdiction, sent for the records, and delivered the following judgment "This conviction cannot possibly be sustained. The charge upon which the accused was committed, and subsequently tried, alleges neither time when, place where, nor points to any known or unknown person with whom, the particular act charged as an offence against s. 377 of the Penal Code was committed: and for aught that appears to the contrary, the suggested unnatural intercourse may have taken place out of the jurisdiction of the Moradabad Court, and at some place where the Penal Code is not in force. At best, the case for the prosecution is, that the accused is a habitual sodomite; but at present there is no provision of the law that covers it, or renders him amenable to punishment upon evidence of so vague and general a description as that to be found in the present record. I fully appreciate the desire of the authorities at Moradabad to check these disgusting practices; but neither they nor I can set law and procedure at defiance in order to obtain an object, however, laudable. The conviction is quashed, and the accused must be released." —QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KHAIRATI, I. L. R., 6 All. 204. [Straight, J. Jan. 31, 1884.]

CHAPTER XVII.*

OF OFFENCES AGAINST PROPERTY.

INDIAN LAW COMMISSIONERS' REPORT ON OFFENCES AGAINST PROPERTY.

THERE is such a mutual relation between the different parts of the law that those parts must all attain perfection together. That portion, be it what it may, which is selected to be first put into the form of a Code, with whatever clearness and precision it may be expressed and arranged must necessarily partake, to a considerable extent, of the uncertainty and obscurity in which other portions are still left.

This observation applies with peculiar force to that important portion of the Penal Code which we now propose to consider. The offences defined in this chapter are made punishable on the ground that they are violations of the right of property. But the right of property is itself the creature of the law. It is evident, therefore, that, if the substantive civil law touching this right be imperfect or obscure, the penal law, which is auxiliary to that substantive law, and of which the object is to add a sanction to that substantive law, must partake of the imperfection or obscurity. It is impossible for us to be certain that we have made proper penal provisions for violations of civil rights till we have a complete knowledge of all civil rights, and this we cannot have while the law respecting those rights is either obscure or unsettled. As the present state of the civil law causes perplexity to the Legislator in framing the Penal Code, so it will occasionally cause perplexity to the Judges in administering that Code. If it be matter of doubt what things are the subjects of certain right, in whom that right resides, and to what that right extends, it must also be matter of doubt whether that right has or has not been violated.

For example. A, without Z's permission, shoots snipes on Z's ground, and carries them away. Here, if the law of civil rights grants the property in such birds to any person who can catch them, A has not, by killing them and carrying them away, invaded Z's right of property. If, on the other hand, the law of civil right declares such birds the property of the person on whose lands they are, A has invaded Z's right of property. If it be matter of doubt what the state of the civil law on the subject actually is, it must also be matter of doubt whether A has wronged Z or not.

* As to enhanced punishment for second conviction for certain offences under Ch. XVII., see s. 75, supra.

By the English law,* pigeons, while they frequent a dove-cot, are the property of the owner of the dove-cot By the Roman Law,† they were not so. By the French law,‡ they are his property at one time of the year, and not his property at another. Here it is evident that the taking of such a pigeon, which would in England be a violation of the right of property, would be none in a country governed by the Roman law, and that, in France, it would depend on the time of the year whether it were so or not.

A lends a horse to B. B sells the horse to Z, who buys it believing in good faith that B has a right to sell it. A sees the horse feeding. He mounts it, and rides away with it. Here, if the law of civil rights provides that a thing sold by one who has no right to sell it, shall, nevertheless be the property of a bond-fide purchaser, A has invaded Z's right of property. If, on the other hand A's right is not affected by what has passed between B and Z, A does not commit an infraction of Z's right of property. If it be doubtful whether the right to the horse be in A or in Z, it must also be doubtful whether A has or has not committed an infraction of Z's right.

A path running across a field which belongs to Z has, during three years, been used as a public way. A, in spite of a prohibition from Z, uses it as such Here it by the civil law, an usage of three years is sufficient to create a right of way. A has committed no infraction of Z's right But, if a prescription of more than three years, or an express grant, be necessary to create a right of way, A has committed an infraction of Z's right of property

A discovers a mine on land occupied by him. Here, if the civil law assigns all minerals to the occupier of the land, A violates no right of property by appropriating the minerals. But, if the civil law assigns all minerals to the Government, A violates the right of property by such appropriation.

The sea recedes, and leaves dry land in the immediate neighbourhood of Z's property, Z cultivates the land. A turns cattle on the land, and destroys Z's crops. Here, if the civil law assigns alluvial additions to the occupier of the nearest land, A is a wrong-doer. If it declares alluvial additions common, A is not a wrong-doer. If it assigns alluvial additions to the Government, both A and Z are wrong-doers. If it be uncertain to whom the law assigns alluvial additions, it must be also uncertain who is the wrong-doer, and whether there be any wrong-doer.

The substantive civil law, in the instances which we have given, is different in different countries, and in the same country at different times. As the substantive civil law varies, the penal law, which is added as a guard to the substantive civil law, must vary also. And while many important questions of substantive civil right are undetermined, the Courts must occasionally feel doubtful whether the provisions of the Penal Code do or do not apply to a particular case

It would evidently be impossible for us to determine in the Penal Code all the momentous questions of civil right which, in the unsettled state of Indian jurisprudence will admit of dispute. We have, indeed, ventured to take for granted in our illustrations many things which properly belong to the domain of the civil law, because, without doing so, it would have been impossible for us to explain our meaning. But we have, to the best of our judgment, avoided questions respecting which, even in the present state of Indian jurisprudence, much doubt could exist. And, in the text of the law, we have as closely as was possible, confined ourselves to what is in strictness, the duty of persons engaged in framing a Penal Code. We have provided punishments for the infraction of rights without determining in whom those rights vest, or to what those rights extend. We are inclined to hope that, even if the Penal Code should come into operation before the Code of civil rights has been framed, the number of cases in which the want of a Code of civil rights would occasion perplexity to the criminal tribunals will bear but a very small proportion to those in which no such perplexity will exist.

INDIAN LAW COMMISSIONERS' REPORT ON OFFENCES AGAINST PROPERTY—contd.

All the violations of the rights of property which we propose to make punishable by this chapter fall under one or more of the following heads :—

1. Theft.
2. Extortion.
3. Robbery.
4. The criminal misappropriation of property not in possession
5. Criminal breach of trust
6. The receiving of stolen property.
7. Cheating.
8. Fraudulent bankruptcy.
9. Mischief.
10. Criminal trespass.

All these offences resemble each other in this, that they cause, or have some tendency, directly or indirectly, to cause, some party not to have such a dominion over property as that party is entitled by law to have.

The first great line which divides these offences may be easily traced Some of them merely prevent or disturb the enjoyment of property by one who has a right to it Others transfer property to one who has no right to it. Some merely cause injury to the sufferer. Others, by means of wrongful loss to the sufferer, cause wrongful gain to some other party. The latter class of offences are designated in this Code as fraudulent

Every offence against property may be fraudulently committed. But theft, extortion, robbery, the criminal misappropriation of property not in possession, criminal breach of trust, the receiving of stolen property, fraudulent bankruptcy, and cheating, must be in all cases fraudulently committed. Fraud enters into the definition of every one of these offences. But fraud does not enter into the definition of mischief or of criminal trespass.

Theft, the criminal misappropriation of property not in possession, and criminal breach of trust, are, in the great majority of cases, easily distinguishable. But the distinction becomes fainter and fainter as we approach the line of demarcation, and at length the offences fade imperceptibly into each other. This indistinctness may be greatly increased by unskilful legislation. But it has its origin in the nature of things and in the imperfection of language, and must still remain in spite of all that legislation can effect.

We believe it to be impossible to mark with precision by any words the circumstances which constitute possession. It is easy to put cases about which no doubt whatever exists, and about which the language of lawyers and of the multitude would be the same. It will hardly be doubted for example, that a gentleman's watch lying on a table in his room is in his possession, though it is not in his hand, and though he may not know whether it is on his writing-table or on his dressing-table. As little will it be doubted that a watch which a gentleman lost a year ago on a journey, and which he has never heard of since, is not in his possession. It will not be doubted that, when a person gives a dinner, his silver forks, while in the hands of his guest, are still in his possession; and it will be as little doubted that his silver forks are not in his possession when he has deposited them with a pawn-broker as a pledge. But between these extreme cases lie many cases in which it is difficult to pronounce with confidence, either that property is, or that it is not, in a person's possession.

This difficulty, sufficiently great in itself, would, we conceive, be increased by laws which should pronounce that in a set of cases arbitrarily selected from the mass property is in the possession of some party in whose possession according to the understanding of all mankind, it is not. The rule of English law respecting what is called breaking bulk is an instance of what we mean. A person who has entrusted a hamper of wine to another to carry to a great distance is not in possession of that hamper of wine. But if the person in trust opens the hamper and takes out a bottle, the possession, according to the English lawbooks, forthwith flies back to the distant owner. Mr Livingston has laid down a rule of similar kind, the effect of which, if we understand it rightly, is to annul the whole law of theft as he has framed it, and indeed to render it impossible that theft can be committed in Louisiana. Theft is defined by him to be "the fraudulently taking of corporal personal property having some assignable value, and belonging to another, from his possession and without his assent." But in a subsequent clause he says that "neither the ownership nor the legal possession of property is changed by theft alone, without the circumstances required in such case by the Civil Code, in order to produce a change of property; therefore, stolen goods, if fraudulently taken from the thief, are stolen from the original proprietor." But, if stolen by the second thief from the original proprietor, they must, according to Mr. Livingston's definition of theft, be taken by the second thief out of the possession of the original proprietor. Therefore, the first thief has left them in the possession of the original proprietor. That is to say, the first thief has not committed theft.

It will not be imagined that we refer to this inconsistency in the Code of Louisiana for the purpose of throwing any censure on the distinguished author of that Code. To do so would be unjust, and in us especially most ungrateful, and also most imprudent. For we are by no means confident that inconsistencies quite as remarkable will not be detected in the Code which we now submit to Government. We note this error of Mr. Livingston for the purpose of showing how dangerous it is for a Legislator to attempt to escape from a difficulty by giving a technical sense to an expression which he nevertheless continues to use in a popular sense.

For the purpose of preventing any difference of opinion from arising in cases likely to occur very often, we have laid down a few rules which we believe to be in accordance with the general sense of mankind as to what shall be held to constitute possession. But, in general, we leave it to the tribunals, without any direction, to determine whether particular property is at a particular time in the possession of a particular person or not.

Much uncertainty will still remain. This we cannot prevent. But we can, as it appears to us, prevent the uncertainty from producing any practical evil. The provision contained in cl. 61 will, we think, obviate all the inconveniences which might arise from doubts as to the exact limits which separate theft from misappropriation and from breach of trust.

The effect of that clause will be to prevent the Judges from wasting their time and ingenuity in devising nice distinctions. If a case which is plainly theft comes before them, the offender will be punished as a thief; if a case which is plainly breach of trust comes before them, the offender will be punished as guilty of breach of trust. If they have to try a case which lies on the frontier, one of those thefts which are hardly distinguishable from breaches of trust, or one of those breaches of trust which are hardly distinguishable from theft, they will not trouble themselves with subtle distinctions; but, leaving it undetermined by which name the offence should be called, will proceed to determine, what is infinitely of greater importance, what shall be the punishment.

In theft, as we have defined it, the object of the offender always is to take property which is in the possession of a person out of that person's possession. Nor have we admitted a single exception to this rule. In the great majority of cases our classification will coincide with the popular classification. But there are a few aggravated cases of what we designate as misappropriation and breach of trust, which bear such an affinity to theft that it may seem idle to distinguish them from thefts. And it certainly would be idle to distinguish such cases from thefts, if the distinction were made with a view to those cases alone. But, as we have a line of distinction which we think it desirable to maintain in the great majority of cases, we think it desirable also to maintain that line in the few cases in which it may separate things which are of a very similar description.

One offence which it may be thought that we ought to have placed among thefts is the pillaging of property during the interval which elapses between the time when the possessor of the property dies and the time when it comes into the possession of some person authorized to take charge of it. This crime in our classification falls under the head, not of theft, but of misappropriation of property not in possession.

The ancient Roman jurists viewed it in the same light. The property taken under such circumstances, they argued, being in no person's possession, could not be taken out of any person's possession. The taking, therefore, was not furtum, but belonged to a separate head called the crimen expilatæ hæreditatis.* The French lawyers, however, long ago found out a legal fiction by means of which this offence was treated as theft in those parts of France where the Roman law was in force†. Mr. Livingston's definition of theft appears to us to exclude this species of offence, nor indeed do we think that it could be reached by any provision of his Code. That it ought to be punished with severity under some name or other is indisputable. By what name it should be designated may admit of some dispute. If we call it theft, we speak the popular language. If we call it misappropriation of property not in possession, we avoid an anomaly, and maintain a line which, in the great majority of cases, is reasonable and convenient. On the whole, we are inclined to maintain this line.

CRIMINAL BREACH OF TRUST, ETC.

Again, a carrier who opens a letter entrusted to his charge, and takes thence a bank-note, would be commonly called a thief. It is certain that his offence is not morally distinguishable from theft. Here, however, as before, we think it expedient to maintain our general rule; and we therefore designate the offence of the carrier, not as theft, but as criminal breach of trust.

The illustrations which we have appended to the provisions respecting theft, the misappropriation of property not in possession, and breach of trust, will, we hope, sufficiently explain to His Lordship in Council the reasons for most of those provisions.

It may possibly be remarked that we have not, like Mr. Livingston, made it part of our definition of theft, that the property should be of some assignable value. We would, therefore, observe that we have not done so only because we conceive that the law, as framed by us, obtains the same end by a different road. By one of the general exceptions which we have proposed, it is provided that nothing shall be an offence by reason of any harm which it may cause, or be intended to cause, or be known to be likely to cause, if the whole of that harm is so slight that no person of ordinary sense and temper would complain of such harm. This provision will prevent the law of theft from being abused for the purpose of punishing those venial violations of the right of property which the common sense of mankind readily distinguishes from crimes, such as the act of a traveller who tears a twig from a hedge, of a boy who takes stones from another person's ground to throw at birds, of a servant who dips his pen in his master's ink. It does not appear to us that any further rule on this subject is necessary.

EXTORTION.

The offence of extortion is distinguished from the three offences which we have been considering by this obvious circumstance, that it is committed by the wrongful obtaining of a consent. In one single class of cases theft and extortion are in practice confounded together so inextricably that no judge, however sagacious, could discriminate between them. This class of cases, therefore, has, in all systems of jurisprudence with which we are acquainted, been treated as a perfectly distinct class; and we think that this arrangement, though somewhat anomalous, is strongly recommended by convenience. We have, therefore, made robbery a separate crime.

ROBBERY.

There can be no case of robbery which does not fall within the definition either of theft or of extortion. But in practice it will perpetually be matter of doubt whether a particular act of robbery was a theft or an extortion. A large proportion of robberies will be half theft, half extortion. A seizes Z, threatens to murder him unless he delivers all his property, and begins to pull off Z's ornaments. Z in terror begs that A will take all he has, and spare his life, assists in taking off his ornaments, and delivers them to A. Here, such ornaments as A took without Z's consent are taken by theft. Those which Z delivered up from fear of death are acquired by extortion. It is by no means improbable that Z's right-arm bracelet may have been obtained by theft, and left-arm bracelet by extortion; that the rupees in Z's girdle may have been obtained by theft, and those in his turban by extortion. Probably in nine-tenths of the robberies which are committed, something like this actually takes place, and it is probable that a few minutes later neither the robber nor the person robbed would be able to recollect in what proportions theft and extortion were mixed in the crime; nor is it at all necessary for the ends of justice that this should be ascertained. For, though in general the consent of a sufferer is a circumstance which very materially modifies the character of the offence, and which ought therefore to be made known to the Courts, yet the consent which a person gives to the taking of his property by a ruffian who holds a pistol to his breast is a circumstance altogether immaterial.

DACOITY.

His Lordship in Council will perceive that we have provided punishment of exemplary severity for that atrocious crime which is designated in the Regulations of Bengal and Madras by the name of Dacoity. This name we have thought it convenient to retain for the purpose of denoting, not only actual gang-robbery, but the attempting to rob when such an attempt is made or aided by a gang.

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.

The law relating to the offence of receiving stolen goods appears to require no comment.

CHEATING.

The offence of cheating must, like that of extortion, be committed by the wrongful obtaining of a consent. The difference is that the extortioner obtains the consent by intimidation, and the cheat by deception. There is no offence in the Code with which we have found it so difficult to deal as that of cheating. It is evident that the practising of intentional deceit for purposes of gain ought sometimes to be punished. It is equally evident that it ought not always to be punished. It will hardly be disputed that a person who defrauds a banker by presenting a forged cheque, or who sells ornaments of paste as diamonds, may, with propriety, be made liable to severe penalties. On the other hand, to punish every defendant who obtains pecuniary favours by false professions of attachment to a patron, every legacy-hunter who obtains a bequest by cajoling a rich testator, every debtor who moves the compassion of his creditors by overcharged pictures of his misery, every petitioner who, in his appeals to the charitable, represents his distresses as wholly unmerited, when he knows that he has brought them on himself by intemperance and profusion, would be highly inexpedient. In fact, if all the misrepresentations and exaggerations in which men indulge for the purpose of gaining at the expense of others were made crimes, not a day would pass in which many thousands of buyers and sellers would not incur the penalities of the law. It happens hourly that an article which is worth ten rupees is affirmed by the seller to be cheap at twelve rupees, and by the buyer to be dear at eight rupees. The seller comes down to eleven rupees, and declares that to be his last word. The buyer rises to nine, and says that he will go no higher. The seller falsely pretends that the article is unusually good of its kind, the buyer that it is unusually bad of its kind, the seller that the price is likely soon to rise, the buyer that it is likely soon to fall. Here we have deceptions practised for the sake of gain, yet no judicious Legislator would punish these deceptions. A very large part of the ordinary business of life is conducted all over the world, and nowhere more than in India, by means of a conflict of skill, in the course of which, deception to a certain extent perpetually takes place. The moralist may regret this; but the legislator sees that the result of the attempts of the buyer and seller to gain an unfair advantage over each other is that, in the vast majority of cases, articles are sold for the prices which it is desirable that they should fetch; and, therefore, he does not think it necessary to interfere. It is enough for him to know that all this great mass of falsehood practically produces the same effect which would be produced by truth, and that any law directed against such falsehood would, in all probability, be a dead letter, and would, if carried into rigorous execution, do more mischief in a month than all the lies which are told in the making of bargains throughout all the bazars of India produce in a century.

If then it be admitted that many deceptions committed for the sake of gain ought to be punished, and that many such deceptions ought not to be punished, where ought the line to run?

It appears to us that the line which we have drawn is correct in theory, that it is not more inconvenient in practice than any other line must be which can be drawn while the civil law of India remains in its present state, and that it will be unexceptionable whenever the civil law of India shall be ascertained, digested, and corrected.

We propose to make it cheating to obtain property by deception in all cases where the property is fraudulently obtained, that is to say, in all cases where the intention of the person who has by deceit obtained the property was to cause a distribution of property which the law pronounces to be a wrongful distribution, and in no other case whatever. However immoral a deception may be, we do not consider it as an offence against the rights of property, if its object is only to cause a distribution of property which the law recognizes as rightful. A few examples will show the way in which this principle will operate.

A intentionally deceives Z into a belief that he is strongly attached to Z. A thus induces Z to make a will, by which a large legacy is left to A. Here A's conduct is immoral and scandalous. But still A has a legal right on Z's death to receive the legacy. Even if the clearest proofs of A's insincerity are laid before a tribunal, even if A in open Court avows his insincerity, the will cannot, on that account, be set aside. The gain, therefore, which A obtains under Z's will, is not, in the legal sense of the expression, wrongful gain. He has practised deception. He has thus caused gain to himself, and loss to others. But that gain is a gain to which the civil law declares him entitled, and which the civil law will assist him to recover if it be withheld from him. That loss is a loss with which the civil law declares that the losers must put up. A, therefore, has not committed the offence of cheating under our definition.

But suppose that the civil law should contain, as we think that it ought to contain, a provision declaring null, a will made in favour of strangers by a testator, who erroneously believed his children to be dead. And suppose that A intentionally deceives Z into a belief that Z's only son has been lost at sea, and by this deception induces Z to make a will by which everything is left to A. Here the case will be different. The will being null, any property which A could obtain under that will would be property which he had no legal right so to obtain, and to which another person had a legal right. The object of A has therefore been wrongful gain to himself attended with wrongful loss to another party. A has, therefore, under our definition, been guilty of cheating.

Again, take the case which we before put of a buyer and a seller. They have told each other many untruths, but none of those untruths was such as, after the article had been delivered, and the price paid, would be held by a Civil Court to be a ground for pronouncing that either of them possessed what he had no right to possess. Though the buyer has falsely depreciated the article, yet, when he takes it and pays for it, the legal right to it is transferred to him, as well as the possession. Though the seller has falsely extolled the article, yet, when he receives the price and delivers the article, the legal right to the price passes with the possession. However censurable, in a moral point of view, the deceptions practised by both may have been, yet those deceptions were intended to produce a distribution of property strictly legal. Neither the buyer nor the seller, therefore, has been guilty of cheating. But if the seller has produced a sample of the article, and has falsely assured the buyer that the article corresponds to that sample, the case is different. If the article does not correspond to the sample, the buyer is entitled to have the purchase-money back. The seller has taken and kept the purchase-money without having a legal right to take or keep it, and it may be recovered from him by a legal proceeding. His gain is, therefore, wrongful, and is attended with wrongful loss to the buyer. He is, therefore, guilty of cheating under the definition.

So, if the seller passes off ornaments of paste on the buyer for diamonds, the price which the seller receives is a price to which he has no right, and which the buyer may recover from him by an action. Here, therefore, the object of the seller has been wrongful gain attended with wrongful loss to the buyer. The seller is therefore guilty of cheating.

So, if the buyer, intending to acquire possession of the goods without paying for them, induces the seller by deception to take a note which the buyer knows will be dishonoured, the buyer is guilty of cheating. His object is to retain in his own possession money which he is legally bound to pay to the seller. The gain which he makes by retaining the money is wrongful gain, and is attended with wrongful loss to the seller. He is, therefore within the definition.

Whether the principle on which this part of the law is framed be a sound principle, is a question which will be best determined by examining, first, whether our definition excludes anything that ought to be included; and, secondly, whether it includes anything that ought to be excluded.

It can scarcely, we think, be contended that our definition excludes anything that ought to be included. For surely it would be unreasonable to punish, as an offence against the right of property, an act which has caused, and was intended to cause, a distribution of property which the law declares to be right, and refuses to disturb. If such an act be an offence, it must be an offence on some ground distinct from the effect which it produces on the state of property. Thus, if a person to whom a debt is due, thinking that he shall obtain payment more easily if he assumes the appearance of being in the public service, wears a badge of office which he has no right to wear when he goes to make his demand, he is guilty of the offence defined in cl. 150; but if he gains only what he has a legal right to possess, if he deprives the debtor only of that which the debtor has no legal right to retain, he is not a wrong-doer as respects property, inasmuch as he has only rectified a wrong distribution of property.

Indeed, it appears to us that there is the strongest objection to punishing a man for a deception, and yet allowing him to retain what he has gained by that deception. What the civil law ought to say may be doubtful. But there can be no doubt that the civil and criminal law ought to say the same thing; that the one ought not to invite while the other repeals; that the Code ought not to be divided against itself. To send a person to prison for obtaining a sum of money, and yet to suffer him to keep that sum of money, is to hold out at once motives to deter and motives to incite. Humanity requires that punishment should be the last resource, a resource only employed when no other means can be found of producing the desired effect. Penal laws clearly ought not to be made for the preventing of deception if deception could be prevented by means of the Civil Code. To tempt men, therefore, to deceive by means of the Civil Code, and then to punish them for deceiving, is contrary to every sound principle.

We are, therefore, not apprehensive that we shall be thought to have granted impunity to any deception which ought to be punished as cheating.

But it is possible that our definition may be thought to include much that ought to be excluded. It certainly includes many acts which are not punishable by the law of England or of France. We propose to punish as guilty of cheating a man who, by false representations, obtains a loan of money not meaning to repay it; a man who, by false representations, obtains an advance of money, not meaning to perform the service, or to deliver the article for which the advance is given, a man who, by falsely pretending to have performed work for which he was hired, obtains pay to which he is not entitled.

In all these cases there is deception. In all, the deceiver's object is fraudulent. He intends, in all these cases, to acquire or retain wrongful possession of that to which some other person has a better claim, and which that other person is entitled to recover by law. In all these cases, therefore, the object has been wrongful gain, attended with wrongful loss. In all, therefore there has, according to our definition, been cheating. We cannot see why such acts as these should be treated as mere civil injuries—why they should be classed with the mere non-payment of a debt and the mere non-performance of a contract. They are infractions of a legal right effected by deliberate dishonesty. They are more pernicious than most of the acts which will be punishable under our Code.

They indicate more depravity, more want of principle, more want of shame, than most of the acts which will be punishable under our Code. We punish the man who gives another an angry push. We punish the man who locks another up for a morning. We punish the man who makes a sarcastic epigram on another. We punish the man who merely threatens another with outrage. And surely the man who, by premeditated deceit, enriches himself to the wrongful loss, perhaps to the utter ruin, of another, is not less deserving of punishment.

That some deceptions of this sort ought to be punished is admitted. But almost every argument which can be urged for punishing any is an argument for punishing all. The line between wilful fraudulent deception and good faith is a plain line. If there is any difficulty in applying it, that difficulty will arise, not from any defect in the line, but from the want of evidence in particular cases. But we are unable to find any reason for distinguishing one sort of fraudulent deception from another sort. The French Courts apply a test which appears to us to be very objectionable. They have decided that it is not escroquerie to cheat by false promises, or by exciting chimerical hopes, unless the sufferer had reasons of weight for believing that the promises were sincere, and the hopes well-grounded.* This rule seems to us to be a license for deception granted to cunning against simplicity. A weak and credulous person is more easily imposed on than a judicious and discerning person. And just so an infant is poisoned with a dose of laudanum which would hardly put a grown person to sleep: yet the poisoner is a murderer; a pregnant woman is grievously hurt by a blow which would make no impression on a boxer: yet the person who gives such a blow is punished with exemplary severity. The law in such cases inquires only whether the harm has been voluntarily caused or no. And why should the violation by deceit, of the right of property be treated differently? The deceiver proportions his artifices to the mental strength of those whom he has to deal with, just as the poisoner proportions his drugs to their bodily strength. And we see no more reason for exempting the deceiver from punishment, because he has effected his purpose by a gross fiction which could have duped only a weak person, than for exempting the poisoner from punishment because he has effected his purpose with a few drops of laudanum, which could have been fatal only to a young child.

Some persons may be startled at our proposing to punish as a cheat every man who obtains a loan by making promises of payment which he does not mean to keep. But let it be considered that a debtor, though he may have contracted his debts honestly, though it may be from absolute inability that he does not pay them, though his misfortunes may be the effect of no want of industry or caution on his part, is now actually liable to imprisonment. Surely it is unreasonable to detain in prison the man who, by mere misfortune, has involuntarily violated the rights of property, and to leave unpunished the man who has voluntarily, and by wilful deceit, attacked those rights, if only he is lucky enough to have money to satisfy the demands on him.

For example, A and B both borrow money from Z. A obtains it by boasting falsely of his great means, of the large remittances which he looks for from England, of his expectations from rich relations of the promises of preferment which he has received from the Government. Having obtained it, he secretly embarks on board of a ship, intending to abscond without repaying what he has borrowed B, on the other hand, has obtained a loan without the smallest misrepresentation, and fully purposes to repay it The failure of an agency-house in which all his funds were placed renders it impossible for him to meet his engagements. Can it be doubted which of these two debtors ought rather to be sent to prison? Can it be doubted that A is a proper subject of punishment, and that B is not so? Yet at present A, if he is arrested before the ship sails, and lays down the money, enjoys entire impunity, while B may pass years in a jail. It would be improper for us here to discuss at length the question of imprisonment for debt. But it seems clear that, whether it be or be not proper that a debtor, as such, should be imprisoned, a distinction ought to be made between the honest and dishonest debtor. We are inclined to believe that the indiscriminate imprisonment of all debtors would be found to be unnecessary if this distinction were made. But, while they are all put on the same footing, the law must be formed upon a rough calculation of the chances of dishonesty All must be treated worse than honest debtors ought to be treated because none are treated so severely as dishonest debtors ought to be treated A respectable man must be imprisoned for a storm, a bad season, or a fire, because his dishonest neighbour is not liable to criminal proceedings for cheating We are satisfied that the only way to get rid of imprisonment for debt, as debt, is to extend the penal law on the subject of cheating in a manner similar to that in which we propose to exte d it.

The provisions which we have framed on the subject of fraudulent bankruptcy are necessarily imperfect, and must remain so until the whole of that important part of the law has undergone an entire revision.

MISCHIEF.

The provisions which we propose on the subject of mischief do not appear to us to require any explanation.

TRESPASS.

We have given the name of trespass to every usurpation, however slight, of dominion, over property. We do not propose to make trespass, as such, an offence, except when it is committed in order to the commission of some offence injurious to some person interested in the property on which the trespass is committed, or for the purpose of causing annoyance to such a person. Even then we propose to visit it with a light punishment, unless it be attended with aggravating circumstances.

These aggravating circumstances are of two sorts. Criminal trespass may be aggravated by the way in which it is committed. It may also be aggravated by the end for which it is committed.

There is no sort of property which it is so desirable to guard against unlawful intrusion as the habitations in which men reside, and the buildings in which they keep their goods. The offence of trespassing on these places we designate as house-trespass, and we treat it as an aggravated form of criminal trespass.

House-trespass, again, may be aggravated by being committed in a surreptitious or in a violent manner. The former aggravated form of house-trespass we designate as lurking house-trespass; the latter we designate as house-breaking Again house-trespass in every form may be aggravated by the time at which it is committed Trespass of this sort has, for obvious reasons, always been considered as a more serious offence, when committed by night, than when committed by day. Thus, we have four aggravated forms of that sort of criminal trespass which we designate as house-trespass, lurking house-trespass by night, and house-breaking by night.

These are aggravations arising from the way in which the criminal trespass is committed. But criminal trespass may also be aggravated by the end for which it is committed. It may be committed for a frolic. It may be committed in order to a murder. It may also often happen that a criminal trespass which is venial, as respects the mode, may be of the greatest enormity as respects the end; and that a criminal trespass committed in the most reprehensible mode may be committed for an end of no great atrocity. Thus, A may commit house-breaking by night for the purpose of playing some idle trick on the inmates of a dwelling. B may commit simple criminal trespass by merely entering another's field for the purpose of murder or gang robbery. Here A commits trespass in the worse way. B commits trespass with the worse object. In our provisions, we have endeavoured to combine the aggravating circumstances in such a way that each may have its due effect in settling the punishment.

*Of Theft.

378. Whoever, intending to take dishonestly any moveable property out of the possession of any person without that person's consent, moves that property in order to such taking, is said to commit theft.

Theft.

Explanation 1.—A thing, so long as it is attached to the earth, not being moveable property, is not the subject of theft; but it becomes capable of being the subject of theft as soon as it is severed from the earth.

Explanation 2.—A moving, effected by the same act which effects the severance, may be a theft.

Explanation 3.—A person is said to cause a thing to move by removing an obstacle which prevented it from moving, or by separating it from any other thing, as well as by actually moving it.

Explanation 4.—A person who by any means causes an animal to move is said to move that animal, and to move every thing which, in consequence of the motion so caused, is moved by that animal.

Explanation 5.—The consent mentioned in the definition may be express or implied, and may be given either by the person in possession, or by any person having for that purpose authority, either express or implied.

Illustrations.

(a.) A cuts down a tree on Z's ground, with the intention of dishonestly taking the tree out of Z's possession, without Z's consent. Here, as soon as A has severed the tree in order to such taking, he has committed theft.

(b.) A puts a bait for dogs in his pocket, and thus induces Z's dog to follow it. Here, if A's intention be dishonestly to take the dog out of Z's possession without Z's consent, A has committed theft as soon as Z's dog has begun to follow A.

(c.) A meets a bullock carrying a box of treasure. He drives the bullock in a certain direction, in order that he may dishonestly take the treasure. As soon as the bullock begins to move, A has committed theft of the treasure.

(d.) A, being Z's servant, and entrusted by Z with the care of Z's plate, dishonestly runs away with the plate, without Z's consent. A has committed theft.

(e.) Z, going on a journey, entrusts his plate to A, the keeper of a warehouse, till Z shall return. A carries the plate to a gold-smith, and sells it. Here the plate was not in Z's possession. It could not therefore be taken out of Z's possession, and A has not committed theft, though he may have committed criminal breach of trust.

(f.) A finds a ring belonging to Z on a table in the house which Z occupies. Here the ring is in Z's possession, and, if A dishonestly removes it, A commits theft.

(g.) A finds a ring lying on the high road, not in the possession of any person. A, by taking it, commits no theft, though he may commit criminal misappropriation of property.

(h.) A sees a ring belonging to Z lying on a table in Z's house. Not venturing to misappropriate the ring immediately for fear of search and detection, A hides the ring in a place where it is highly improbable that it will ever be found by Z, with the intention of taking the ring from the hiding place, and selling it when the loss is forgotten. Here A, at the time of first moving the ring, commits theft.

(i.) A delivers his watch to Z, a jeweller, to be regulated. Z carries it to his shop. A, not owing the jeweller any debt for which the jeweller might lawfully detain the watch as a security, enters the shop openly, takes his watch by force out of Z's hand, and carries it away. Here A, though he may have committed criminal trespass and assault, has not committed theft, inasmuch as what he did was not done dishonestly.

(j.) If A owes money to Z for repairing the watch, and if Z retains the watch lawfully as a security for the debt, and A takes the watch out of Z's possession with the intention of depriving Z of the property as a security for his debt, he commits theft, inasmuch as he takes it dishonestly.

(k.) Again, if A, having pawned his watch to Z, takes it out of Z's possession without Z's consent, not having paid what he had borrowed on the watch, he commits theft, though the watch is his own property, inasmuch as he takes it dishonestly.

(l.) A takes an article belonging to Z out of Z's possession, without Z's consent, with the intention of keeping it until he obtains money from Z as a reward for its restoration. Here A takes dishonestly. A has therefore committed theft.

(m.) A, being on friendly terms with Z, goes into Z's library in Z's absence, and takes away a book without Z's express consent, for the purpose merely of reading it, and with the intention of returning it. Here it is probable that A may have conceived that he had Z's implied consent to use Z's book. If this was A's impression, A has not committed theft.

(n.) A asks charity from Z's wife. She gives A money, food, and clothes, which A knows to belong to Z, her husband. Here it is probable that A may conceive that Z's wife is authorized to give away alms. If this was A's impression, A has not committed theft.

(o.) A is the paramour of Z's wife. She gives A valuable property which A knows to belong to her husband Z, and to be such property as she has not authority from Z to give. If A takes the property dishonestly, he commits theft.

(p.) A, in good faith, believing property belonging to Z to be A's own property, takes that property out of B's possession. Here, as A does not take dishonestly, he does not commit theft.

A DUG up and immediately carried away, without any authority or right, several cart-loads of earth, part of unassessed lands of a village. Held that A was not guilty of theft.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KOTAYYA, I. FISH in a public river cannot be said to be property in the possession of the person who may have the fishery-right, and the infringement of that right is not theft under s. 378 of the Penal Code. The accused were charged with unlawfully taking fish along with some eleven others in a public river, the right of fishing in which had been let out by the Government to the complainant, and the lower Court, amongst other offences, convicted them of theft, criminal misappropriation, mischief, criminal trespass, and unlawful assembly. Held that the conviction was wrong, and that no offence had been committed.—BHAGIRAM DOME v. ABAR DOME, I. L. R., 15 Cal. 388. [Norris and Ghose, JJ. Jan. 24, 1888.]

A CHARGE of theft will lie under s. 378 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860), even where there is no intention to assume entire dominion over the property taken, or to retain it permanently. When a person takes another man's property, believing, under a mistake of fact and in ignorance of law, that he has a right to take it, he is not guilty of theft, because there is no dishonest intention, even though he may cause wrongful loss within the meaning of the Penal Code. The accused was the brother of a farmer or contractor of a public ferry on the Tadri river. He seized a boat belonging to the complainant while conveying passengers across the creek which flows into the river at a point within three miles from the public ferry. His intention was apparently to compel persons who had to cross the creek to use the ferry in the absence of the complainant's boat, and thereby increase his brother's income derived from fees to be paid by passengers crossing the creek. The accused had no reason to believe that he was justified in seizing the boat. Held that the accused was guilty of theft, though it was not his intention to convert the boat to his own use, or deprive the complainant permanently of its possession.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NAGAPPA, I. L. R., 15 Bom. 344. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Jan. 27, 1890.]

THE word "object" in s. 295 of the Penal Code does not include animate objects. A bull dedicated and set at large at the Sradha of a Hindu in accordance with religious usage is not an "object" within the meaning of that section. Where such an animal was killed by certain Mahomedans secretly and at night in the presence of none but Mahomedans for the sake of the meat and value of the skin, held that no offence had been committed under s. 295. Queen-Empress v. Iman Ali (I. L. R., 10 All 150) followed. Held further, that such a bull is not "moveable property" within the meaning of ss 378 and 403, or "property" within the meaning of s. 425 of the Penal Code, and could not therefore be the subject of theft, criminal misappropriation, or mischief. The fact that such a bull receives some attention from the cowherd of the persons who set it at liberty, and is daily fed by him by direction of his employers, and is not used for breeding purposes without their permission being asked, is not inconsistent with a total surrender by those who set it at liberty of all their rights as proprietors. Queen-Empress v. Bandhu (I. L. R., 8 All. 51) followed Queen-Empress v. Nalla (I. L. R., 11 Mad. 145) referred to and commented on. For the purpose of construing a section of an Act, and ascertaining the intention of the Legislature, the Report of the Indian Law Commissioners or a Select Committee appointed to consider a Bill may be referred to. Queen-Empress v. Kartick Chunder Das (I. L. R., 14 Cal. 721) followed.—ROMESH CHUNDER SANNYAL v. HIRU MONDAL, I. L. R., 17 Cal. 852. [Norris and Macpherson, JJ. Mar. 27, and April 15, 1890.]

EARTH, that is soil, and all the component parts of the soil, inclusive of stones and minerals, when severed from the earth or land to which it was attached, is moveable property capable of being the subject of theft. Whoever dishonestly severs such earth from the earth commits theft. Where a person dishonestly carried away 100 cart-loads of earth from the complainant's land, held that he was guilty of theft. Queen-Empress v. Kotayya (I. L. R., 10 Mad. 255) dissented from.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SHIVRAM, I. L. R., 15 Bom. 702. [Birdwood and Parsons, JJ. Mar. 24, 1891.]

THERE is no presumption of law that a wife and husband constitute one person in India for the purpose of criminal law. If the wife, removing her husband's property from his house, does so with dishonest intention, she is guilty of theft.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BUTCHI, I. L. R., 17 Mad. 401. [Muttusami Ayyar and Best, JJ. May 5, 1893.]

AN accused was found to have loosed the complainant's cattle at night from a cattle-pen, and to have driven them to the pound with the object of sharing with the pound-keeper the fees to be paid for their release. He was proceeded against under Act I. of 1871 (Cattle Trespass Act), and under the provisions of s. 22 ordered to pay compensation to the complainant, and in default to undergo one month's rigorous imprisonment. Held that s. 22 was inapplicable to the facts of the case, and that the order must be set aside. On the facts it was not a case of "illegal seizure and detention" of cattle, but rather one of theft, as all the elements of that offence were present, and the accused should have been charged with and tried for that offence. Held, further, that the sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of the compensation was not warranted by law. Compensation may be levied as a fine, and the ordinary mode of levying fines is laid down in s. 386 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The law nowhere provides that fines may be levied by means of imprisonment.—PARYAG RAI v. ARJU MIAN, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 139. [Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J. Aug. 18, 1894.]

WITH a view to coerce the complainant to pay a sum of Rs. 14, which he owed to the accused, three head of cattle worth Rs. 60 were removed from the complainant's homestead under the order of the accused. Held the offence of theft was not committed by the accused. The illustrations to s. 378 of the Penal Code indicate that it was the intention of the Legislature that, in order to have committed theft within the meaning of the section, the taker must have taken the thing with the intention of keeping it himself, or disposing of it for his own benefit, or in some way which would compel the owner to pay him money which he did not owe him in order to regain his property. The words "intending to take dishonestly any moveable property" in the above section, read with s. 23 and s. 24 of the Penal Code, mean "with the intention of gaining by unlawful means property to which he is not legally entitled." "To gain property by unlawful means" means "to gain the thing moved for the use of the gainer," and not "the gaining possession of it for a time for a temporary purpose." S. 363 of the Penal Code, as drafted in 1837, discussed.—PROSONNO KUMAR PATRA v. UDOY SANT, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 669. [Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J. April 30, 1895.] Overruled by Queen-Empress v. Sri Churn Chungo, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 1017, infra.

A CREDITOR by taking any moveable property of his debtor from the debtor's possession without his consent with the intention of coercing him to pay his debt commits the offence of theft as defined in s. 378 of the Penal Code. Ss. 23 and 24 of the Penal Code discussed and explained. Prosonno Kumar Patra v. Udoy Sant (I. L. R., 22 Cal. 669) overruled.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SRI CHURN CHUNGO, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 1017. Petheram, C.J., and Prinsep Pigot, Macpherson, and Banerjee, JJ. Dec. 20, 1895.]

379. Whoever commits theft shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Punishment for theft.

Any Mag. Cognizable. Warrant. Not bailable. Not comp.

CHARGE—THAT you on or about the day of , at , committed theft of , the property of , valued at Rs , and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 379 of the Indian Penal Code, and within, &c.

Charge for Theft after a Previous Conviction.

I (name and office of Magistrate, &c.) hereby charge you (name of accused person) as follows:—

That you, on or about the day of , at , committed theft, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 379 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session (or High Court, or Magistrate, as the case may be

And you the said (name of accused) stand further charged that you, before the committing of the said offence, that is to say, on the day of , had been convicted by the (state Court by which conviction was had) at , of an offence punishable under Ch. XVII. of the Indian Penal Code with imprisonment for a term of three years, that is to say, the offence of house-breaking by night [describe the offence in the words used in the section under which the accused was convicted], which conviction is still in full force and effect, and that you are thereby liable to enhanced punishment under s. 75 of the Indian Penal Code.

And I hereby direct that you be tried, &c.—CRIM. PRO. CODE (Act V. of 1898), Sch. V., Form XXVIII. (III).

WHENEVER any person causes a police-officer to arrest another person in a presidency-town, if it appears to the Magistrate by whom the case is heard that there was no sufficient ground for causing such arrest, the Magistrate may award such compensation, not exceeding fifty rupees, to be paid by the person so causing the arrest to the person so arrested for his loss of time and expenses in the matter, as the Magistrate thinks fit. In such cases, if more persons than one are arrested or complained against, the Magistrate may, in like manner, award to each of them such compensation, not exceeding fifty rupees as such Magistrate thinks fit. All compensation awarded under this section may be recovered as if it were a fine, and if it cannot be so recovered the person by whom it is payable shall be sentenced to simple imprisonment for such term, not exceeding thirty days, as the Magistrate directs, unless such sum is sooner paid.—CRIM. PRO. CODE (Act V of 1898), s. 582.

THE offence of a person who makes away with property which has been placed in his charge and possession is not theft, but criminal breach of trust.—IN THE MATTER OF BHARUT CHUNDER CHRISTIAN, 1 W. R. 2. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 8, 1864.]

THEFT is defined (s. 378) to be a dishonest taking of any moveable property out of the possession of any person without that person's consent.—QUEEN v. MADAREE CHOWKEEDAR, 3 W. R. 2. [Peacock, C.J., and Kemp and Glover, JJ. Feb. 17, 1865.]

A PERSON can be convicted of abetment of theft under the 1st explanation of s. 107 of the Penal Code only if he either procures or attempts to procure the commission of the theft. Mere subsequent knowledge of the offence is insufficient.—QUEEN v. SHUMSERUDDEEN, 2 W. R. 40. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Mar. 14, 1865.]

THE theft and the taking and retention of stolen goods form one and the same offence, and cannot be punished separately.—QUEEN v. SREEMUNT ADUP, 2 W. R. 62. [Glover, J. April 16, 1865.]

HOUSE-BREAKING by night and theft form a single and entire offence, and cannot be punished separately.—QUEEN v. TONAOKOCH, 2 W. R. 63. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. April 19, 1865.]

THE term "dishonest" is applied to a person who does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain or wrongful loss. Where the accused forcibly seized a woman's bullocks for something which her husband may have owed in his lifetime, he was held to have caused wrongful loss and therefore guilty of theft.—QUEEN v. PREONATH BANERJEE, 1 Wyman's Rev., Crim. and Civ. Rep., p. 60; 5 W. R. 68. [Jackson, J. April 16, 1866.]

A DOUBLE sentence for theft and mischief is illegal and improper—BICHUK AHEER v. AUHUCK BHOONEEA, 6 W. R. 5. [Jackson and Campbell, JJ. June 18, 1866.]

IT is illegal to convict prisoners of mischief as well as of theft, the offences charged being that they had cut down Government trees without leave, and appropriated them.—REG. v. NARAYAN KRISHNA, 2 Bom. H. C. R. 392. [Couch, C.J., and Newton, J. June 27 1866.]

THE prisoner, acting bonâ fide in the interest of his employers, and finding a party of fishermen poaching on his master's fisheries, took charge of the nets, and retained possession of them, pending the orders of his employers. Held that the prisoner was not guilty of theft—QUEEN v. NOBIN CHUNDER HOLDAR, 6 W. R. 79. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Sep. 28, 1866.]

THEFT is the sequel of, and cannot be separated from, house-breaking. A cumulative sentence of three years' imprisonment was held to be illegal in such a case.—MUSSAHUR DAOUDH, 6 W. R. 92. [Kemp and Markby, JJ. Dec. 19, 1866.]

STEALING property, and then destroying it, are but one offence, viz., theft—not two, theft and mischief, but the fact that the offender has rendered the property irrecoverable should be considered in awarding punishment.—CROWN v. HAMIRA, Panj. Rec., No. 37 of 1866.

NO security can legally be demanded from persons convicted of theft—QUEEN v. KUNEE SONAR, 7 W. R. 57. [Seton-Karr and Markby, JJ. April 5, 1867.]

A PERSON acting under a claim of right (however ill-founded such claim may be) is not guilty of theft by asserting it.—QUEEN v. RAM CHURN SINGH, 7 W. R. 57. [Seton-Karr and Markby, JJ. April 15, 1867.]

SEPARATE convictions and sentences under ss. 429 and 379, and under ss. 457 and 380 of the Penal Code, were set aside, and the conviction under s. 429 in the former case, and under s. 457 in the latter, allowed to stand.—QUEEN v. SAHRAE, 8 W. R. 31. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. July 1, 1867.]

WHERE a Court finds that parties came with a number of armed men, and carried off a crop, the finding amounts to that of a forcible carrying off without the consent of the owner. Even if they took no part in the actual taking, they must, with reference to s. 114, Penal Code, be considered guilty of the substantive offence under s. 378.—QUEEN v. SHIB CHUNDER MUNDLE, 8 W. R. 59. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 5, 1867.]

A PRISONER who consented to form one of a party who committed theft, and resiled from his agreement, but was present at the commission of theft, does not come within cl. 2, s. 107, Penal Code, and ought not to have been convicted of the theft, but of the abetment thereof under cl. 3, s. 107, and s. 109, Penal Code, read together.—QUEEN v. BOOBHUN MOOSHUR, 8 W. R. 78. [Glover, J. Oct. 30, 1867.]

WHERE loss is occasioned to a person whose property has been stolen, it is not illegal for the trying Magistrate to award a portion of the fine inflicted on the accused as amends to the owner of such property, although the stolen property is recovered and restored to the owner.—REG. v. YESSAPPA BIN NINGAPPA, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 41. [Newton, Offg. C.J., and Tucker, J. May 20, 1868.]

CONVICTION and sentence by a Magistrate reversed, as the act of which the accused were convicted—taking pods (almost valueless) from a tree standing upon Government waste ground—came within the meaning of s. 95 of the Penal Code, and did not, therefore, amount to an offence.—REG. v. KASYA BIN RAVJI, 5 Bom. H. C. R. 35. [Newton, Offg. C.J., and Tucker, J. May 20, 1868.]

WHERE a policeman in whose sight a theft was committed arrested the thief, and, being himself unable to take or send the accused to a Magistrate, sent a report on which the Magistrate issued a warrant, held that, under these circumstances, the accused was legally brought before the Magistrate.—REG. v. MAHIPYA valad BOMYA MAHAR, 5 Bom. H. C.

R. 99. [Newton and Tucker, JJ. Sep. 24, 1868.]

A CONVICTION for theft under the Penal Code is illegal if the owner has given up all property in, and all possession of, the subject of the alleged theft. Thus, if a man digs up the carcass of a bullock, which the owner, suspecting to have been poisoned, caused to be buried, he cannot be convicted of theft.—PRO., Feb. 5, 1869, 4 Mad. H. C. R. Ap 30.

WHERE, in a case in which a prisoner was convicted of theft and also of receiving stolen property, the sentence passed was really one for theft, the High Court nevertheless refused to allow the conviction for receiving stolen property to remain on the record against the accused, and reversed it.—QUEEN v. SHEEB CHUNDER HAREE, 11 W. R. 12n. [Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ. Mar. 1, 1869.]

A MAHOMEDAN married woman may be convicted of theft, or abetment of theft, in respect of the property of her husband.—REG. v. KHATABI, 6 Bom. H. C. R. 9. [Tucker and Gibbs, JJ. Mar. 4. 1869.]

LOODUN was on terms of intimacy with Marwareed, who encouraged his visits; and when Loodun's father sent him away with a view to break up the connection, the woman followed him. She was brought back, and Loodun returned and renewed the intimacy with her. He was prohibited from his father's house, and carried away things which he gave to the woman. Loodun was convicted by the Magistrate of house-trespass in order to commit theft, and Marwareed of abetment of that offence. Held that her conviction could not be sustained, as no act subsequent to the commission of an offence can be construed into an abetment.—CROWN v. LOODUN, Panj. Rec., No. 11 of 1869.

THE moving by the same act which effects the severance may constitute a theft. Thus, the cutting down of trees without removing them may amount to theft.—PRO., Oct. 22, 1870, 5 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 36.

THE prisoner was convicted of theft on his own confession. The charge to which the prisoner pleaded did not allege the taking out of the possession of some person dishonestly, and there was no evidence of such taking. Held that the conviction was bad.—PRO., Oct. 28, 1870, 5 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 37.

A HINDU woman, who removes from the possession of her husband, and without his consent, her palla or stridhan, cannot be convicted of theft, nor can any person who joined her in removing it be convicted of that offence.—REG. v. NATH KALYANAND BAI, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 11. [Gibbs and Melvill, JJ. Jan. 9, 1871.]

THE mere assertion of a fair claim of property or right, or the mere existence of a doubt as to right, is not sufficient to justify an acquittal in a case of plunder of crops. The claim to the property must be proved by evidence to be fair and good.—NASSIB CHOWDHRY v. NANOO CHOWDHRY, 15 W. R. 47. [Bayley and Mitter, JJ. Mar. 25, 1871.]

S. 378 of the Penal Code does not include under the offence of theft the case when one joint-proprietor takes into his own sole possession property belonging to himself and his co-proprietor which had previously been in their joint-custody. K, the gomashta of a shop, was coming out of the Small Cause Court with some account-books belonging to that shop. A, who had a share in that shop, took them out of the possession of K, and kept them against the will of K, saying they were his. The Deputy Magistrate found A guilty of theft, and convicted him. On reference, the High Court quashed the conviction on the grounds. (1) that, when property is in the possession of a person's servant, it is in that person's possession within the meaning of s. 27 of the Penal Code, and, therefore, s. 378 does not include under the offence of theft the case where one joint-proprietor takes into his own sole possession property belonging to himself and his co-proprietors, which had been previously in their joint-possession; (2) that the books were not taken dishonestly, and that, if any offence was committed, it was not theft.—KIAMUDDIN v. ALLAH BUKSH, 15 W. R. 51. 6 B. L. R. Ap. 133; 13 B. L. R. 210n. [Norman, Offg. C.J., and Loch, J. April 15, 1871.]

A MERE plea by an accused that the property of the theft of which he is charged is his own property, unsupported by proof or by some circumstances which tend to indicate that there is some truth in the statement, is not sufficient to entitle him to be summarily discharged.—RUNNOO SINGH v. KALI CHURN MISSER, 16 W. R. 18: 7 B. L. R. Ap. 55 [Bayley and Paul, JJ. July 11, 1871.]

A BOAT may be the subject of theft. Although under s. 442 it is for certain purposes classed with houses, it does not cease to be moveable property under s. 378.—QUEEN v. MEHAR DOWALIA, 16 W. R. 53. [Kemp, Offg. C.J., and Ainslie, J. Oct. 6, 1871.]

INABILITY to prove a prescriptive right to fish within certain limits free from payment of rent is quite distinct from the want of right of any kind to fish therein, rendering a person so fishing liable to be brought up for the theft of fish taken by him.—KHETTER NATH DUTT v. INDRO JALLA, 16 W. R. 68. [Kemp and Jackson, JJ. Dec. 16, 1871.]

THE carrying off of certain buffaloes belonging to the complainant by order of the accused, and the retention of them in the custody of the latter's servant, were held to amount to an abetment of theft as defined in the Penal Code.—IN THE MATTER OF TARINEE PROSAUD BANERJEE, 18 W. R. 8. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. June 14, 1872.]

ACCUSED was convicted by an Assistant Magistrate of theft of paddy. The facts found were that prisoner was found in possession of rice not thrashed in the usual way, and that, having no paddy-land of his own, he failed to account satisfactorily for the possession of the rice. Held that this was such a case as no Judge would leave to a jury, and that the conviction must be quashed as founded upon evidence which, if all true, would not justify the inference of guilt. The meaning of the term corpus delicti explained.—PRO., Feb. 18, 1873, 7 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 19.

THE taking of fish in that portion of a navigable river over which a right of jalkar exists in another person does not fall within s 378, Penal Code —HORIMOTI MONDOCK v. DENO NATH MALO, 19 W R 47 [Kemp and Pontifex JJ. Mar 20 1873]

WHERE the accused caught fish in a portion of a navigable river which was claimed by the prosecutor, it was held they could not be convicted of theft, and that if the right of the prosecutor was infringed, he could sue in the Civil Court for damages —BHUSUN PARUI v. DENONATH BANERJEE 20 W. R 15. [Jackson and Mitter, JJ May 7, 1873 c 2

DISHONEST removal of salt naturally ed in a creek, which was under the sup sion of an officer belonging to the Customs Department, constitutes theft, the salt having been legally appropriated by such officer (per Bayley and West, JJ.) But removal for one's own use from a creek of such salt not legally appropriated constitutes no offence either under the Penal Code or Act XXXI. of 1850 or XXVII. of 1837, though, under s 7 of the latter Act, made applicable by s. 8 of the former, the salt removed becomes liable to detention (per Lloyd and Kemball JJ.)—REG. v. MANSANG BHAVSANG, 10 Bom H. C R. 74. [Bayley and West JJ. May 21, 1873.]

IN a charge for stealing it must be proved that at the time of the act being done, the property stolen was in the possession of the prosecutor —HOSSENEE SHEIKH v. RAJ KRISHNA CHATTERJEE, 20 W. R 80. Phear and Morris, JJ. Nov. 18, 1873.]

A SENTENCE of whipping cannot, with reference to VI of 1864, s 7, be passed on a conviction for theft under s. 379, Penal Code, as the former section only provides for sentences of imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years.—QUEEN v. ESAN CHUNDER DEY, 21 W. R. 40. [Jackson and Ainslie, JJ. Feb. 5, 1874.]

POSSESSION of property which has been stolen from the owner is generally, at best, only evidence of theft when the date of the theft is so recent as to make it reasonable to presume in the absence of explanation that the person in whose possession the property is found must have obtained the possession by stealing.—QUEEN v. POROMESHUR AHEER, 23 W. R. 16. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Jan. 8, 1875.]

THE High Court declined to interfere with the order of a Deputy Magistrate, who, in a case of theft, dismissed the complaint, and fined the complainant under s. 209 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), for making a frivolous and vexatious complaint.—KALI CHURN LAHARI v. SOSHEE BHOOSHUN SANYAL, 23 W. R. 17. [Phear and Ainslie, JJ. Jan. 13, 1875.]

THE illegal seizure and impounding of cattle is not theft within the meaning of the Penal Code, even if effected with the malicious intent of subjecting the owners to additional expense, inconvenience, and annoyance. A Sessions Judge has no power to release on bail persons convicted by the Magistrate, pending a reference to the High Court under Act X. of 1872, s. 296.—ARADHUN MUNDUL v MYAN KHAN TARADOGER, 24 W. R. 7. [Glover and Mitter, JJ. June 4. 1875.]

ALTHOUGH a person who is convicted of theft cannot, in respect of the same property, be convicted at the same time of receiving stolen property, yet a person who is acquitted of the theft of any property, or who is not charged with stealing it may, in respect of the identical property, be charged with, and convicted of, receiving it, knowing it to be stolen so that the mere fact of a person's having once been acquitted of the charge of stealing any property does not of itself prevent his trial at any future time on the charge of receiving the same property knowing it to be stolen.—QUEEN v. NYAZ ALI, 25 W. R. 47. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. May 25. 1876.]

POSSESSION of wood by a forest-inspector, who is a servant of Government, is possession of the Government itself; and a dishonest removal of it, without payment of the necessary fees, from his possession, albeit with his actual consent, constitutes theft within the meaning of s. 378, if that consent was unauthorized or fraudulent.—REG. v. HANMANTA, I. L. R., 1 Bom. 610. [Melvill and Kemball, JJ. Feb 26, 1877.]

A SOUGHT the aid of B with the intention of committing a theft of the property of B's master B, with the knowledge and consent of his master, and for the purpose of procuring A's punishment, aided A in carrying out his object. On the prosecution of A for theft, held that, as the property removed was so taken with the knowledge of the owner, the offence of theft had not been committed; held further, that it is not necessary to an indictment for the abetment of an abetment of an offence to show that such offence was actually committed.—EMPRESS v. TROYLUCKHO NATH CHOWDHRY, I. L. R., 4 Cal. 366; 3 C. L. R. 525. [Jackson and White, JJ. Nov. 12, 1878.]

THE accused caught fish in the Sundridund, a sheet of water five miles long by twenty feet broad. The right of fishing in this and other dunds had been leased to a contractor by the Government. Held that the fish in the pond were not in the possession of any person within the meaning of s. 378, and could not, therefore, be the subject of theft.—CROWN v. JAMAL, Panj. Rec., No. 11 of 1878.

S A, a resident of foreign territory, was found concealed with three companions who were Jowaki Afridis, all armed to the teeth in the deserted house in Surgul Kohat district. Some Government camels were grazing in the village, and the theory for the prosecution was that S A and the other accused came down to steal these camels, or such other property as they might be able to lay hand upon. The Deputy Commissioner convicted all the accused under ss. 109 and 382, and the Commissioner, to whom the proceedings went up for confirmation, altered the conviction to one under s. 393. Held (by a majority of the Court, Elsmie, J., dissenting) that the conviction could not be sustained. Per Smyth, J.—The mere assembling of a number of persons together with a general intention of committing theft and not for the purpose of committing a specific theft or theft of specific property, cannot be considered to amount to the abetment of an offence of theft, so as to be punishable under ss. 110 and 379, or, as in the present case under ss. 116 and 382. There must be some design to commit a specific offence before a person can be held guilty of abetment of such offence by having conspired with others to commit it. Per Elsmie, J., contra.—That the case clearly came within the meaning of the 2nd clause of s. 107, and that the conviction was sustainable. Per Plowden, J.—On a charge of abetment of conspiracy, it is necessary to prove, and it ought therefore to be alleged, not only that the person charged engaged with one or more other person or persons in a conspiracy for the commission of an offence, (specify the offence), but also that some act or illegal omission (specify the particular act or omission) took place in pursuance of that conspiracy, and in order to the commission of the said offence. That in this case the facts alleged were not proved with sufficient certainty to justify a conviction; as it could not be said positively that the purpose of the accused was theft, or that they came into British territory in pursuance of a conspiracy to commit theft there. Held further (per Plowden, J.).—That a charge against several persons of engaging in a conspiracy to commit an offence of a particular kind (as, for instance, theft), as opportunity should offer, within a determinate area (as, for instance, a village), would not be bad as being too vague.—SHER ALI v. EMPRESS, Panj. Rec., No. 18 of 1879.

WHERE an accused person, who had been previously convicted of theft under s. 379, was sentenced to whipping in addition to imprisonment upon a subsequent conviction of house breaking by night with intent to commit theft under s. 457, and it appeared that theft was distinctly charged in the formal charges prepared by the Cole, though s. 457 alone was cited, and it was found that the theft was completed. Held by the Full Bench that the omission to formally charge the accused with, and convict him of, theft, under s. 378 or s. 380, was not a ground for setting aside the sentence of whipping on the revision side of the Court, such omission not having in any way prejudiced the accused in his defence.—EMPRESS v. RADHA, Panj. Rec., No. 14 of 1880.

A HINDU, intending to separate himself from his family, emigrated to Demerara as a coolie. After an absence of thirty years he returned to his family, bringing with him money and other moveable property which he had acquired in Demerara by manual labour as a coolie. On his return to his family, he lived in commensality with it, but he did not treat such property as joint-family property, but as his own property. Held that such property was his sole property, and his brother was not a joint owner of it, and could properly be convicted in respect of theft of it. It is irregular to convict and punish a person for abetment of theft, and at the same time to convict and punish him for receiving the stolen property.—EMPRESS v. SITA RAM RAI, I. L. R., 3 All. 181. [Straight, J. Aug. 16, 1880.]

PERSONS removing property under the provisions of the rent law relating to distraint ought not to be proceeded against under the criminal law, but the parties aggrieved by a wrongful distraint should have recourse to the remedy provided by Act VIII. of 1869 (B. C.).—SHEIKH AGHANI v. BHAGI HALWAI, 8 C. L. R. 204. [Pontifex and Field, JJ. Mar. 9, 1881.]

WHERE the plaintiff in a suit referred to arbitration by consent, with a view to prevent a witness from referring to an endorsement on a bond (which tended to show that defendant had paid more than it was alleged had been paid by him), snatched up the bond which was lying beside the arbitrator, ran away, and refused to produce it: held that the offence committed was not theft, but secreting a document under s. 204 of the Penal Code.—SUBRAMANIA GHANAPATI v. REG., I. L. R., 3 Mad. 261. [Turner, C.J., and Muttusami Ayyar, J. Sep. 2, 1881.]

A SWAMP, the property of Government, having been surrounded with police-guards by Government to prevent salt being removed, held that the taking against the will of Government, and with the intention of obtaining an unlawful gain of salt which had been spontaneously produced on the swamp, was theft.—REG. v. TAMMA GHANTAYA, I. L. R., 4 Mad. 228. [Turner, C.J., and Kernan, J. Oct. 19, 1881.]

THE wrongful taking of fish from a creek is not theft.—REG. v. RAVI POTHADU, I. L. R., 5 Mad. 390. Muttusami Ayyar and Tarrant, JJ. Aug. 5, 1882.]

WHERE property is in the joint-possession of two persons as joint-owners, and one of them dishonestly removes it from the possession of the other, the removal constitutes theft.—VIRAMKUTTI v. CHIYAMU, I. L. R. 7 Mad. 557. [Turner, C.J., and Hutchins, J. Aug. 14, 1884.]

TO constitute theft it is sufficient if property is removed, against his wish, from the custody of a person who has an apparent title, or even a colour of right to such property.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GUNGARAM SANARAY, I. L. R., 9 Bom. 135. [West and Scott, JJ. Oct. 29, 1884. Referred to in Panchu alias Rahmatulla Pramanik v. Rahmatulla Akundo, I. L. R. 27 Cal. 501, infra.]

WHERE the accused were found fishing without permission in an enclosed tank belonging to the municipality of the town of Sirai, it was held that they could be convicted of theft, as the tank from which the fish were taken was apparently an enclosed tank and the fish were, therefore, restrained of their natural liberty, and liable to be taken at any time according to the pleasure of the owner, and were, therefore, subjects of theft.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SHAIKH ADAM valad SHAIK FARID, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 193. [Bird wood and Jardine, JJ. Jan. 8, 1886.]

THEFT of joint property may be committed by a co-parcener if he takes it from joint-possession, and converts such possession into separate possession. This was a case referred for the orders of the High Court under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1882) by the District Magistrate. The case was stated as follows: "P, the accused, a boy of 18, took a cart from his father's mandi, or shop, without his father's knowledge, and sold it, and appropriated the proceeds. He admitted all this, but pleaded, first, that he was undivided from his father, and was a joint-owner of the cart; and, secondly, that the reason he took the cart was that his father, who was married a second time, does not support either him or his mother. He kept, he said, part of the proceeds for his own support, and sent the rest to his mother. The Second-class Magistrate took the accused person's word for all these allegations, and found: 'He seems to have acted under a bond-fide claim of right,' and discharged him." Judgment of High Court: "The Second-class Magistrate's judgment and order are wrong. Theft of joint property of a family may be committed by one of the family, though a co-parcener, if he takes it from joint-possession into separate possession. See Weir's Criminal Rulings, p. 154, on s. 379, Penal Code. The acquittal is set aside, and the Magistrate is directed to re-try the case and to have regard to the definition of theft in s. 378, Penal Code, and of the word 'dishonestly' in s. 24.'—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PONNURANJAN, I. L. R., 10 Mad. 186. [Kernan and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. Mar. 1, 1887.]

A HOE up and immediately carried away, without any authority or right, several cartloads of earth part of unassessed lands of a village. Held that A was not guilty of theft.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KOTAYYA, I. L. R., 10 Mad. 255. Collins, C.J., and Kernan and Brandt, JJ. Mar. 18, 1887.]

A PERSON who has been convicted of the offence of theft (an offence punishable under ch. 17 of the Penal Code) does not, on being convicted of an attempt to commit the offence of theft, become liable to the enhanced punishment allowed by s. 75 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SRICHARAN BAURI, I. L. R., 14 Cal. 357. [Petheram, C.J., and Cunningham, J. Mar. 19, 1887.]

UNDER ss. 35 and 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate may legally pass a separate sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment and fine under each of the ss. 379 or 380 and 454 of the Penal Code for housebreaking in order to the commission of theft, and theft, the two offences forming part of the same transaction, and being tried together. In such a case where the prisoner had been three times previously convicted, held that the better course would have been to commit him to the Court of Session under ss. 459-75 of the Code. But a Sessions Judge trying such a case under s. 379 or s. 380 and s.

454 would, under no circumstances, be justified in passing a sentence of ten years' imprisonment under the latter part of s. 444, and of four years' imprisonment under s. 380. The latter portions of ss. 454 and 457 were framed to include the cases of house-trespassers and house-breakers who had not only intended to commit, but had actually committed theft. Queen-Empress v. Ajudhia (I. L. R., 2 All. 644) and Queen-Empress v. Sukharam Bhau (I. L. R., 10 Bom. 493) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ZOR SINGH, I. L. R., 10 All. 146. [Straight and Brodhurst, JJ. Dec. 16, 1887.]

ACCUSED were charged with having taken fish from a tank belonging to the complainant and convicted of theft and criminal trespass under ss. 379 and 447 of the Penal Code. It was found that the tank in question was not enclosed on all sides, and was dependent on the overflow of a neighbouring channel which was connected with flowing streams for its supply of fish that the fish were not reared and preserved in the tank and that the occurrence complained of took place at a time when the floods were high, and the tank was connected with the streams, so that the fish could leave it at pleasure. Held that the fish were feræ naturæ, and not in "the possession of" the complainant, and consequently no offence had been committed. Held further that, had the fish been taken at a time when they were restrained of their natural liberty and were liable to be taken at the pleasure of the owner of the tank, the conviction would have been upheld. The Meherpore case of 1887 (I. L. R., 15 Cal. 390) distinguished.—MAYA RAM SURMA v. NICHALA KATANI, I. L. R., 15 Cal. 402. [Norris and Ghose, JJ. Jan. 21, 1888.]

THE accused, being in the employ of Government in the Post-office Department, while assisting in the sorting of letters secreted two letters with the intention of handing them to the delivery-peon and sharing with him certain moneys payable upon them. He was charged under the Post-office Act, s. 48. Held (1) that since the intention of the accused was not to prevent the delivery of the letters to the addressees he was not guilty of the offence of secreting them within the meaning of that section; (2) that he was guilty of the offence of stealing and of fraudulently misappropriating the letters within the meaning of that section, and of the offence of theft and of attempt to commit dishonest misappropriation of property within the meaning of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VENKATASAMI, I. L. R., 14 Mad. 229. [Collins, C.J., and Weir, J. Oct. 17, Nov. 13, 1890.]

CERTAIN crops which had been distrained for arrears of revenue were harvested and removed by the owners and occupiers of the land, who were thereupon charged with theft. The accused were not the defaulters, the demand having been made upon certain other persons in whose name the pattas stood as the registered proprietors. The accused were acquitted. Held that the acquittal was wrong in the absence of a finding whether or not the accused were aware of the distraint, and dishonestly removed the crops with such knowledge.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMASAMI, I. L. R., 16 Mad. 364. [Muttusami Ayyra and Parker, JJ. Nov. 30, 1892.]

WITH a view to coerce the complainant to pay a sum of Rs. 14 which he owed to the accused, three head of cattle worth Rs. 60 were removed from the complainant's homestead under the order of the accused. Held the offence of theft was not committed by the accused. The illustrations to s. 378 of the Penal Code indicate that it was the intention of the Legislature that, in order to have committed theft within the meaning of the section, the taker must have taken the thing with the intention of keeping it himself, or disposing of it for his own benefit, or in some way which would compel the owner to pay him money which he did not owe him in order to regain his property. The words "intending to take dishonestly any moveable property" in the above section, read with s. 23 and s. 24 of the Penal Code, mean "with the intention of gaining by unlawful means property to which he is not legally entitled." "To gain property by unlawful means" means "to gain the thing moved for the use of the gainer," and not "the gaining possession of it for a time for a temporary purpose." S. 363 of the Penal Code, as drafted in 1837, discussed.—PROSONNO KUMAR PATRA v. UDOY SANT, I. L. R., 22 Cal. 609. Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J. April 30, 1895. Dissented from in Queen-Empress v. Agha Muhammed Yusuf, I. L. R., 18 All. 88, infra.

HELD that the removal by a creditor, against the will of his debtor, of property belonging to such debtor, with the view of compelling such debtor, to discharge his debt, amounts to theft within the meaning of s. 379 of the Penal Code. Queen-Empress v. Sumesher Rai (Weekly Notes, 1888, p. 97) referred to. Prosonno Kumar v. Uday Sant (I. L. R., 22 Cal. 609) dissented from.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. AGHA MUHAMMAD YUSUF, I. L. R., 18 All. 88. [Edge, C.J., and Burkitt, J. Nov. 16, 1895.]

IN a case where the accused were convicted by a Deputy Magistrate of the offence of rioting under s. 147 and theft under s. 379 of the Penal Code, and sentenced to four months for the first and two months for the latter offence, but on appeal the District Magistrate, considering the case to be one of theft rather than rioting, abandoned the sentence under s. 147, but upheld the conviction under s. 379, of the Penal Code, and sentenced them to six months' rigorous imprisonment: held that what the District Magistrate had in effect done was to enhance the sentence under s. 379 of the Penal Code, which he had no power to do under s. 423, cl. (b), sub-s. 3 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. —RAMZAN KUNJRA v. RAMKHELAWAN CHOWBE, I. L. R., 24 Cal. 316. [Ghose and Gordon, JJ. Jan. 19, 1897.]

AN accused person alleged and claimed that certain paddy was grown upon his jote, and that he cut and removed it as a matter of right and in an assertion of a bonâ-fide claim to the land. It was admitted by the complainant, who also claimed the paddy and the land, that there had been a boundary dispute between his landlord and the landlord of the accused. The accused was convicted in a summary trial of the paddy. Held per Prinsep, J.—That, if the complainant's barqadars had grown the crops as found and nevertheless the accused cut and carried them off, there could be no bonâ-fide belief that he was entitled to do so to justify his action in regard to the complainant. With the fact found that possession was with the complainant by the growing by him of the crops cut by the accused, the accused was without justification in thus taking the law into his hands, even if he was entitled to hold the lands because he was not in actual possession of them. His Lordship refused to interfere. Per Stevens, J.—The findings of the lower Court taken as a whole amounted to a finding that the accused acted mala fide and the mere fact that he brought some witnesses to speak to his long possession of the land, and the cultivation of the crops by him could not be taken as showing that a bonâ-fide dispute as to title existed between the complainant and himself. To constitute theft it is sufficient if property is removed against his wish from the custody of a person who has an apparent title or even a colour of right to such property. In the present case the complainant had an apparent title as tenant of the land, together with long possession, and he had, on the strength of that apparent title and long possession, raised the crops which the accused removed. The application should be dismissed Queen-Empress v. Gangaram Santram (I. L. R., 9 Bom. 135) referred to. Per Stanley, J., contra.—That the evidence, as well for the prosecution as for the defence, conclusively established that there was a bonâ-fide dispute as to the title to the land upon which the paddy was sown. Once this was sown the criminal charge failed. The fact, if it be the fact, that the paddy was sown by the complainant, would not give him the property in the crop, if it were sown on the land of the accused. If the land was the land of the accused, it was an act of trespass on the part of the complainant to sow it with paddy, and the complainant had no right to complain if the accused resented his act of aggression by cutting and removing the crop. A dishonest intent is a necessary ingredient in the offence of theft. No such intention has been found on the part of the accused. That the conviction and sentence should be set aside. FISH in an ordinary irrigation tank are not in the possession of any person so as to be capable of being the subject of theft. Nor does the removal of such fish constitute any other offence. Queen v. Revu Pothadu (I. L. R., 5 Mad. 301), Bhagiram Dome v. Ahar Dome (I. L. R., 15 Cal. 388) referred to. —SUBBA REDDI v. THERE is no jurisdiction in the High Court to hear appeals in respect of sentences passed on conviction of offences committed within the districts known as the Chittagong Hill Tracts.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SONAI MUGH, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 654. [Prinsep and Stanley, JJ. Mar. 30, 1900.]

THE accused were convicted by a Magistrate of theft of mangoes and also of rioting, the common object of the unlawful assembly being the forcibly taking away of mangoes belonging to the complainant. On appeal the Sessions Judge not only found that the common object was not the taking of the mangoes, but that the dispute between the parties was as to certain land. He, however, dismissed the appeal, and confirmed the conviction. Held that, as the accused were convicted on a different finding of fact from that to which they were called upon to plead and to defend themselves at the trial, they were entitled to an acquittal.—RAHIMUDDI v. ASGAR ALI, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 990. [Prinsep and Handley, JJ. June 6, 1900.]

WHERE a Subordinate Magistrate convicted the prisoner under s. 379 of the Penal Code of theft, and the District Magistrate on appeal merely affirmed the conviction, and added to his judgment an order under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code, binding over the petitioner to keep the peace. Held that he was not competent to pass such an order except on an express finding that the petitioner had committed an offence with the terms of s. 106.—KINOO SHEIKH v. DAMASTULLAH MOLLAH, I. L. R., 29 Cal. 393. [Prinsep and Stephen, JJ. Feb. 5, 1902.]

380. Whoever commits theft in any building, tent, or vessel, which building, tent, or vessel is used as a human dwelling, or for the custody of property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

A PRISONER may be convicted of theft in a building and of house-breaking by night with intent to commit theft, though, if the Judge considers the punishment for the first offence sufficient, he need not award any additional sentence for the second.—QUEEN v. THEFT, by constables, of property from the house they were employed to guard, is punishable under s. 380, and not s. 409.—QUEEN v. BOIDONATH SINGH, 3 W. R. 29 [Jackson and Glover, JJ. June 17, 1865.]

THE prisoner was convicted by the Magistrate of two separate offences under ss. 456 and 380 of the Penal Code, and sentenced for both. On appeal the Sessions Judge holding that the offence proved was under s. 457, ordered a new trial for offences under ss 457 and 380. Held that there ought not to be a new trial, but that the conviction and sentence under s. 310 should be set aside.—QUEEN v. A DEPUTY MAGISTRATE has no power to convict of theft (s. 380 Penal Code) where the offence charged is lurking house-trespass by night, with aggravating circumstances (ss. 458, 459, Penal Code), but must commit on the latter charge.—PURAN TELEE v. THE Magistrate convicted the accused under s. 380 of the Penal Code, and a previous conviction having been proved under s. 379 of the Penal Code, sentenced of imprisonment and whipping was passed. Held that, in order to justify the sentence of whipping the previous conviction should have been in respect of the same specific offence.—PRO., Oct. 28, 1870, 5 Mad. H. C. R. Ap. 38.

ON a conviction for theft in a dwelling, under s. 380 of the Penal Code, fine cannot be substituted in lieu of imprisonment, though it may be added to imprisonment.—SHEIKH DULLOO v. ZAINAH BEBEE, 16 W. R. 17. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. July 1, 1871.]

ALL that is necessary in order to constitute the offence of theft in a building is that the property should be under the protection of the building. It is not necessary to show unlawful entrance into the building.—QUEEN v. ISHREE PERSHAD, 24 W. R. 49. [Markby and McDonell, JJ. Aug. 23, 1875.]

S. 380 which makes it an offence punishable with seven years imprisonment to commit theft in any building &c., used as a human dwelling or for the custody of property, is intended to give greater security only to property deposited in a house, so as to be under the protection of the house, and not to property about the person of the party from whom it is stolen. Theft from a person in a dwelling-house is therefore, simple theft under s. 379.—TANDRI RAM v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 14 of 1876.

ACCUSED, with intent to commit theft, entered at night a dalan, or entrance-hall, surrounded by a wall in which there were two door-ways, but without doors, which was used for the custody of property. Held that the dalan was a building within the meaning of ss. 380 and 442, and that a conviction under s. 457 was therefore maintainable.—DAD v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 10 of 1879.

HELD that, where, in the course of one and the same transaction, an accused person appears to have committed several acts, directed to one end and object, which together amount to a more serious offence than each of them taken individually by itself could constitute, although for purposes of trial it may be convenient to vary the form of charge, and to designate, not only the principal, but the subsidiary crimes alleged to have been committed, yet, in the interests of simplicity and convenience, it is best to concentrate the conviction and sentence on the gravest offence proved. Where, therefore, a person who broke into a house by night, and committed theft therein, was charged and tried for offences under ss. 380 and 457 of the Penal Code, and was convicted of both those offences, and punished for each with rigorous imprisonment for eighteen months, the Court convicted him of the offence under s. 457, and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for three years, and acquitted him of the offence under s. 380.—EMPRESS v. AJUDHIA, I. L. R., 2 All. 644. [Straight, J. Jan. 19, 1880. Referred to in Queen-Empress v. Zor Singh, I. L. R., 10 All. 146, infra.

THE accused was convicted at one trial by a Magistrate of the first class of the offences of house-breaking by night with intent to commit theft, punishable under s. 457, and of theft in a dwelling-house, punishable under s. 380 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860), the two offences being part of the same transaction, the theft following the house-breaking. The prisoner was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 457, and to six months rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100, or, in default of payment, three months' further rigorous imprisonment under s. 380. The District Magistrate referred the case to the High Court, on the ground that the aggregate of punishment awarded on the two heads of charge exceeded the powers of the First-class Magistrate who tried the case. The Sessions Judge, to whom an appeal had been preferred, was of the same opinion, and reduced the sentence to two years' rigorous imprisonment. Held that, as the accused committed two distinct offences which did not "constitute, when combined, a different offence" punishable under any section of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860), s. 71 of the Code did not apply, and, as the aggregate punishment did not exceed twice the amount of punishment which the trying Magistrate was competent to inflict, the sentences were legal under s. 35 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882). Per Jardine, J.—The rules for assessment of punishment, contained in s. 454 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872, having been omitted in s. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1882, must now be sought for in s. 71 of the Penal Code (Act XLV. of 1860) and in s. 35 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882).—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SAKHARAM BHAU, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 493. [Birdwood and and Jardine, JJ. Feb. 1886.] Referred to in Queen-Empress v. Zor Singh, I. L. R., 10 All. 146, infra.

UNDER ss. 35 and 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate may legally pass a separate sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment and fine under each of the ss. 379 or 380 and 454 of the Penal Code for house-breaking in order to the commission of theft and theft, the two offences forming part of the same transaction, and being tried together. In such a case, where the prisoner had been three times previously convicted, held that the better course would have been to commit him to the Court of Session under ss. 454-75 of the Code. But a Sessions Judge trying such a case under s. 379 or s. 380 and s. 454 would, under no circumstances, be justified in passing a sentence of ten years' imprisonment under the latter part of s. 454, and of four years' imprisonment under s. 380. The latter portions of ss. 454 and 457 were framed to include the cases of house-trespassers and house-breakers who had not only intended to commit, but had actually committed, theft.—Queen-Empress v. Ajudhia (I. L. R., 2 All 644) and Queen-Empress v Sakharam Bhau (I. L. R., 10 Bom. 493) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ZOR SINGH, I. L. R., 10 All. 146. [Straight and Brodhurst, JJ. Dec. 16, 1887.]

WHERE the accused stole a piece of cloth spread out to dry on the top of a house, to which he got access by scaling a wall, it was held that he had not committed theft in a building, but simple theft. The fact that the roof was used for domestic purposes makes no difference.—1 Mad. Jur. 282.

A COURT has no power under s. 395 of the Criminal Procedure Code to revise its sentence of whipping by inflicting a fine. In cases where the sentence of whipping cannot be carried out, all that the Court can do is either to remit the whipping altogether, or to sentence the offender, in lieu of such whipping, or of so much of the sentence of whipping as was not carried out, to imprisonment, &c. The word "imprisonment" in s. 395 of the Criminal Procedure Code means a substantive sentence of imprisonment and not imprisonment for default in payment of a fine.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SHEODIN, I. L. R., 11 All. 308. [Straight, J. Jan. 5, 1889.]

ON suspicion of theft of certain articles from a running goods train, a van on the train, in which four railway-coolies were tra-

veiling, was searched. The property missed was not found, but, hidden under a heap of clothing belonging to the four coolies, were discovered 10 thans of cloth, which on investigation were ascertained to have been abstracted from the next van. Held that none of the four coolies travelling in the van where the 10 thans of stolen cloth were found could be convicted of the theft of cloth in the absence of evidence to connect one or more of them individually with the possession of the cloth.—KING-EMPEROR v. ALI HUSAIN, I. L. R., 23 All. 306. [Blair, J. April 12, 1901.]

THE civil station at Rajkot is not part of British India within the meaning of Stat. 21 and 22 Vict., c. 106. Where the accused, a subject of a Native State, committed theft at Rajkot Civil Station, and was found in possession of the stolen property at Thana, held that, as the offence was not committed in British India, and as the accused was the subject of a Native State, the Sessions Court at Thana had no jurisdiction to try the accused for theft under s. 381 of the Penal Code. But it was competent to try him for dishonest retention of stolen property under s. 410 of the Penal Code as amended by Act VIII. of 1882.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ABDUL LATIF alias ABDUL RAHIMAN, I. L. L, K, and J were tried jointly and convicted, L under s. 381 of the Penal Code of stealing tea in the possession of his master, K and J under s. 411 of the Penal Code of dishonestly retaining some stolen tea which they had received from L. It was contended that the joint trial of a person charged under s. 411 of the Penal Code with a person charged under s. 381 of the Penal Code was necessarily void and the conviction bad. Held that a misjoinder of parties is not fatal to the proceedings but is an irregularity which requires that the Court should consider whether, under the terms of s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. *Bishnu Banmar v. (a.) A commits theft on property in Z's possession: and, while committing this theft he has a loaded pistol under his garment, having provided this pistol for the purpose of hurting Z in case Z should resist. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

(b.) A picks Z's pocket, having posted several of his companions near him, in order that they may restrain Z if Z should perceive what is passing, and should resist, or should attempt to apprehend A. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

EVERY person, whether within or without the Presidency-towns, aware of the commission of, or of the intention of any other person to commit, any offence punishable under

s. 382 of the Penal Code, shall forthwith give information to the nearest Magistrate or Police-officer of such commission or intention. —CRIM. PRO. CODE (Act V. of 1898), s. 44.

CHARGE.—That you, on or about the day of , at , committed theft, having made preparation for causing death to a person in order to the committng of such theft, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 382 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session [or High Court].

That you, on or about the day of , at , committed theft, having made preparation for causing restraint to a person in order to the effecting of your escape after the committing of such theft, and thereby commi.ted an offence punishable under s. 382 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session [or High Court].

That you, on or about the day of , at , committed theft, having made preparation for causing fear of hurt to a person in order to the retaining of property taken by such theft, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s 382 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session [or High Court].—CRIM. PRO. CODE (Act V. of 1898), Sch. V., Form XXVIII. (II.).

AN omission to give information that a crime has been committed does not, under s. 107 of the Penal Code, amount to abetment, unless such omission involves a breach of a legal obligation. A private individual is not bound by any law to give information of any offence which he has seen committed. —QUEEN v. KHADIM SHEIKH, 4 B. L. R. A. Cr. 7. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Nov 23, 1869.]

S A, a resident of foreign territory was found concealed with three companions (who were Jowaki Afridis), all armed to the teeth, in a deserted house in Surgul, Kohat district. Some Government camels were grazing in the village, and the theory for the prosecution was that S A and the other accused came down to steal these camels, or such other property as they might be able to lay hand upon. The Deputy Commissioner convicted all the accused under ss. 109 and 382, and the Commissioner, to whom the proceedings went up for confirmation, altered the conviction to one under s. 393. Held (by a majority of the Court, Elsmie, J., dissenting) that the conviction could not be sustained. Per Smyth, J.—The mere assembling of a number of persons together with a general intention of committing theft, and not for the purpose of committing a specific theft or theft of specific property, cannot be considered to amount to the abetment of an offence of theft, so as to be punishable under ss. 116 and 379, or, as in the present case, under ss. 116 and 382. There must be some design to commit a specific offence before a person can be held guilty of abetment of such offence by having conspired with others to commit it. Per Elsmie, J., contra.—That the case clearly came within the meaning of the 2nd clause of s. 107, and that the conviction was sustainable. Per Plowden, J.—On a charge of abetment of conspiracy, it is necessary to prove, and it ought, therefore, to be alleged, not only that the person charged engaged with one or more other person or persons in a conspiracy for the commission of an offence (specify the offence), but also that some act or illegal omission (specify the particular act or omission) took place in pursuance of that conspiracy, and in order to the commission of the said offence That in this case the facts alleged were not proved with sufficient certainty to justify a conviction, as it could not be said positively that the purpose of the accused was theft, or that they came into British territory in pursuance of a conspiracy to commit theft there. Held further (per Plowden, J.)—That a charge against several persons of engaging in a conspiracy to commit an offence of a particular kind (as, for instance, theft), as opportunity should offer, within a determinate area (as, for instance, a village), would not be bad as being too vague.—SHER ALI v. EMPRESS, Panj. Rec., No 18 of 1879.

any property or valuable security, or anything signed or sealed, which may be converted into a valuable security, commits "extortion."

Illustrations.

(a.) A threatens to publish a defamatory libel concerning Z unless Z gives him money. He thus induces Z to give him money. A has committed extortion.

(b.) A threatens Z that he will keep Z's child in wrongful confinement unless Z will sign and deliver to A a promissory note binding Z to pay certain moneys to A. Z signs and delivers the note. A has committed extortion.

(c.) A threatens to send club-men to plough up Z's fields unless Z will sign and deliver to B a bond binding Z under a penalty to deliver certain produce to B, and thereby induces Z to sign and deliver the bond. A has committed extortion.

(d.) A, by putting Z in fear of grievous hurt, dishonestly induces Z to sign or affix his seal to a blank paper, and deliver it to A. Z signs and delivers the paper to A. Here, as the paper so signed may be converted into a valuable security, A has committed extortion.

THE making use of real or supposed influence to obtain money from a person against his will under threat, in case of refusal, of loss of appointment, is extortion within the meaning of s. 384 of the Penal Code.—MEER ABBAS ALI v. OMED ALI, 18 W. R. 17. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. June 17, 1872.

WHERE more than one offence is proved in respect of which the accused has been charged and tried, a conviction for each such offence must follow, whether s. 71 of the Penal Code applies to the case or not, and subject to the provisions of s. 71, a separate sentence must be passed in respect of each such conviction. Under s. 35 of the Criminal Procedure Code, sentences of imprisonment cannot be passed so as to run concurrently. In a trial for offences under ss. 170 and 383 of the Penal Code, committed in the same transaction, it appeared that, but for personating a public servant, the accused would not have been in a position to commit the act of extortion complained of. Held that the first and second paragraphs of s. 71 of the Penal Code did not apply to the case; that the third paragraph also did not apply, because the words "constitute an offence" refer to the definitions of offences contained in the Code, irrespective of the evidence whereby the acts complained of are proved, and personating a public servant as defined in s. 170 was not a constituent element of extortion as defined in s. 383, that in the present case the former offence was completed before the latter had begun; and that separate sentences for each offence were, therefore, not illegal.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. WAZIR JAN, I. L. R., 10 All. 58. [Mahmood, J. Sep. 16, 1887.]

A CHAUKIDAR who obtains money from another person, either by fraudulent inducement or dishonesty, or by putting that person in fear of injury, is punishable under s. 417 of the Penal Code for cheating, or under ss. 383 and 384 for extortion, but not for criminal misappropriation of public money entrusted to him as a public servant.—QUEEN v. RAMNARAIN CHAUKIDAR, 3 W. R. 32 [Loth and Seton-Karr, JJ. June 21, 1865.]

To amount to the offence of extortion, property must be obtained by intentionally putting a person in fear of injury, and thereby dishonestly inducing him to part with his property. The mere issue of hukumnama (to collect statistical information) by a police-officer is no legal ground for a conviction of abetment of cheating or of extortion.—QUEEN v. MEAJAN, 4 W. R. 5. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Sep. 9, 1865.]

UNDER s. 384, delivery of the property by the person put in fear is the essence of the offence. Where there is no delivery, but the person intimidated passively allows his property to be taken away, the offence is not extortion, but would be robbery, if the threats used came within the meaning of s. 390.—QUEEN v. DULEELOODDEEN SHEIKH, 5 W.

R. 19; 1 Wyman's Rev., Civ., and Crim. Rep. 20. [Macpherson, J. Jan. 30, 1866.]

WHERE a constable and others enter a house, and apprehend certain persons as gamblers, and afterwards release them on payment of a sum of money by the latter, the offence committed is not house-trespass and extortion, but taking a bribe as regards the constable, and abetment of that offence as regards the others.—GOVT. v. MAHOMED HOSSEIN, 5 W. R. 49. [Norman and Campbell, JJ. Mar. 5, 1866.]

IT is not necessary, in a case of extortion under the Penal Code, that the threat should be used, and the property received, by one and the same individual, nor that the receiver should be charged with abetment, although that might be done.—REG. v. SHANKAR BHAGBAT, 2 Bom. H. C. R. 394. [Couch, C.J., and Warden, J. July 12, 1866.]

A CONVICTION of extortion by a Full-power Magistrate, and an order of a Sessions Judge rejecting an appeal therein, reversed by the High Court, as there was no such fear of injury as is contemplated by s. 383 of the Penal Code, nor was the delivery of money by the complainants thereby induced, nor did it appear from the evidence that the money was obtained dishonestly by the prisoner, who might have demanded it, believing in good faith that he was entitled to it.—REG. v. ABDUL KADIR alad BALA ABUJE, 3 Bom. H. C. R. 45. [Couch, C.J., and Warden, J. Oct. 31, 1866.]

WHERE accused extorted money by threatening to bring a criminal charge, it was held that he had committed extortion, whether the charge which he threatened to bring was true or false. The terror of a criminal charge is a fear of injury within the meaning of those words in s. 383 of the Penal Code. Extortion may be equally committed whether the charge threatened is true or false.—QUEEN v. MUBARRUK, 7 W. R. 28; 3 Wyman's Rev., Civ., and Crim. Rep. 19. [Norman and Seton-Karr, JJ. Feb. 4, 1867.]

WHERE a complainant charged a person, who was one of the public servants mentioned in s. 167 of Act XXV of 1861, with committing acts which, if committed by a private individual, would have constituted the offence of extortion, it was held that it was not illegal to treat the charge as one of extortion, and to proceed to trial without sanction for the prosecution.—REG. v. PARBHURAM KERNAV, 7 Bom. H. C. R. 61. [Gibbs and Melvill, JJ. July 28, 1870.]

THE making use of real or supposed influence to obtain money from a person against his will under threat, in case of refusal, of loss of appointment, is extortion within the meaning of s. 384 of the Penal Code.—MEER ABBAS ALI v. OMED ALI, 18 W. R. 17. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. June 17, 1872.]

THE mere fact that the offence of extortion under s. 384 of the Penal Code is committed in the presence of the village-chaukidar, without eliciting any disapproval on his part, will not render him liable as an abettor of the offence.—IN THE MATTER OF GOPAL CHUNDER SIRDAR: GOPAL CHUNDER SIRDAR v. FOOLMONI BEWA, I. L. R., 8 Cal. 728; 11 C. L. R. 223. [McDonell and Field, JJ. April 20, 1882.]

THE mere going about and collecting money, upon an assertion that an order had issued to tax the persons upon whom the demand was made, is not extortion, but cheating.—5 Rev., Jud., and Pol. Jour. 147.

THE accused, a Sub-inspector of Police, arrested one J, wrongfully confined him, and extorted from him Rs 200 under a threat that he, the accused, would not release J, unless the money were paid. The money was paid on this account by P, a money-lender, who lent J the money for this purpose. Accused was convicted under ss. 342 and 384 of the Penal Code. In appeal the Sessions Judge held that P was not an accomplice, and having considered his evidence accordingly dismissed the appeal. Held that it was sufficiently shown that the money was not voluntarily given, that it was given by J to obtain his release from police-custody, in which he was detained on no reasonable or sufficient ground, and it was extorted, because the Sub-inspector refused to release J, as he was bound to do, unless he were paid that money. That P paying such money under such circumstances could not be regarded as an accomplice of the Sub-inspector in such misconduct.—AKHOY KUMAR CHUCKERBUTTY v. JAGAT CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY, I. L. R. 27 Cal. 925. [Prinsep and Stanley, JJ. Mar. 29, April 2, 1900.]

*Of Robbery and Dacoity.

Robbery.

390. In all robbery there is either theft or extortion.

When theft is robbery.

Theft is "robbery," if, in order to the committing of the theft, or in committing the theft or in carrying away, or attempting to carry away, property obtained by the theft, the offender, for that end, voluntarily causes, or attempts to cause, to any person, death, or hurt, or wrongful restraint, or fear of instant death, or of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint.

When extortion is robbery.

Extortion is "robbery," if the offender, at the time of committing the extortion, is in the presence of the person put in fear, and commits the extortion by putting that person in fear of instant death, of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint to that person, or to some other person, and, by so putting in fear, induces the person so put in fear then and there to deliver up the thing extorted.

Explanation.—The offender is said to be present if he is sufficiently near to put the other person in fear of instant death, of instant hurt, or of instant wrongful restraint.

Illustrations.

(a) A holds Z down, and fraudulently takes Z's money and jewels from Z's clothes without Z's consent. Here A has committed theft, and, in order to the committing of that theft, has voluntarily caused wrongful restraint to Z. A has therefore committed robbery.

(b.) A meets Z on the high road, shows a pistol, and demands Z's purse. Z, in consequence, surrenders his purse. Here A has extorted the purse from Z by putting him in fear of instant hurt, and being, at the time of committing the extortion, in his presence. A has therefore committed robbery.

(c) A meets Z and Z's child on the high road. A takes the child, and threatens to fling it down a precipice, unless Z delivers his purse. Z, in consequence, delivers his purse. Here A has extorted the purse from Z by causing Z to be in fear of instant hurt to the child who is there present. A has therefore committed robbery on Z.

(d.) A obtains property from Z by saying: "Your child is in the hands of my gang, and will be put to death unless you send us ten thousand rupees." This is extortion, and punishable as such; but it is not robbery, unless Z is put in fear of the instant death of his child.

Dacoity.

391. When five or more persons conjointly commit, or attempt to commit, a robbery, or, where the whole number of persons conjointly committing, or attempting to commit, a robbery, and persons present and aiding such commission or attempt, amount to five or more, every person so committing, attempting, or aiding, is said to commit "dacoity."

THE definition of dacoity in the Penal Code is so wide as to extend to what would have been treated as cases of plunder under the old law.—QUEEN v. KHOYRAT ALLY BEG, 3 W. R. 60. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Aug. 8, 1865.]

WHERE several Hindus acting in concert forcibly removed an ox and two cows from the possession of a Mahomedan, not for the purpose of causing "wrongful gain" to themselves, or "wrongful loss" to the owner of the cattle, but for the purpose of preventing the killing of the cows, held that they could not properly be convicted of dacoity, but only of riot.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAGHUNATH RAI, I. L. R., 15 All. 22. [Tyrrell, J. Aug. 6, 1892.]

392. Whoever commits robbery shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine; and, if the robbery be committed on the highway between sunset and sunrise, the imprisonment may be extended to fourteen years.

THEFT with violence is robbery. A conviction under s. 397 of the Penal Code of using a deadly weapon whilst engaged in the commission of robbery or dacoity is equally good whether the number of thieves be five or under.—QUEEN v. DWARKA AHEER, 2 W. R. 49. [Glover, J. Mar. 21, 1865.]

WHEN persons are found within six hours of the commission of a dacoity with portions of the plundered property in their possession, the presumption of law is that they are participators in the dacoity, and not merely receivers.—QUEEN v. CASSY MUL, 3 W. R. 10. [Glover, J. May 6, 1865.]

WHERE a person through fear, &c., offers no resistance to the carrying-off of his property, but does not deliver any of the property to those who carry it off, the offence committed is robbery, and not extortion.—QUEEN v. DULEELOODDEEN SHEIKH, 5 W. R. 19. [Macpherson, J. Jan. 30, 1866.]

THE offence is robbery where, in committing theft, there is indubitably an intention, seconded by an attempt, to cause hurt.—QUEEN v. TEEKAI BHEER, 5 W. R. 95. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. May 28, 1866.]

That, in this case, the facts alleged were not proved with sufficient certainty to justify a conviction, as it could not be said positively that the purpose of the accused was theft, or that they came into British territory in pursuance of a conspiracy to commit theft there. Held further (per Plowden, J.) that a charge against several persons of engaging in a conspiracy to commit an offence of a particular kind (as, for instance, theft), as opportunity should offer within a determinate area (as, for instance, a village), would not be bad as being too vague. —SHER ALI v. EMPRESS, Panj. Punishment for dacoity.

CHARGE.—That you, on or about the day of , at , committed dacoity, an offence punishable under s. 395 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session [or High Court.]—CRIM. PRO. CODE (Act V. of 1898), Sch. V., Form XXVIII. (II.).

EVERY person, whether within or without the Presidency-towns, aware of the commission of, or of the intention of any other person to commit, any offence punishable under s. 395 of the Penal Code, shall forthwith give information to the nearest Magistrate or police-officer of such commission or intention. —CRIM. PRO. CODE (Act V of 1898), s. 44.

A PERSON convicted of, and sentenced for, dacoity, cannot also be convicted of, and sentenced for, receiving or retaining the stolen property thereby acquired (dissentiente, Loch, J.).—IN THE MATTER OF BHYRUB SEAL, W. R. Gap., 1864, 27. [Loch, Steer, and Glover, JJ. May 2, 1864.]

IF a person concerned in a dacoity unintentionally commits murder, he is liable to punishment under s. 396 of the Penal Code, but he cannot be separately convicted of murder under s. 302, and of committing dacoity under s. 395.—QUEEN v. RUGHOO, W. R. Gap., 1864, 30. [Loch and Jackson, JJ. May 3, 1864.]

FIVE men armed were discovered committing an act of house-breaking by night. One of the parties was engaged in cutting a hole through the wall, while the others stood on guard. When the alarm was given, the neighbours ran up, and one of the robbers cut down one of the villagers. The robbers effected their escape, not however before two of them were identified, the prisoners in the case. Held that the crime of which the prisoners were guilty was house-breaking by night, and not dacoity.—QUEEN v. REWUT RAJWAR, W. R. Gap., 1864, 39. [Loch, Seton-Karr, and Jackson, JJ. July 19, 1864.]

WHEN stolen property is found in the possession of dacoits, the offence of "knowingly having in possession" is to be considered as included in the original one of dacoity unless there are circumstances clearly separating the one crime from the other, e.g., length of time or distance.—QUEEN v. ABDOOL HOSSEIN, 1 W. R. 48. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Dec. 22, 1864.]

THE Sessions Judge should record under what section, or on what grounds, he orders a portion of the fines inflicted on prisoners convicted of dacoity to be made over to the complainant.—QUEEN v. BISSONATH MUNDLE, 2 W. R. 58. [Jackson, J. April 10, 1865.]

WHEN persons are found within six hours of the commission of a dacoity with portions of the plundered property in their possession, the presumption of the law is that they are participators in the dacoity, and not merely receivers.—QUEEN v. CASSY MUL, 3 W. R. 10. [Glover, J. May 6, 1865.]

KNOWING of a design to commit a dacoity, and voluntarily concealing the existence of that design with the knowledge that such concealment would facilitate the commission of dacoity, does not amount to an abetment of the dacoity.—QUEEN v. JHUGROO, 4 W. R. 2 [Seton-Karr and Jackson, JJ. Sep. 4, 1865.

WHEN a prisoner is apprehended eight days after the commission of a dacoity with part of the plunder in his possession, there is as good ground for charging him with the dacoity as with having received or retained with guilty knowledge, and he ought to be charged in the alternative form.—QUEEN v. MOTEE JOLAHA, 5 W. R. 66. [Jackson, J. April 9, 1866.]

SEVERE sentence of transportation for life, in a case of aggravated dacoity, confirmed as required by the state of the district.—QUEEN v. KHOODA SONTHAL, 6 W. R. 9. [Seton-Karr, J. June 21, 1866.]

A SENTENCE of fine only is illegal in a case of dacoity.—QUEEN v. BHOJA, 6 W. R. 54. Norman and Seton-Karr, JJ. Aug. 13, 1866.]

IN a case of dacoity, a sentence of 14 years' transportation was held illegal, and reduced to ten years' transportation under s. 395 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. RAM CHAND PUNJAH, 6 W. R. 88. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. Dec. 3, 1866.]

ON an application to the High Court as a Court of Revision, to discharge an order made by a Sessions Judge, under s. 435, Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV. of 1861), for the committal of certain accused persons for trial on a charge of dacoity, held that, as all that was done under a claim of right in good faith entertained by the accused, however erroneously, the charge could not be sustained. The order of the Sessions Judge annulled.—Ex-parte KARAKA NACHIAR, 3 Mad.

H. C. R. 254. [Collett and Ellis, JJ. Dec. 17, 1866.]

WHEN a body of men attack and plunder a house, the mere fact of the proprietor's family having been able to make their escape a few minutes before the robbers forced an entrance does not take that offence out of the purview of s. 395 of the Penal Code. It is sufficient for the application of the section that the robbers cause, or attempt to cause, the fear of instant hurt or of instant wrongful restraint.—QUEEN v. KISSOREE PATER, 7 W. R. 35. [Glover, J. Feb. 19, 1867.]

S. 511 of the Penal Code does not apply to a case of dacoity. Where a prisoner was found guilty of an attempt at dacoity under that section, and of causing grievous hurt in such attempt under s. 397, and a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment was passed on him, the finding was amended by striking out "ss. 397 and 511," and substituting "s. 395."—QUEEN v. KOONEE, 7 W. R. 48. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. Mar. 25, 1867.]

THE evidence of an approver, for whose appearance at the trial there was not the slightest reason, and the mere fact that in the houses of each of the four prisoners only one article of the stolen property was found, was held insufficient, under the circumstances of this case, where the best witnesses were not examined, to support a conviction of the prisoners on a charge of dacoity.—QUEEN v. RAM SAGAR, 8 W. R. 57. [Loch and Seton-Karr, JJ. Aug. 5, 1867.]

A SENTENCE of 14 years' imprisonment cannot be passed for dacoity under s. 395 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. HAROO RUJWAR, 13 W. R. 27. [Bayley and Glover, JJ. Feb. 14, 1870.]

THE practice of dividing the facts which constitute the parts of one offence into several minor offences condemned. A person convicted of dacoity under s. 395, Penal Code, cannot be convicted also of dishonestly receiving stolen property under s. 411, or of receiving stolen property transferred by commission of dacoity under s. 412, when there is no evidence of the commission. Mode of treating the confession of prisoners as evidence in a case of receiving stolen property pointed out.—QUEEN v. SHAHABUT SHEIKH, 13 W. R. 42. [Norman, Offg. C.J., and Bayley, J. Mar. 8, 1870.]

MERELY being seen getting on board a boat with four persons who have on their own admissions been convicted of belonging to a gang of dacoits, is not sufficient evidence against those so seen. To make an admission of guilty knowledge of the means by which money supposed to have been acquired by dacoity was obtained, evidence under s. 150 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act XXV. of 1861), corresponding with s. 26 of the Evidence Act (I. of 1872), it must be shown that the admission was antecedent to the discovery of the money.—QUEEN v. KAMAL FUKEER, 17 W. R. 50. [Couch, C.J., and Ainslie, J. April 15, 1872.]

IN this case the charge was originally one of dacoity under s. 395, Penal Code, and the proceedings were first conducted under ch. 18 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872); but during the progress of the case the charge under s. 395 was lost sight of, and the accused were put on their defence on a charge of being members of an unlawful assembly under s. 143, Penal Code, and the proceedings were continued under ch. 17 of the Procedure Code (or ch. 21 of the new Procedure Code) in a summary way. Held that, had the complaint been one under s. 143, Penal Code, the Magistrate could, under s. 222, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872), have tried it in a summary manner under ch. 17 (or ch. 21 of the new Code); but, as the complaint was of a charge of dacoity under s. 395, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case in a summary manner, but should have inquired into it in a regular manner under ch. 18 (or ch. 22 of the new Code).—DWARKANATH MOZOOMDAR v. NALU DASS, 21 W. R. 89. [Kemp and Birch, JJ. April 20, 1874.]

A AND B were committed for trial, the former for dacoity under s. 395 of the Penal Code, and the latter under s. 412 for receiving stolen property, knowing it to be such. A made two confessions, and in both he stated he had handed over to B some pieces of gold and silver stolen at the dacoity. When B was arrested, a gold ring and a silver wristlet were found in his possession. At the trial, A pleaded guilty, and B claimed to be tried. A goldsmith deposed that he had made the ring and wristlet found with B out of pieces of gold and silver given to him for the purpose by B. On this evidence and on the confessions made by A, the Sessions Judge convicted B. On appeal to the High Court, held that, A and B not having been tried jointly for the same offence, the confession of A was inadmissible as evidence against B. There was, therefore, no evidence of the identity of the goods stolen at the dacoity with those found in B's possession, and the case against him failed. Conviction quashed.—EMPRESS v. BALA PATEL, I. L. R., 5 Bom. 63. [Westropp, C.J., and Melvill, J. April 7, 1880.]

WHERE a large body of Hindus, acting in concert, and apparently under the influence of religious feeling, attacked certain Mahomedans who were driving cattle along a pub-

the road, and forcibly deprived them of the possession of such cattle under circumstances which did not indicate any intention of subsequently restoring such cattle to their lawful owners, held that the offence of which the Hindus were guilty was dacoity under s. 395 of the Penal Code, and not merely riot.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAM BARAN, I. L. R., 15 All. 299. [Edge, C.J., and Burkitt and Aikman, JJ. July 14, 1893.]

IN order to support a conviction under s. 396 of the Penal Code, it is necessary to establish, not only that the person accused under that section was committing dacoity conjointly with others, but it must be shown that the murder was committed in his presence. Hence, where certain persons were shown to have been concerned in a dacoity in the course of which murder was committed, but it was not shown that they were in the house in which the dacoity was committed at the time the murder took place, and the evidence, if anything, pointed to a contrary conclusion, it was held that the accused could not properly be convicted under s. 396 but only under s. 395 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. UMRAO SINGH, I. L. R., 16 All. 437. [Knox and Blair, JJ. June 20, 1894.]

TEN persons were committed to a Sessions Court charged with offences under the Penal Code, ss. 395, 396, and some of them were also charged with offences under s. 412. One of the accused had made a confessional statement before the Magistrate, who recorded it, but did not make on it a memorandum to the effect stated in the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 164, and did not admit it in evidence for the reasons that the accused was produced from the custody of the police in which he had been detained for five days, and there was a proposal on the part of the police to treat him as an approver. It appeared that a perusal of the preliminary register would have shown that the accused were either guilty under s. 396, or not guilty under s. 395 at all. The accused were tried by the Sessions Judge with a jury. The confessional statement was not admitted in evidence. The jury found the accused not guilty of dacoity, but the Judge, disagreeing with the verdict, referred the case to the High Court under the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 307. Held (1) that the procedure adopted by the Judge was wrong, and that he should have tried the accused with the aid of assessors under the Penal Code, s. 396; (2) that the Judge should have enquired, under the Criminal Procedure Code, s. 533, whether the confessional statement had been duly made; and (3) that, under the circumstances the High Court should determine on the evidence on record, after giving due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the jury whether the accused were guilty under s. 395.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ANGA VALAYAN, I. L. R., 22 Mad. 15. [Collins, C.J., and Benson, J. Mar. 31, April 14, 1898.]

396. If any one of five or more persons, who are conjointly committing dacoity, commits murder in so committing dacoity, every one of those persons shall be punished with death, or transportation for life, or rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

PRO. CODE (Act V of 1898), s. 44.

IF the act by which death is caused does not in itself constitute the crime of murder, it does not constitute murder, because it is coupled with dacoity.—QUEEN v. RAMCOOMAR CHUNG, 1 Ind. Jur. O. S. 108. Steer, Seton-Karr, and Jackson, JJ. Nov. 17, 1862.]

IF a person concerned in a dacoity unintentionally commits murder, he is liable to punishment under s. 396 of the Penal Code, but he cannot be separately convicted of murder under s. 302, and of committing dacoity under s. 395.—QUEEN v. RUGHOO, W. R. Gap., 1864, 30. [Loch and Jackson, JJ. May 3, 1864.]

THE case of a prisoner who, after having committed dacoity attended with murder, absconded to Bhootan. Mar. 21, 1865.]

IN order to support a conviction under s. 396 of the Penal Code, it is necessary to establish, not only that the person accused under that section was committing dacoity conjointly with others, but it must be shown that the murder was committed in his presence. UMRAO SINGH, I. L. R., 16 All. 437. [Knox and Blair, JJ. June 20, 1894.]

WHEN, in the commission of a dacoity, murder is committed, it matters not whether the particular dacoit charged under s. 396 of Act XLV. of 1860 was inside the house where the dacoity is committed or outside the house, or whether the murder was committed inside or outside the house, so long only as the murder was committed in the commission of that dacoity. Queen-Empress v. Umrao Singh (I. L. R., 16 All. 437) distinguished.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. TEJA, I. L. R., 17 All. 86. [Edge, C.J. and Banerjee, J. Jan. 11, 1895.]

TEN persons were committed to a Sessions Court charged with offences under the Penal Code, ss. 395, 396 and some of them were also charged with offences under s. 412. ANGA VALAVAN, I. L. R., 22 Mad. 15. [Collins, C.J., and Benson, J. Mar. 31, April 14, 1898.]

APPELLANT was convicted and sentenced to transportation for life on a charge of dacoity. The most material evidence for the prosecution was the statement, in the nature of a dying declaration made to the Jamadar of police by one Fakira Shimpi, who received wounds during the dacoity and who died before the trial commenced. The Assistant Surgeon, who made the post-mortem examination on the deceased was not called, being on leave, but the Civil Surgeon, on a perusal of the notes left by the Assistant Surgeon, gave evidence that the cause of death of the deceased was pneumonia aggravated by a stab. In the notes themselves no cause of death was given, and there was no evidence as to how the pneumonia was aggravated. No explanation was given as to how the opinion was formed that the pneumonia was aggravated by the injury, and there was nothing in the notes to support it. Held that the statement of the deceased ought not to have been admitted in evidence in the absence of evidence to show that his death was caused or accelerated by the wounds received at the dacoity, or that the dacoity was the transaction which resulted in his death.—IMPERATRIX v. THEFT with violence is robbery. A conviction under s. 397 of the Penal Code is equally good, whether the number of thieves be five or under.—QUEEN v. DWARKA AHEER, 2 W. R. 49. Glover, J. Mar. 21, 1865.]

WHEN grievous hurt is inflicted with a deadly weapon by one of ten men armed with such weapons, and engaged in dacoity, all the men are liable to the minimum punishment prescribed by s. 397 of the Penal Code.—4 W. R. Cr. L. 1. [No. 855, Aug. 26, 1865.]

S. 511 of the Penal Code does not apply to a case of dacoity. Where a prisoner was found guilty of an attempt at dacoity under that section, and of causing grievous hurt in such attempt under s. 397, and a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment was passed on him, the finding was amended by striking out "ss. 397 and 511" and substituting "s. 395."—QUEEN v. HELD that the words "such offender" in s. 397 of the Indian Penal Code, include any person taking part in the dacoity who, though he may not himself have struck the blow causing the grievous hurt, is nevertheless liable for the act by reason of s. 34 of the Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. Punishment for belonging to a gang of dacoits.

MERELY being seen getting on board a boat with four persons who have on their own admissions been convicted of belonging to a gang of dacoits, is not sufficient evidence against those so seen. To make an admission of guilty knowledge of the means by which money supposed to have been acquired by dacoity was obtained, evidence under s. 26 of Act I. of 1872, it must be shown that the admission was antecedent to the discovery of the money.—QUEEN v. KAMAL FUKEER, 17 W. R. 50. [Couch, C.J., and Ainslie, J. April 15, 1872.]

IT is necessary, in order to establish a charge under s. 400, Penal Code, that the prosecution should make out that there existed at the time specified a gang of persons associated together for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity, and that the accused was one of the gang.—QUEEN v. MOOKTARAM SIRDAR, 23 W. 401. Whoever, at any time after the passing of this Act, shall belong to any wandering or other gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery, and not being a gang of thugs or dacoits, shall be punished with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Punishment for belonging to gang of thieves.

IT is an offence under s. 401 to belong to any wandering or other gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery, but it is not sufficient to support a conviction under that section, that the accused should be proved to be simply a member of a robber-tribe; it should also be shown that he actually consorted with persons who were themselves associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery.—PEERA v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No 37 of 1869.

IN the trial of prisoners for the offence of belonging to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery (s. 401, Penal Code), the Judge should, in his charge, put clearly to the jury (1) the necessity of proof of association; 2. the need of proving that that association was for the purpose of habitual theft, and that the habit is to be proved by an aggregate of acts.—In re SHRIRAM VENKATASAMI, 6 Mad. H. C. R. 120. [Holloway and Kindersley, JJ. Feb. 21, 1871.]

To sustain a conviction on a charge under s. 401, there must be (1st) proof of association, and (2nd) proof that the association was for the purpose of habitual theft, and that habit should be proved by an aggregate of acts. Where, therefore, the accused were arrested together in one village, and there was no doubt that each of the accused had individually committed theft or robbery, but it was not shown that there had been any association among the accused for the purpose of committing theft or robbery, much less for the purpose of habitually committing such offences held that the conviction under s. 401 was not sustainable.—AFRIDI v. EMPRESS, Panj Rec., No. 9 of 1880.

THE character of the accused not being a fact in issue in the offence of belonging to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft, punishable under s. 401 of the Penal Code, evidence of bad character or reputation of the accused is inadmissible for the purpose of proving the commission of that offence. Where it was proved that certain persons were found together at some distance from their houses, that they were all intimately connected with one another and were in the habit of visiting melas together, that one of them was arrested in the act of picking a pocket and that when they were arrested many of them gave false names and false addresses Held they could not be convicted under s. 401 of the Penal Code, there being no proof that they belonged to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft.—MANKURA PASI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 27 Cal. 139. [Prinsep and Hill, JJ. Aug. 7, 1899.]

Assembling for purpose of committing dacoity.

EVERY person, whether within or without the Presidency-towns, aware of the commission of, or of the intention of any other person to commit, any offence punishable under s. 402 of the Penal Code, shall forthwith give information to the nearest Magistrate or police-officer of such commission or intention.—CRIM. PRO. CODE (Act V. of 1898), s. 44.

CASE of an unlawful assembly, the members of which were held guilty of an offence under s. 402 of the Penal Code on their own admission that they not only knew that the assembly was an assembly for the purpose of committing dacoity, but also that all the persons (including themselves) constituting the assembly lived on the proceeds of dacoity, and had no other means of living.—QUEEN v. KENDRA KAMAR, 7 W. R. 61. [Hobhouse, J. April 30, 1867.]

SEVERAL persons were found at 11 o'clock at night on a road just outside the city of Agra, all carrying arms (guns and swords) concealed under their clothes. None of them had a license to carry arms, and none of them could give any reasonable explanation of his presence at the spot under the particular circumstances. Held that these persons were rightly convicted under s. 402 of the Indian Penal Code of assembling together with intent to commit dacoity. The Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Karuna Baistobi (I. L. R., 22 Cal. 164), Balmakand Ram v. Ghansam Ram (I. L. R., 22 Cal. 391), and Queen-Empress v. Papa Sani (I. L. R., 23 Mad. 159) referred to. —QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BHOLU, I. L. R., 23 All. 124. ## Of Criminal Misappropriation of Property.

403. Whoever dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use any moveable property shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.

Dishonest misappropriation of property.

Illustrations.

(a.) A takes property belonging to Z out of Z's possession, in good faith, believing, at the time when he takes it, that the property belongs to himself. A is not guilty of theft; but if A, after discovering his mistake, dishonestly appropriates the property to his own use, he is guilty of an offence under this section.

(b) A, being on friendly terms with Z, goes into Z's library in Z's absence, and takes away a book without Z's express consent. Here, if A was under the impression that he had Z's implied consent to take the book for the purpose of reading it, A has not committed theft. But if A afterwards sells the book for his own benefit, he is guilty of an offence under this section.

(c.) A and B being joint-owners of a horse, A takes the horse out of B's possession, intending to use it. Here, as A has a right to use the horse, he does not dishonestly misappropriate it. But, if A sells the horse, and appropriates the whole proceeds to his own use, he is guilty of an offence under this section.

Explanation 1.—A dishonest misappropriation for a time only is a misappropriation within the meaning of this section.

Illustration.

A finds Government promissory note belonging to Z, bearing a blank endorsement. A, knowing that the note belongs to Z, pledges it with a banker as a security for a loan, intending at a future time to restore it to Z. A has committed an offence under this section.

Explanation 2.—A person who finds property not in the possession of any other person, and takes such property for the purpose of protecting it for, or of restoring it to, the owner, does not take or misappropriate it dishonestly, and is not guilty of an offence; but he is guilty of the offence above defined if he appropriates it to his own use, when he knows or has the means of discovering the owner, or before he has used reasonable means to discover and give notice to the owner, and has kept the property a reasonable time to enable the owner to claim it.

What are reasonable means, or what is a reasonable time, in such a case, is a question of fact.

It is not necessary that the finder should know who is the owner of the property, or that any particular person is the owner of it; it is sufficient if, at the time of appropriating it, he does not believe it to be his own property, or in good faith believes that the real owner cannot be found.

Illustrations.

(a.) A finds a rupee on the high road, not knowing to whom the rupee belongs. A picks up the rupee. Here A has not committed the offence defined in this section.

(b.) A finds a letter on the road, containing a bank-note. From the direction and contents of the letter he learns to whom the note belongs. He appropriates the note. He is guilty of an offence under this section.

(c.) A finds a cheque payable to bearer. He can form no conjecture as to the person who has lost the cheque. But the name of the person who has drawn the cheque appears. A knows that this person can direct him to the person in whose favour the cheque was drawn. A appropriates the cheque without attempting to discover the owner. He is guilty of an offence under this section.

(d.) A sees Z drop his purse with money in it. A picks up the purse with the intention of restoring it to Z, but afterwards appropriates it to his own use. A has committed an offence under this section.

(e.) A finds a purse with money, not knowing to whom it belongs; he afterwards discovers that it belongs to Z, and appropriates it to his own use. A is guilty of an offence under this section.

(f.) A finds a valuable ring, not knowing to whom it belongs. A sells it immediately without attempting to discover the owner. A is guilty of an offence under this section.

A, THE male managing member of a joint Hindu family, removed an iron-safe, the property of the joint estate, but containing properties which exclusively belonged to the other members of the family, from the possession of the latter, without their consent. Held that A, by removing the iron-safe, did not commit theft or any other offence, but he was guilty of criminal misappropriation if, on discovering the contents of the iron-safe to be properties belonging to others, he retained those properties and attempted to appropriate them.—IN THE MATTER OF KOOMAR JOGINDRO NATH ROY, Shome's Rep. 31.

THE mere fact that the prosecution gave the prisoner time to make out his accounts, and pay the balance due, does not vitiate a conviction for dishonest misappropriation, or show that the matter is one for the Civil Courts only.—In re SREEKANT BISWAS, 5 W. R. 56. [Macpherson, J. Mar. 24, 1866.]

To bring a prisoner within s. 403 of the Penal Code there must be actual conversion of the thing appropriated to the prisoner's own use. Where, therefore, the accused found a thing, and merely retained it in his possession, he was acquitted of criminal misappropriation under the section referred to.—QUEEN v. ABDOOL, 10 W. R. 23 [Loch and Glover, JJ. July 27, 1868.]

A SERVANT, who retains in his hands money which he was authorized to collect, and which he did collect, from the debtor of his master, because money is due to him as wages, is guilty of criminal misappropriation.—QUEEN v. BISSESSUR ROY, 11 W. R. 51. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. May 13, 1869.]

IN a case in which the accused is charged with having dishonestly appropriated property under s. 403 of the Penal Code, the charge should specify the person to whom the property belonged. Where the accused is interested in the property jointly with others, he is not necessarily guilty of a criminal act if he takes possession of it, and disposes of it.—QUEEN v. PARBUTTY CHURN CHUCKER-

BUTTY, 14 W. R. 13. [Phear and Mitter, JJ. July 2, 1870.]

WHERE money is paid to a person by mistake, and such person, either at the time of the receipt of the money, or at any time subsequently before its refund, discovers the mistake, and determines to appropriate the money, he is guilty of criminal misappropriation, but he is not guilty of cheating—QUEEN v. SHAMSUNDER, 2 N.-W. P. 475. [Turner, J. Dec. 17, 1870.]

IF it be the duty of the agent of a landholder to keep the collections he makes for his master separate from his own moneys, expending thereout moneys on his master's behalf, and handing over the balance to his master, and if he, in breach of his trust, converts the money to his own use, he is amenable to a criminal prosecution. And where a landowner permits the agent to mix the collections with his own moneys, if the agent applies the money so collected to his own use fraudulently and dishonestly, and falsifies the account, so as to conceal his fraud, there is evidence of a criminal misappropriation.—QUEEN v. KAREEM BUX, 3 N.-W. P. 30. [Turner, J. Feb. 7, 1871.]

THIS was considered to be a matter of trade between the prosecutrix and the prisoner, who took certain hides from the former, but refused to pay for them, and was held not guilty of dishonest misappropriation under s. 403 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. BOYSTUM MOOCHEE, 17 W. R. 11. [Kemp and Jackson, JJ. Feb. 3, 1872.]

A PERSON was convicted and sentenced under s. 411 of the Penal Code for dishonestly receiving a bull, knowing the same to have been criminally misappropriated. It was found that, at the time of the alleged misappropriation, the bull had been set at large by some Hindu, in accordance with Hindu religious usage, at the time of performing funeral ceremonies. Held that the bull was not, at the time of the alleged misappropriation, "property" within the meaning of the Penal Code, inasmuch as, not only was it not the subject of ownership by any person, but the original owner had surrendered all his rights as its proprietor, that it was therefore nullius proprietas, and incapable of larceny being committed in respect of it, and that the conviction must be set aside.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BAMDHU, I. L. R., 8 All. 51. [Straight, J. Dec. 7, 1885.] Followed in Romesh Chunder Sannyal v. Hiru Mondal, I. L. R., 17 Cal. 852, infra.

A BULL dedicated to an idol, and allowed to roam at large, is not fera bestia, and therefore res nullius, but, primâ facie, the trustee of the temple, where the idol is worshipped, has the rights and liabilities attaching to its ownership.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NALLA, I. L. R., 11 Mad. 145. [Muttusami Ayyar and Brandt, JJ. Sep. 13, 1887.] Referred to and commented on in Romesh Chunder Sannyal v. Hiru Mondal, I. L. R., 17 Cal. 852, infra.

FISH in a public river cannot be said to be property in the possession of the person who may have the fishery right, and the infringement of that right is not theft under s. 378 of the Penal Code. The accused was charged with unlawfully taking fish along with some eleven others in a public river, the right of fishing in which had been let out by the Government to the complainant, and the lower Court, amongst other offences, convicted them of theft, criminal misappropriation, mischief, criminal trespass, and unlawful assembly. Held that the conviction was wrong, and that no offence had been committed.—BHAGIRAM DOME v. ABAR DOME, I. L. R., 15 Cal. 388. [Norris and Ghose, JJ. Jan. 24, 1888.]

R WAS a Government servant, whose duty it was to receive certain moneys, and to pay them into the treasury on receipt. He admitted that he had retained two sums of money in his possession for several months, when fearing detection he paid them into the treasury, making a false entry at the time in his books with a view to avert suspicion. His explanation as to his reason for retaining the money was not credited by the Magistrate, who convicted him of criminal misappropriation under s. 403 of the Penal Code. Held that the conviction was right.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. RAMAKRISHNA, I. L. R., 12 Mad. 49. [Wilkinson and Shephard, JJ. Sep. 11, 1888.]

THE word "object" in s. 295 of the Penal Code does not include animate objects. A bull dedicated and set at large at the sradha of a Hindu in accordance with religious usage is not an "object" within the meaning of that section. When such an animal was killed by certain Mahomedans, secretly and at night, in the presence of none but Mahomedans, for the sake of the meat and value of the skin, held that no offence had been committed under s. 295. Queen-Empress v. Immam Ali (I. L. R., 10 All. 150) followed. Held, further that such a bull is not "moveable property" within the meaning of ss. 378 and 403, or "property" within the meaning of s. 425 of the Penal Code, and could not, therefore, be the subject of theft, criminal misappropriation, or mischief. The fact that such a bull receives some attention from the cowherd of the persons who set it at liberty, and is daily fed by him by direction of his employers, and is not used for breeding purposes without their permission being asked, is not inconsistent with a total surrender by those who set it at liberty of all their rights as proprietors. Queen-Empress v. Bandhu (I. L. R., 8 All. 51) followed. Queen-Empress v. Nalla (I. L. R., 11 Mad. 145) referred to and commented on. For the purpose of construing a section of an Act, and ascertaining the intention of the Legislature, the Report of the Indian Law Commissioners or a Select Committee appointed to consider a Bill may be referred to. Queen-Empress v. Kartick Chunder Das (I. L. R., 14 Cal. 721) followed.—ROMESH CHUNDER SANNYAL v. HIRU MONDAL, I. L. R., 17 Cal 852. [Norris and Macpherson, JJ. Mar. 27 and April 15, 1890.]

THE accused, being in the employ of Government in the Post-office Department, while assisting in the sorting of letters, secreted two letters with the intention of handing them to the delivery-peon, and sharing with him certain moneys payable upon them. He was charged under the Post-Office Act, s 48. Held (1) that, since the intention of the accused was not to prevent the delivery of the letters to the addressees, he was not guilty of the offence of secreting them within the meaning of that section; (2) that he was guilty of the offence of stealing and of fraudulently misappropriating the letters within the meaning of that section; and of the offence of theft and of attempt to commit dishonest misappropriation of property within the meaning of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. VENKATASAMI, I. L. R., 14 Mad. 229. [Collins, C.J., and Weir, J. Oct. 17, Nov. 13, 1890.]

THE accused, finding a gold mohur on an open plain, sold it the next day to a shroff for the full value, and appropriated the sale-proceeds. Held that, in the absence of any information as to the circumstances under which the coin was lost, and as it was not improbable that the property in the coin had been abandoned by the original owner, the accused could not be convicted of criminal misappropriation under s. 403 of the Penal Code. —QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SITA, I. L. R., 18 Bom. 212. [Candy and Fulton, JJ. Mar 9, 1893.]

THE property referred to in s. 405 of the Penal Code is, as in s. 403, moveable property, and criminal breach of trust cannot be committed in respect of immoveable property. Reg. v. Girdhar Dharamdas (6 Bom. H. C. R. 33) followed.—JUGDOWN SINHA v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 23 Cal. 372. [Beverley and Gordon, JJ. Dec. 4, 1895.]

A JUDGMENT-DEBTOR, whose standing crops were attached, harvested them while the attachment was in force, and was convicted of theft Held that the accused was not guilty of theft, but of the offence of dishonestly removing the property under Penal Code, s. 424. Per Benson, J.—The offence was also criminal misappropriation within the meaning of Penal Code, s. 403.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. OBAYYA, I. L. R., 22 Mad. 151. [Davies and Benson, JJ. Sep. 13, 1898.]

404. Whoever dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use property, knowing that such property was in the possession of a deceased person at the time of that person's decease, and has not since been in the possession of any person legally entitled to such possession, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine; and, if the offender, at the time of such person's decease, was employed by him as a clerk or servant, the imprisonment may extend to seven years.

Dishonest misappropriation of property possessed by a deceased person at the time of his death.

Illustration.

Z dies in possession of furniture and money. His servant A, before the money comes into the possession of any person entitled to such possession, dishonestly misappropriates it. A has committed the offence defined in this section.

A PERSON may commit the offence of dishonest misappropriation of property possessed by a deceased person at the time of his death (s. 404, Penal Code) by dishonestly misappropriating the money entrusted to him, although he does not bring such money to his own use.—IN THE MATTER OF ENAYET HOSSEIN, 11 W. R. 1. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. Jan. 12, 1869.]

S. 404 of the Penal Code (relating to the misappropriation or conversion of "property" left by a deceased person) does not apply to immoveable property.—REG. v. GIRDHAR DHARAMDAS, 6 Bom. H. C R. 33. [Tucker and Gibbs, JJ. Mar. 5, 1869.]

IT is not necessary for a conviction for dishonest misappropriation of property possessed by a deceased person at the time of his death, under s. 404 of the Penal Code, that the accused should misappropriate it to his own use. Held by Markby, J., that under s. 404 all the elements are required to constitute the offence which would be required to constitute the offence of criminal misappropriation in respect of a person who is alive.—QUEEN v. NOBIN CHUNDER SIRCAR, 12 W. R. 39. [Jackson and Markby, JJ. July 27, 1869.]

Of Criminal Breach of Trust.

405. Whoever, being in any manner entrusted with property, or with any dominion over property, dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use that property or dishonestly uses or disposes of that property in violation of any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust is to be discharged, or of any legal contract, express or implied, which he has made touching the discharge of such trust, or wilfully suffers any other person so to do, commits "criminal breach of trust."

Criminal breach of trust.

Illustrations.

(a.) A, being executor to the will of a deceased person, dishonestly disobeys the law which directs him to divide the effects according to the will, and appropriates them to his own use. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

(b.) A is a warehouse-keeper. Z, going on a journey, entrusts his furniture to A under a contract that it shall be returned on payment of a stipulated sum for warehouse-room. A dishonestly sells the goods. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

(c.) A, residing in Calcutta, is agent for Z, residing at Delhi. There is an express or implied contract between A and Z that all sums remitted by Z to A shall be invested by A according to Z's direction. Z remits a lakh of rupees to A, with directions to A to invest the same in Company's paper. A dishonestly disobeys the directions, and employs the money in his own business. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

(d.) But if A, in the last illustration, not dishonestly, but in good faith, believing that it will be more for Z's advantage to hold shares in the Bank of Bengal, disobeys Z's directions, and buys shares in the Bank of Bengal for Z, instead of buying Company's paper, here, though Z should suffer loss, and should be entitled to bring a civil action against A on account of that loss, yet A, not having acted dishonestly, has not committed criminal breach of trust.

(e.) A, a revenue-officer, is entrusted with public money, and is either directed by law or bound by a contract, express or implied, with the Government, to pay into a certain treasury all the public money which he holds. A dishonestly appropriates the money. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

(f.) A, a carrier, is entrusted by Z with property to be carried by land or by water. A dishonestly misappropriates the property. A has committed criminal breach of trust.

THE subsequent making away with property by a person originally in lawful possession of the same is not theft but criminal breach of trust.—BHARUT CHUNDER CHRISTIAN, In re, 1 W. R. 2. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 8, 1864.]

WHERE a complaint only amounted to a statement that the accused had, in consequence of certain arrangements made with the complainant's father, received certain moneys, and had refused to render accounts, but contained no allegation that he had, in fact, realized and dishonestly misappropriated any particular sum, and obviously was made for the purpose of forcing him to render accounts, held that the Magistrate was right in dismissing it, since the facts alleged did not constitute criminal breach of trust.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MURPHY, I. L. R., 9 All. 666. [Mahmood, J. April 18, 1887.]

* As to framing charge under s. 405, see s. 222 of the new Code of Criminal Procedure (Act V. of 1898).

WHEN a bank takes a deposit from its customer, it takes it on the understanding that that deposit is not to be used to pay dividends to shareholders at a time when the bank is insolvent, and cannot legally pay dividends. In the case of a bank registered under the Indian Companies Act as a company limited by shares, and governed by the regulations contained in Table A in the first schedule to the Act, it was held that the directors had dominion over the property and the management of the funds of the bank, that they were bound not to pay dividends except out of the profits of the bank; and that, if they dishonestly, that is, knowingly and intentionally, paid dividends to the shareholders out of deposits when there were no profits, intending to cause gain to themselves or others to which they were not entitled, or to cause wrongful loss to other persons, they were guilty of criminal breach of trust as bankers under s. 400 of the Penal Code, but that the manager and the accountant or assistant manager were not, within the meaning of the section, persons who were entrusted with property or with dominion over property as bankers or agents, and therefore did not come directly under s. 409, though they might be guilty of abetment under s. 409 read with s. 109, by conspiring with the directors to commit criminal breach of trust, if they assisted the directors to obtain the sanction of the shareholders to the illegal payment of dividends, and did so for the dishonest purpose of causing wrongful gain or wrongful loss. Whether the illegal payment of dividends under the circumstances stated could be regarded as causing wrongful loss to the bank as a corporate body, quære. Whether moneys deposited in the bank by its customers, and not in any way ear-marked could, after such deposit, be regarded as "property" of the depositors within the meaning of s. 409, quære. Held also that, if the directors, manager, and accountant, dishonestly, that is, to obtain wrongful gain for themselves or to cause wrongful loss to others, put before the shareholders balance-sheets which they knew to be materially false and misleading, and likely to mislead the public as to the condition of the bank, and concealed its true condition, and thereby induced depositors to allow their money to remain in deposit in the bank, they were guilty of cheating in the aggravated form made punishable by s. 418 of the Penal Code; and if they acted together to put forward such a false balance-sheet, they were guilty of abetment by conspiracy to cheat. Semble.—The making of such a false balance-sheet is not an offence within s. 191 of the Penal Code, and, where it is made prior to the commencement of the winding-up of the company, is not an offence within s. 215 of the Indian Companies Act (VI. of 1882). A balance-sheet of a company under the Indian Companies Act must be a true balance-sheet, in the sense that it must represent the actual state of the company's assets and liabilities. If it falsely states the condition of the company, it is a false balance-sheet, though it follows the accounts as shown in the books of the company, and correctly represents what is in the books. A balance-sheet which shewed all the debts owing to the company, amounting to Rs. 28 lakhs, under the head of assets, without specifying, in accordance with the form of balance-sheet annexed to Table A, which of such debts were good and secured, which good and unsecured, and which considered bad and doubtful, and also showed a divisible balance of profits amounting to Rs 19,000, the facts being that out of the Rs. 28 lakhs some Rs. 13 lakhs were bad and irrecoverable, and that the capital reserve-fund and other provision for bad debts had been lost, and that the company, instead of making profits, was, and long had been, insolvent, was found to be false and misleading. Having regard to the nature of the charges above referred to, the Court, under s. 239 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, rejected an application by the defence that the accused should be tried separately. The word "European" in s. 451 of the Code of Criminal Procedure means persons born in Europe. The word "compelled" in the proviso to s. 132 of the Evidence Act (I. of 1872) applies only where the Court has compelled a witness to answer a question and not to a case where the witness has not asked to be excused from answering a question, but gives his answer without any claim to have himself excused. A deposition on oath made by one of several accused, as a witness, in a previous inquiry under ss. 162, 163 of the Indian Companies Act (VI. of 1882) was admitted in evidence against himself only, and not against the other accused. The action of the defence, during the cross-examination of a witness for the Crown, in tendering a document to such witness, and using the same as evidence for the defence, was held to entitle the Crown to reply under s. 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. Moss, I. L. R., 16 All. 88. [Edge, C.J., and a Jury. Nov. 20, Dec. 18, 1893.]

THE property referred to in s. 405 of the Penal Code is, as in s. 403, moveable property, and criminal breach of trust cannot be committed in respect of immoveable property.—Reg. v Girdhar Dharamdas (6 Bom. H. C. R. 33) followed.—JUGDOWN SINHA v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 23 Cal. 372. [Beverley and Gordon, JJ. Dec. 4, 1895.]

406. Whoever commits criminal breach of trust shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

Punishment for criminal breach of trust.

Ct. of Ses., Presy. Mag., or Mag. of 1st or 2nd class. Cognizable. Warrant. Not bailable. Not comp.

CHARGE.—That you, on or about the , at , being entrusted with certain property, to wit, , committed criminal breach of trust in respect of such property, and that you thereby committed an offence punishable under s 406 of the Indian Penal Code, and within, &c.

To sustain a charge of criminal breach of trust, it is essential to establish the criminal character of the act by which the trust has been violated.—GOVT. v. DOORGA PERSHAD, 5 N. A., N.-W. P., Pt. II, 49.

THE acceptor of a bond covenanting to return a sum embezzled was held to be precluded from prosecuting the giver for criminal breach of trust.—GOVT. v. GOLAM HOSSEIN, 6 N. A., N.-W. P., Pt. II., 86

IN cases which can lawfully be compounded, a composition entitling a party to bring a civil action thereupon amounts to a condonation of the criminal offence, and to an implied agreement not to prosecute. Where the terms of the composition are infringed, a civil suit would lie—not a criminal prosecution.—GOVT v. SEWARAM, 5 N. A., N. W. P. Pt. II., 227, 1864.

A REFUSAL to give up land alleged to have been mortgaged, the mortgage being denied, cannot be treated as a dishonest misappropriation of the documents of title amounting to a criminal breach of trust under s 405 of the Penal Code.—REG. v. JAFFIR NAIK 2 Bom. H. C. R. 127. [Couch and Newton JJ. Dec. 7, 1864.]

IF a mortgagor in possession, who is entrusted with dominion over the mortgaged property by the mortgagee in whom the property is in mortgage in the English form, wilfully defaults, and causes the property to be sold for arrears of Government revenue for the purpose of defrauding the mortgagee, and purchases it benami, he is liable to be punished for criminal misappropriation under s. 405 of the Penal Code.—RAM MANIK SHAHA v. BRINDABUN CHUNDER POTDAR, 5 W. R. 230 (Civ. Rul.). [Norman and Campbell, JJ. May 2, 1866.]

THE misappropriation of each separate item of money with which a person is entrusted is a separate offence and the facts connected with it should form the subject of a separate inquiry. The duty of a committing officer in such a case is to select certain distinct items, to frame his charges upon them, and to adduce evidence specially upon those items.—IN THE MATTER OF CHETTER, (C. A.), 15 W. R. 5 [Jackson and Mookerjee, JJ. Jan. 21, 1871.]

A PERSON who pledges what is pledged to him may be guilty of criminal breach of trust. There are two elements: (1) the disposal in violation of any direction of law or contract, expressed or implied, prescribing the mode in which the trust ought to be discharged, (2) such disposal dishonestly.—PRO., May 23, 1871, 6 Mad H. C. R. Ap. 28.

TO constitute the offence of criminal breach of trust, there must be dishonest misappropriation by a person in whom confidence is placed as to the custody or management of the property in respect of whom the breach of trust is charged.—ISSUR CHUNDER GHOSE v. PEARI MOHUN PALIT, 16 W. R. 39. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 5, 1871.]

WHERE a sub-inspector of police was charged with having purchased a pony which had been impounded, it was held that the Magistrate should have proceeded under s. 19, Act I of 1871, taken with s 169, Penal Code, and that the accused could not be convicted, under s 406 of the Penal Code, of criminal breach of trust.—IN THE MATTER OF RAJKRISTO BISWAS, 16 W. R. 52; 8 B. L. R. Ap. 1. [Kemp, Offg. C.J., and Ainslie, J. Sep. 25, 1871.]

A PARTNER who dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use, or dishonestly uses or disposes of any of the partnership property which he is entrusted with, or has dominion over, is guilty of criminal misappropriation under s 405 of the Penal Code.—NRIGENDRO LALL CHATTERJEE v. OKHOY COOMAR SHAW, 21 W. R. 59; 13 B. L. R. 307. [Couch, C.J., and Jackson, Phear, Birch, and Morris, JJ. Mar. 30, 1874.] Overrules Lall Chand Roy, 9 W. R. 37. Follows Queen v. Gour Benode Dutt. 21 W. R. 59; 13 B. L. R. 308n.

WHEN a master entrusts his servant with money for the payment of an open account, i.e., an account of which the items have never been checked or settled, and the tradesman makes the servant a present, and the transaction amounts to a taxation of the bill and a reduction of the price by the servant, the latter obtains the reduction for his master's benefit, the money in his hands always remains the master's property, and, if he appropriates it, he commits criminal breach of trust. But where the master himself has settled the account with the tradesman for a specific sum, and sends the servant with the money, and the servant, after making the payment, accepts a present from the tradesman, in that case the servant does not commit criminal breach of trust, inasmuch as the money is given to him by a person whom he believes to have a right to give it, though it may be that, according to the strict equitable doctrines of the Court of Chancery, he is bound to account to the master for the money. Hay's Case [In re Canadian Oil Works Corporation (L. R., 10 Ch. Ap. 393)] referred to Where the Court of Session had tried, convicted, and sentenced an accused person under s. 409 of the Penal Code, and the High Court was of opinion that the conviction was not sustainable under that section, the Court refused to alter the finding, under s. 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to a conviction for some other offence for which the accused had not been charged or tried. Observations on the necessity of requiring corroboration, in material particulars, of the evidence of an accomplice. Empress v. Ram Saran (Weekly Notes, 1885, p. 311) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. IMDAD KHAN, I. L. R., 8 All. 130. [Petheram, C.J. Dec. 21, 1885.]

AN accused person should not be convicted of criminal breach of trust on refusing to give to the complainant money which is claimed by another person as well as by the complainant, and which the accused denies is due to the complainant. The fact that that other person has brought a suit to recover the amount claimed by him against the accused is a complete answer to the charge of criminal breach of trust against the accused and to the findings of the Courts that the claim made by that other person was a false claim. —RAJ KISHORE PATTER v. JOY KRISHNA SEN, I. L. R., 28 Cal. 362. [Prinsep and Handley, JJ. July 16, 1900.]

407. Whoever, being entrusted with property as a carrier, wharfinger, or warehouse-keeper, commits criminal breach of trust in respect of such property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Criminal breach of trust by carrier, &c.

A IS charged under s. 407 of the Penal Code with criminal breach of trust in respect of property entrusted to him as a carrier. It appears that he did commit criminal breach of trust under s. 406 in respect of the property, but that it was not entrusted to him as a carrier. He may be convicted of criminal breach of trust under s. 406.—CRIM. PRO. CODE (Act V. of 1898), s. 238, ill. (a)

B, ENTRUSTED with rice at M (a port in British India) for conveyance to C (also a port in British India), took the rice to G, a port in foreign territory, and there sold it. He was convicted at M of criminal breach of trust as a carrier under s. 407 of the Penal Code. Held that the Sessions Court at M had no jurisdiction to try the offence under the Code of Criminal Procedure. Held also that no offence was committed on the high seas so as to give the Court jurisdiction under 12 and 13 Vict., c. 29, extended by 23 and 24 Vict. c. 88.—BAPU DALDI v. REG., I. L. R., 5 Mad. 23. [Innes and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. Feb. 26, 1882.]

THE accused were charged under s. 407 of the Penal Code with committing criminal breach of trust in respect of certain property entrusted to them as carriers. They were all native Indian subjects of Her Majesty. The offence was alleged to have been committed in Portuguese territory, and they were found in a place in British territory. Held that, under s. 188 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X. of 1882), the accused could be tried in the place where they were found.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. DAYA BHIMA, I. L. R., 13 Bom. 147. Birdwood and Parsons, JJ. July 5, 1888.]

K S, K P, and K M were tried jointly and convicted: K S under s. 407 of the Penal Code, K P and K M under s. 411 of that Code. No objection to the joint trial was taken either before the trying Magistrate or before the Appellate Court. Held, in revision upon objection being taken to the joint trial of K S with K P and K M, that a misjoinder of parties is not fatal to the proceedings, but is an irregularity which requires that the Court should consider under the terms of s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure whether it has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. In the Matter of Abdur Rahman (I. L. R., 27 Cal. 839) followed. Held further that, having regard to the explanation to s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the objection was not one which could be properly taken in revision; that the objection should have been raised at an earlier stage of the proceedings; and that, therefore, it might be taken that not having been so raised it had not in fact occasioned a failure of justice.—KALI PROSAD MAHTOAL v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R., 28 Cal. 7. [Prinsep and Handley, JJ. July 2, 1900.]

CHARGE.—That you, on or about the , at , being a servant of , and being in such capacity entrusted with dominion over property, to wit, worth Rs. , committed criminal breach of trust in respect of that property.—2 W. R. Cr. L. 15, No. 203 of 1865.

WHERE a Court Inspector improperly delegated to a constable the custody, &c., of Government money (taking from him private security to save himself from loss in case of defalcation), and the constable dishonestly converted the money to his own use, although he afterwards restored it, the case was held to fall under s. 408, and not s. 409 of the Penal Code, and the sentence reduced from 10 years' transportation and a fine of Rs. 500 to one year's rigorous imprisonment without fine.—QUEEN v. BANEE MADHUB GHOSE, 8 W. R. 1. [Seton-Karr and Glover, JJ. June 1, 1867.]

A SERVANT, who receives money for a specific purpose, and does not use it for that purpose, and, on being called on to account for the money, falsely says that he used it for that purpose, is guilty of criminal breach of trust under s. 408 of the Penal Code.—WATSON & Co. v. GOLAB KHAN, 10 W. R. 28. 1 B. L. R. S. N. 21. [Loch and Glover, JJ. Aug. 22, 1868.]

ACCUSED was employed by the Panjab Bank as its treasurer at Multan. After serving for a few days in that capacity, he, with the consent of the Bank, put in one D as his agent or gomashta, himself removing to other employment at Amritsar, but continuing to receive pay from the Bank. D misappropriated certain moneys of the Bank, and finally absconded. The Sessions Court found that accused had received some of the misappropriated money from D, and had connived at D's defalcation; and convicted him of criminal breach of trust as a servant, and of abetting the same. In appeal, it was contended for the accused, inter alia, that he was treasurer only in name, and had no dominion over the misappropriated property; consequently he was not a participator in reference to D's defalcation; and, as to the latter, he was the servant of the accused, not of the Bank, so that, whatever his offence, he had not committed breach of trust as a servant. Found by the Chief Court that both accused and D were servants of the Bank; that D had committed breach of trust as such, and that accused had received the misappropriated money from D with a guilty knowledge. On the question whether this amounted to abetment of D's offence, or to dishonest receiving under s. 411, it was held that, although no act done by accused after D's offence was committed would make the former guilty as an abettor, yet as accused, who, as the Bank's treasurer, was bound to disclose the fact that he had irregularly received the Bank's money on the first defalcation, did not do so, he was guilty of an illegal omission, by which he voluntarily caused the sole abstraction and transmission to himself of the second sum, and had, thereby, abetted the breach of trust by a servant.—KALOO RAM v. CROWN, Panj Rec., No 30 of 1868.

AN accused person who was in the service of zemindars, and whose duty it was to pay into the Collectorate Government revenue due in respect of their estates, immediately before the due date of a kist, received from them a certain sum of money with no specific instruction as to its application. On receipt of that money he paid a portion only of it into the Collectorate on account of the revenue, and having done so he then altered the challan given back to him showing the amount actually paid, and made it appear that a much larger amount had been paid in than was the fact. This challan he sent to his employer for the purpose of showing the application of the money. He was charged (1) with criminal breach of trust as a servant (s 408 of the Penal Code) in respect of the difference between the amount actually paid into the treasury and the amount shown to have been paid in by the altered challan; (2) with forgery (s. 467) in respect of the challan; and (3) with using a forged document (s. 471) in respect of the same document. The accused was convicted on all these charges. It was contended (a) that the charge under s 408 was not sustainable, inasmuch as the money was not alleged to have been sent to the accused for the specific purpose of paying the Government revenue, and that the accounts between him and his employers had not been adjusted, and that it was not shown whether at the date of the alleged breach of trust the accused was indebted to his employer or the reverse; (b) that the charges under ss. 467 and 471 were bad, as there was no evidence to support them, and even admitting the alteration of the challan, such alteration did not come within the term "forgery" as used in the Penal Code, not having been made with the intention of causing any wrongful gain or wrongful loss, but with the intention of screening the offence of criminal breach of trust which had been previously committed. Held that, as the money was sent to the accused immediately before the kist day, and the challan was sent to the employers showing in its altered state the amount really payable as revenue which nearly covered the whole amount remitted, it was reasonable to infer that the accused was aware of the implied purpose for which the money was remitted, and as he deposited a very much smaller amount than that remitted, and tried to pass off the altered challan as genuine, there was a dishonest misappropriation of the difference sufficient to constitute the offence under s 408. Held, further, that it is not necessary for the purpose of constituting the offence of forgery that the false document should be made with the intention of committing a fraud or dishonesty in the future, and that, if the intention with which a false document is made be to conceal a fraudulent act which has been previously committed, the intention cannot be other than to commit fraud, and the offence of forgery as defined in s. 463 is committed The word "fraudulently" as used in s. 464 must not be taken as being the same as "dishonestly" and implying wrongful gain or wrongful loss, but must be taken to mean as "with intent to defraud." Empress of India v Jiwanand (I. L. R., 5 All 221) and Queen-Empress v. Girdhari Lal (I L R, 8 All. 653) dissented from. Queen-Empress v. Vithal Narain Jo hi (I. L. R, 13 Bom. 515 note) and Queen-Empress v. Subapati (I L. R., 11 Mad. 411) followed. Held, therefore, that upon the facts of the case there was ample evidence to show that the accused had abetted the forgery of the challan, and had used the sum, and that he had been properly convicted of all the offences charged against him except that of the actual forgery, and that he should have been convicted of abetment of that offence.—LOLIT MOHAN SARKAR v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, I. L. R, 22 Cal. 313. [Banerjee and Sale, JJ. Nov. 2, 1894.]

WHERE the first two counts of an indictment charged the prisoner under s 408 of the Penal Code with criminal breach of trust in respect of two sums of money, viz., Rs. 23-7 and Rs. 850 respectively, and the third and last count charged him with criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of Rs. 9,168-6, which last-mentioned sum, as appeared from the depositions, represented a general deficiency in the prisoner's account, held that the third count must be struck out.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PURSOTAM DASS MORARJEE, I L. R, 24 Cal. 193. [Hill, J. Feb. 26, 1896.]

B, an employé of a Company, the office of which was at Cawnpore, was charged with the offence punishable under s. 408 of the Indian Penal Code The complainant alleged that B, being in charge on behalf of the Company at a place in Bengal, of certain goods belonging to the Company, and being ordered to return the said goods to Cawnpore, never did so, and failed to account for the goods, or their value, to the loss of the Company Held that on the statement of the case by the complainant, the Courts at Cawnpore had jurisdiction to inquire into the charge, inasmuch as the consequence of B's acts, namely, loss to the Company, occurred in Cawnpore.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. O'BRIEN, I. L. R., 19 All 111. [Edge, C.J., Aug. 21, 1896.]

Criminal breach of trust by public servant, or by banker, merchant, or agent.

THE offence of a person who makes away with property which has been placed in his charge and possession is not theft, but criminal breach of trust.—IN THE MATTER OF BHARUT CHUNDER CHRISTIAN, 1 W. R 2. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Aug. 8, 1864.]

THEFT by constables of property from the house they were employed to guard is punishable under s. 380, and not s. 409, Penal Code. —QUEEN v. BOIDNATH SINGH, 3 W. R. 29. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. June 17, 1865.]

A CONSTABLE who dishonestly misappropriates to his own use the pay of his thana-police entrusted to him is guilty of criminal breach of trust.—QUEEN v. SUBDAR MEHAN, 3 W. R. 44. [Kemp and Seton-Karr, JJ. July 11, 1865.]

THE mere fact of there being a large deficit of salt, without distinct proof of a criminal misappropriation, is not sufficient to convict the Salt Darogah in charge of the golahs of criminal breach of trust under s. 409 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN v. BRINDABUR PUTNAIK, 5 W. R. 21. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. Jan. 31, 1866.]

THE mere fact that the prosecutor gave the prisoner time to make out his account, and pay the balance due, does not vitiate a conviction for dishonest misappropriation, or show that the matter is one for the Civil Courts only.—In re SREEKANT BISWAS, 5 W. R 56. [Macpherson, J. Mar. 24, 1866.]

WHERE a Court Inspector improperly delegated to a constable the custody, &c., of Government money (taking from him private security to save himself from loss in case of defalcation), and the constable dishonestly converted the money to his own use, although he afterwards restored it, the case was held to fall under s. 408, and not s. 409, of the Penal Code, and the sentence reduced from 10 years' transportation and a fine of Rs. 500 to one year's rigorous imprisonment without fine.—QUEEN v. BANEE MADHUB GHOSE, 8 W. R. 1. [Seton-Karr and Glover, JJ. June 1, 1867.]

A VILLAGE-SHROFF, whose duty it was to assist in collecting the public revenue, received grain from ryots, and gave receipts as if for money received by virtue of a private arrangement. Held that he could not be convicted of criminal breach of trust by a public servant under s. 409 of the Penal Code, as he was not authorized to receive the public revenue in kind, and the party who delivered the grain did not thereby discharge himself from liability for the revenue.—PRO., Feb. 12, 1869. 4 Mad. H C R. Ap. 32.

S. 409 of the Penal Code does not limit the mode in which a trust arises, whether by specific order, or by reason of its being part of the proper duty of a public functionary. Where, therefore, it was proved that the head clerk of an office entrusted the management of stamps, with the knowledge and sanction of his superiors, to one of his assistants, the latter was held to be guilty of criminal misappropriation by a public servant within the meaning of s. 409 when he made away with the stamps.—QUEEN v. RAM DHUN DEY, 13 W. R 77. [Jackson and Glover, JJ. May 28, 1870.]

THE naib-nazir is a public servant within the meaning of s. 409 of the Penal Code and not the mere private servant of the nazir.—QUEEN v. MAHMOOD HOSSEIN, 2 N.-W. P. 298. [Spankie, J. July 18, 1870.]

A TRAVELLER, with considerable property, partly cash and gold coins, put up at a sarai, and, believing himself to be dying, sent to the police-station for protection of his property. The accused, the thana-mohurir, went to the sarai, and received charge of the property. Held by Lindsay and Fitzpatrick, JJ. (Plowden, J., dissenting), that the accused was entrusted with the property in his capacity of a public servant within s 409, as the accused was empowered by s. 95, Criminal Procedure Code, to receive the property to prevent the commission of an offence, i.e., theft by other persons taking advantage of the illness or death of the traveller.—BHAG SING v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 24 of 1876.

THE prisoners were charged with having stolen a sum of money shut up in a box, and placed in the Police Treasury buildings, over which they, as barkandazes, were placed in guard. Held that the charge should have been made under s 381 of the Penal Code (theft by a servant in possession of property), and not under s. 409 (criminal breach of trust by a public servant).—QUEEN v JUGGURNATH SINGH, 2 W. R. 55. [Seton-Karr, Jackson, and Glover, JJ. April 3, 1877.]

WHERE a Magistrate, erroneously holding that the offence committed was one under s. 406, Penal Code, over which he had jurisdiction, instead of under s. 409, which was cognizable only by the Court of Session, tried and sentenced the accused, it was held by the High Court as a Court of Revision that his proceedings were contrary to law, and he was directed to commit the case for trial by the Court of Session. To constitute an offence under s 409 it is not necessary that the property should be that of Government, but that it should have been entrusted to a public servant in that capacity.—IN THE MATTER OF RAM SOONDER PODDER, 2 C. L. R 515. [Ainslie and Broughton, JJ. June 13, 1878.]

WHERE the accused, in his capacity of revenue-patel, received from the Government treasury small sums of money on account of certain temple allowances, and did not at once pay over the same to the persons entitled to receive them, as he was bound to do, but it appeared that such persons were willing to trust him, and had actually passed receipts which the accused forwarded to the Revenue-authorities, held that the accused fulfilled the trust reposed in him by Government, and that his mere retention of the money for a time, in the absence of any evidence of dishonesty, did not amount to criminal breach of trust within the meaning of s. 409 of the Penal Code.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GANPAT TAPIDAS, I. L. R., 10 Bom. 256. [Birdwood and Jardine, JJ. Dec. 17, 1885.]

WHEN a master entrusts his servant with money for the payment of an open account, i.e., an account of which the items have never been checked or settled, and the tradesman makes the servant a present, and the transaction amounts to a taxation of the bill and a reduction of the price by the servant, the latter obtains the reduction for his master's benefit, the money in his hands always remains the master's property, and, if he appropriates it, he commits criminal breach of trust. But where the master himself has settled the amount with the tradesman for a specific sum, and sends the servant with the money, and the servant, after making the payment, accepts a present from the tradesman, in that case the servant does not commit criminal breach of trust, inasmuch as the money is given to him by a person whom he believes to have a right to give it, though it may be that, according to the strict equitable doctrines of the Court of Chancery, he is bound to account to the master for the money. Hay's Case [In re Canadian Oil Works Corporation (L. Where the Court of Session had tried, convicted, and sentenced an accused person under s. 409 of the Penal Code, and the High Court was of opinion that the conviction was not sustainable under that section, the Court refused to alter the finding, under s 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to a conviction for some other offence for which the accused had not been charged or tried. Observations on the necessity of requiring corroboration, in material particulars, of the evidence of an accomplice. Empress v. Ram Saran (Weekly Notes, 1885, p. 311) referred to.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. AN accused person may be charged with criminal breach of trust in respect of a general deficiency, and it is not necessary in all cases to charge the accused with the embezzlement of a particular sum received on a certain date from some particular person. Reg. v. Lloyd Jones (8 C. and P. 288), Reg. v. Chapman (1 C. and K. 119), Reg. v. Wolstenholme (11 Cox. R., 18 All. 116, infra.

HELD that a person accused under s. 409 of the Penal Code might be legally convicted of the offence defined in that section on proof of a general deficiency in his accounts, and that it was not necessary that the receipt of, and non-accounting for, specific items should be charged and proved against him.—Queen-Empress v. Kellie (I. L. R., 17 All. 153) approved.—BUDDHU v. BABU LAL, I. L. R., 18 All 116. [Edge, C.J., and Burkitt, J. Dec 9, 1895.]

MONEY obtained upon forged money-orders is not "stolen property" within definition thereof given in the Penal Code in s. 410. —QUEEN v. MONMOHUN ROY, 24 W. R. 33. [Birch and Lawford, JJ. July 26, 1875.]

A PERSON was convicted and sentenced under s. 411 of the Penal Code for dishonestly receiving a bull, knowing the same to have been criminally misappropriated. It was found that, at the time of the alleged misappropriation, the bull had been set at large by some Hindus, in accordance with Hindu religious usage, at the time of performing funeral ceremonies. Held that the bull was not, at the time of the alleged misappropriation, "property" within the meaning of the Penal Code, inasmuch as, not only was it not the subject of ownership by any person, but the original owner had surrendered all his rights as its proprietor, that it was therefore nullius proprietas, and incapable of larceny being committed in respect of it; and that the conviction must be set aside.—QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BANDHU, I. L. R. 8 All. 51. [Straight, J. Dec. 7, 1885.]

411. Whoever dishonestly receives or retains any stolen property, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen property, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine, or with both.

A CHARGE of receiving or retaining stolen goods may be inquired into or tried either by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the goods were stolen, or by any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any of them were at any time dishonestly received or retained.—CRIM. PRO. CODE (Act V of 1898), s. 180, ill. (b).

SEVERAL stolen sacks of corn are made over to A and B, who know they are stolen property, for the purpose of concealing them. A and B, therefore, voluntarily assist each other to conceal the sacks at the bottom of a grain-pit. A and B may be separately charged with, and convicted of, offences under ss. 411 and 414 of the Penal Code.—CRIM. PRO. CODE (Act V of 1898), s. 235, ill. (f).

THE offence of receiving or retaining stolen property under s. 411 of the Penal Code may be tried summarily by (1) the District Magistrate; (2) any Magistrate of the first class specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government, and (3) any Bench of Magistrates invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the first class, and specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government.—CRIM. PRO CODE (Act V of 1898), s. 260.

A is accused of receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen. It is proved that he was in possession of a particular stolen article. The fact that at the same time he was in possession of many other particular stolen articles, is relevant, as tending to show that he knew each and all of the articles of which he was in possession to be stolen.—Evidence Act (I. of 1872), s. 14, ill. (a).

A is accused of receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen. He offers to prove that he refused to sell them below their value. A may prove these statements, though they are admissions, because they are explanatory of conduct influenced by facts in issue.—Evidence Act (I. of 1872), s. 21, ill. (d).

A is accused of receiving stolen property knowing it to have been stolen. It is proposed to prove that he denied the possession of the property. The relevancy of the denial depends on the identity of the property. The Court may, in its discretion, either require the property to be identified before the denial of the possession is proved, or permit the denial of the possession to be proved before the property is identified.—Evidence Act (I. of 1872), s. 130, ill. (c).

WHEN an inquiry or a trial in any Criminal Court is concluded, the Court may make such order as it thinks fit for the disposal of any property or document produced before it, or in its custody, or regarding which any offence appears to have been committed, or which has been used for the commission of any offence. When a High Court or a Court of Session makes such order, and cannot, through its own officers, conveniently deliver the property to the person entitled thereto, such Court may direct that the order be carried into effect by the District Magistrate. When an order is made under this section in a case in which an appeal lies, such order shall not (except when the property is livestock, or is subject to speedy and natural decay) be carried out until the period allowed for presenting such appeal has passed, or, when such appeal is presented within such period, until such appeal has been disposed of. Explanation.—In this section the term "property" includes, in the case of property regarding which an offence appears to have been committed not only such property as has been originally in the possession or under the control of any party, but also any property into or for which the same may have been converted or exchanged, and anything acquired by such conversion or exchange, whether immediately or otherwise.—CRIM. PRO. CODE (Act V. of 1898), s 517.

To assist a Court in making a proper order for the disposal of property under s. 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V. of 1898), it has been thought necessary to reproduce s. 108 of the Contract Act (IX. of 1872), which runs as follows :—

Title conveyed by seller of goods to buyer.

108. No seller can give to the buyer of goods a better title to those goods than he has himself, except in the following cases:—

Exception 1.—When any person is, by the consent of the owner, in possession of any goods or of any bill of lading, dock-warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, wharfinger's certificate, or warrant or order for delivery or other document showing title to goods, he may transfer the ownership of the goods of which he is so in possession, or to which such documents relate, to any other person, and give such person a good title thereto notwithstanding any instructions of the owner to the contrary: Provided that the buyer acts in good faith, and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption that the person in possession of the goods or documents has no right to sell the goods.

Exception 2.—If one of several joint-owners of goods has the sole possession of them by the permission of the co-owners, the ownership of the goods is transferred to any person who buys them of such joint-owner in good faith, and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption that the person in possession of the goods has no right to sell them

Exception 3.—When a person has obtained possession of goods under a contract voidable at the option of the other party thereto the ownership of the goods is transferred to a third person who, before the contract is rescinded, buys them in good faith of the person in possession; unless the circumstances which rendered the contract voidable amounted to an offence committed by the person in possession or those whom he represents.

In this case the original seller is entitled to compensation from the original purchaser for any loss which the seller may have sustained by being prevented from rescinding the contract

Illustrations.

(a.) A buys from B, in good faith, a cow which B had stolen from C. The property in the cow is not transferred to A.

(b.) A, a merchant, entrusts B, his agent, with a bill of lading relating to certain goods, and instructs B not to sell the goods for less than a certain price, and not to give credit to D. B sells the goods to D for less than that price, and gives D three months' credit. The property in the goods passes to D.

(c.) A sells to B goods of which he has the bill of lading but the bill of lading is made out for delivery of the goods to C, and it has not been endorsed by C. The property is not transferred to B.

(d.) A, B, and C, are joint Hindu brothers, who own certain cattle in common. A is left by B and C in possession of a cow, which he sells to D. D purchases bonâ fide. The property in the cow is transferred to D.

(e.) A, by a misrepresentation not amounting to cheating, induces B to sell and deliver to him a horse. A sells the horse to C before B has rescinded the contract. The property in the horse is transferred to C; and B is entitled to compensation from A for any loss which B has sustained by being prevented from rescinding the contract

(f) A compels B by wrongful intimidation or induces him by cheating or forgery, to sell him a horse, and, before B rescinds the contract sells the horse to C. The property is not transferred to C.

ANNOTATIONS ON S. 108 OF THE CONTRACT ACT WITH REFERENCE TO STOLEN PROPERTY.

S. 108 was proposed by the Select Committee of the Legislative Council, and adopted by the Council in lieu of one prepared by the Indian Law Commissioners by which it was proposed to confer upon every possessor of moveable property the power of making a good title to a bonâ-fide purchaser. The following passage from the report of the Law Commissioners gives their reasons for this proposal :—

"With regards to goods sold by a person who has no right to sell them, the general rule of English law is that the owner of the goods retains the ownership notwithstanding his having lost the possession of them, and their having been sold to a third person. But from this rule there is an exception in the case of goods sold in open market, an expression which, by the custom of London, applies to every shop within the city.

"It cannot be denied that the subject is difficult. We have to consider, on the one hand, the hardship suffered by an innocent person who loses in this way his right to recover what was his undoubted property. But, on the other hand, still greater weight appears to us to be due to the hardship which a bond-fide purchaser would suffer were he to be deprived of what he bought. The former is very often justly chargeable with remissness or negligence in the custody of the property. The conduct of the latter has been blameless. The balance of equitable consideration is, therefore, on the side of a rule favourable to the purchaser, and we think that sound policy with respect to the interests of commerce points to the same conclusion.

"We have, therefore, provided that the ownership of goods may be acquired by buying them from any person who is in possession of them, if the buyer acts in good faith, and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption that the person in possession has no right to sell them."

The reasons of the Select Committee of the Legislative Council for the opposite view were as follow:—

"The first question is whether the law ought to proceed upon the assumption that a person whose property had been stolen is negligent

"Thefts are commonly effected in one of three ways, by force, by fraud, or by a breach of confidence. It appears to us that, in each of these cases, it would be improper to speak of the person who lost the property as negligent.

"A man is stripped of all his property by robbers, and nearly murdered for defending himself. Is he negligent? A gang of thieves enter a house unperceived, by digging through the wall at night, and carry off the property contained in it. Are the owners of the house negligent? A servant steals plate under his charge. Cattle left by night on an open pasture, or crops not specially watched by night, are stolen. Are the owners in these cases negligent? These are typical instances of the commonest forms of theft; and it appeared to us that, in comparison with them, the cases in which an owner is really negligent—as, for instance, where a man leaves valuable property unwatched in a public place—are of very rare occurrence. We therefore regarded innocence on the part of the owner as the rule, and negligence as the exception.

"Assuming, then, that the common case is that in which both the owner and the purchaser of the stolen goods are innocent upon whom ought the loss to fall? We thought it ought to fall upon the purchaser for the following reasons:—

"1st. The only argument offered in support of the suggestion that it should fall upon the original owner, assumes that every man is negligent who depends upon the protection afforded by law to his property, even when it is in his personal custody, and can be taken from him only by personal violence. We thought, on the contrary, that people have a right to expect the law to protect them against superior force, and also against fraud so gross as to amount to crime. Against fraud which amounts only to a civil injury—as in the case of selling an article to which the vendor has no title—prudent men may be expected to protect themselves. The proposed section reverses this. It would protect a man who has been over-reached in a bargain, at the expense of another whom it regards as negligent, because he has been robbed on the highway.

"2nd. A person who has been robbed by force, or fraud, suffers a greater injury than a person who has been over-reached in a bargain. It follows that, if an innocent purchaser is obliged to return stolen goods, he will in most cases suffer less than the innocent owner would suffer if the purchaser were allowed to retain them.

"3rd. To give thieves the legal power of effecting a change in property against the will of the true owner recognizes and favours crime. We thought that no one should be permitted to derive any benefit from a crime even if he was mixed up with it innocently and accidentally, and that, when such a transaction was brought in any form under the notice of the law, things should be restored, as far as possible, to the condition in which they would have been, if the crime had not been committed. The bond-fide purchaser of stolen goods would derive an advantage from theft, if the suggestion of the Commissioners were adopted. Their proposal would enable a thief, whose object was revenge, to carry out his purpose by the express warrant of law.

"4th. The proposed change would favour receivers of stolen goods. Such persons are often in outward appearance respectable. Under the proposed section, the thief would not, indeed, be able to confer a good title upon the receiver, but the receiver would be able to confer a good title upon his customers.

"5th. If the bona fides of the purchaser is to be the test of the validity of the transfer, it will become necessary to decide, as a fact, in each particular case, whether the purchaser acted in good faith or not. We considered it undesirable to enter upon this inquiry.

"The Commissioners' draft left open the question whether, upon the principle that the law presumes innocence, the owner is to prove the purchaser's bad faith, or whether, upon the principle that a man is bound to prove facts within his knowledge, the purchaser is to prove his own good faith. The adoption of either branch of the alternative would, we thought, be mischievous.

"If the original owner was to prove the purchaser's bad faith, receivers of stolen goods would be practically secure. How could a man, whose goods had been stolen, prove the circumstances under which the thief sold them? How, except by accident, could he ever be able to prove matters connected with the sale which ought to have roused the buyer's suspicions? How, in short, could he give proof of what did actually pass, or even of what ought to have passed, in another man's mind upon an occasion as to which his information must be incomplete?

"If, on the other hand, the purchaser was put to prove his good faith, how was he to do so? The common case would be, that he knew nothing of the seller except that he offered the goods for sale at a moderate price. If this was enough every receiver of stolen goods would escape. If it was not enough honest purchasers would, in most cases, be regarded as receivers of stolen goods. They would have to return the property which it was the object of this section to secure to them, and, in doing so, they would lose their characters as well as their money.

"In short, it was essential to the proposed section that, for the purpose of proving a doubtful matter of fact, we should choose between two rules of evidence, of which one would discourage honesty, and the other favour crime. This difficulty might be altogether avoided by preferring the true owner, who must have a good title, to the purchaser, who might be an undetected receiver of stolen goods.

"6th. The proposed enactment would remove one of the greatest of the existing motives for the detection of crime. If a man, who had lost his property by theft, was not to recover it, unless he could prove bad faith on the part of the purchaser, he would not care to prosecute the thief. In many parts of India, cattle are the most important kind of property, and cattle-stealing is the commonest of offences. As matters now stand, stolen cattle are systematically tracked sometimes for hundreds of miles, and for weeks or months together. When discovered, the owner re-takes them. So well is this system established that there are persons who make it their profession to track stolen cattle, and that buyers take security from sellers to indemnify them if the cattle should have to be given up to their true owners. This constitutes a considerable security against cattle-thefts, but the whole system would come to an end if the owner could not recover his cattle without proving bad faith in the purchaser.

"7th. The universal practice of India is that the loss in case of theft should fall on the purchaser. This, the committee were informed, is the law of all the independent Native States, both within and on the border of our territories. If our law were different, British territory would become an asylum for cattle-stealers, and all the Native States would feel themselves deeply injured.

"8th. The effect of the section upon the position of bailees would be very singular, and we thought undesirable. It would invest every bailee, for whatever purpose, with the power of selling the goods bailed as he would be able to make a good title to them, and, if he offered to account for the price to the true owner it seemed to us very doubtful whether he would be punishable for criminal breach of trust. A lodger sells the furniture of his lodgings for an inadequate sum, and pays the money to the landlord. The landlord under the proposed section would lose his property absolutely, and have no remedy at all, unless the transaction were regarded as a 'dishonest misappropriation,' which seems rather an abuse of terms. The case was not perhaps likely to happen, but, if dishonest persons were once made aware of the existence of such a law, we feared that it would be extensively used for the perpetration of frauds, which it would be very difficult to detect."

Illustration (a) was held not similar to a case in which a Government currency-note was stolen from A, and cashed by B in good faith for C, and, on the conviction of C for theft, the Magistrate ordered the note to be returned to B.*

The law as enacted in this section has virtually been adopted in the new Factors Act, 40 and 41 Vict., c. 39. The preamble recites: "Whereas doubts have arisen with respect to the true meaning of certain provisions of the Factors Act, and it is expedient to remove such doubts and otherwise to amend the said Acts for the better security of persons buying, or making advances on goods, or documents of title to goods, in the usual and ordinary course of mercantile business: be it enacted," &c.

S. 2 provides as follows with respect to secret revocation of entrustment or agency:—

"Where any agent or person has been entrusted with, and continues in the possession of, any goods, or documents of title to goods, within the meaning of the principal Acts as amended by this Act any revocation of his entrustment or agency shall not prejudice or affect the title or rights of any other person who, without notice of such revocation, purchases such goods, or makes advances upon the faith or security of such goods or documents."

S. 3 enacts as follows with respect to vendors permitted to retain documents of title to goods:—

"Where any goods have been sold, and the vendor or any person on his behalf continues or is in possession of the documents of title thereto, any sale, pledge, or other disposition of the goods or documents made by such vendor, or any person or agent entrusted by the vendor with the goods or documents within the meaning of the principal Acts as amended by this Act so continuing or being in possession, shall be as valid and effectual as if such vendor or person were an agent or person entrusted by the vendee with the goods or documents within the meaning of the principal Acts as amended by this Act, provided the person to whom the sale, pledge, or other disposition is made, has not notice that the goods have been previously sold."

S. 4 enacts as follows with respect to vendees permitted to have possession of documents of title to goods:—

"Where any goods have been sold or contracted to be sold, and the vendee, or any person on his behalf, obtains the possession of the documents of title thereto from the vendor or his agents, any sale pledge, or disposition of such goods or documents by such vendee so in possession, or by any other person or agent entrusted by the vendee with the documents within the meaning of the principal Acts as amended by this Act, shall be as valid and effectual as if such vendee or other person were an agent or person entrusted by the vendor with the documents within the meaning of the principal Acts as amended by this Act, provided the person to whom the sale, pledge, or other disposition is made has not notice of any lien or other right of the vendor in respect of the goods."

And s. 5 thus provides with respect to transfers of documents of title:—

"Where any document of title to goods has been lawfully endorsed or otherwise transferred to any person as a vendee or owner of the goods and such person transfers such document by indorsement (or by delivery where the document is by custom, or by its express terms, transferable by delivery), or makes the goods deliverable to the bearer, to a person who takes the same bonâ fide and for valuable consideration, the last-mentioned transfer shall have the same effect for defeating any vendor's lien or right of stoppage in transitu as the transfer of a bill of lading has for defeating the right of stoppage in transitu.

The possession which is meant by the first part of exep 1 of this section (108) is a possession which is unqualified, and not to be restricted otherwise than by the owner giving instructions to the person who has it. It is the kind of possession which a factor or agent has, where the owner of the goods, although he has parted with the possession, may give instructions to the person in possession what to do with the goods. It is such possession as an owner has, and in such a case the person selling contrary to his instructions gives a title to a buyer acting in good faith. The exception does not apply where there is only a qualified possession, such as a hirer of goods has, or where the possession is for a specific purpose. In such a case the owner has no right to give instructions. The nature of the possession and the power of the person having it are determined by the contract of hiring or the contract under which possession was taken; and is of a different nature from the unqualified possession above mentioned, where the owner has power to give instructions. The hirer has only a qualified possession. He acquires a right of possession only for the particular period or purpose stipulated. By the Roman law, the hirer acquired no property in the thing hired. By the English law, he has only a special property during the continuance of the contract, or for the purposes expressed or implied by it. By the sale of the thing, his right of possession and his special property are both determined, and thus his possession is of quite a different character from the possession which was intended by this section, taking it as a whole.* Accordingly, where a piano had been hired from the plaintiff with an option of purchase, and the hirer sold the piano to the defendant before he had exercised that option, it was held that the defendant was liable in trover to the plaintiff, although it was found that he acted in perfect good faith, the possession which was acquired by the hirer of the piano not being such a possession as was contemplated by this section.†

In England, the purchaser of a chattel takes it, as a general rule, subject to what may turn out to be informalities in the title. By a purchase in market overt the title obtained is good against all the world. If not so purchased, though purchased bonâ fide, the title obtained may not be good against the real owner. Where the original owner has parted with the chattel to A upon a de-facto contract, though there may be circumstances which enable that owner to set aside that contract, the bonâ-fide purchaser from A will obtain an indefeasible title. The question, therefore, in many such cases will be, was there a contract between the original owner and the intermediate purchaser ?‡

Where goods are shipped under a bill of lading drawn in parts, to be delivered to the consignee "or his assigns, the one of which bills being accomplished, the others to stand void," the master or the ware-houseman, who has the custody of the goods, is justified in delivering to the consignee on production of one part, although there has been a prior indorsement for value to the holder of another part, provided the delivery be bonâ-fide and without notice or knowledge of such prior indorsement.§

ACCUSED was employed by the Panjab Bank as its treasurer at Multan. After serving for a few days in that capacity, he, with the consent of the Bank, put in one D as his agent or gomashta, himself removing to other employments at Amritsar, but continuing to receive pay from the Bank. D misappropriated certain moneys of the Bank, and finally absconded. The Sessions Court found that accused had received some of the misappropriated money from D, and had connived at D's defalcation; and convicted him of criminal breach of trust as a servant, and of abetting the same. In appeal it was contended for the accused, inter alia, that he was treasurer only in name, and had no dominion over the misappropriated property; consequently he was not a participator in reference to D's defalcation; and, as to the latter, he was the servant of the accused, not of the Bank, so that, whatever his offence, he had not committed breach of trust as a servant. Found by the Chief Court that both accused and D were servants of the Bank, that D had committed breach of trust as such, and that accused had received the misappropriated money from D with a guilty knowledge. On the question whether this amounted to abetment of D's offence, or to dishonest receiving under s. 411, it was held that although no act done by accused after D's offence was committed would make the former guilty as an abettor, yet as accused, who, as the Bank's treasurer, was bound to disclose the fact that he had irregularly received the Bank's money on the first defalcation, did not do so, he was guilty of an illegal omission, by which he voluntarily caused the safe abstraction and transmission to himself of the second sum, and had thereby abetted the breach of trust by a servant.—KALOO RAM v. CROWN, Panj. P. 120. [Jardine, J. April 19, 1873.]

IN a case in which the accused was charged with having stolen a pony, the Magistrate sentenced the accused to imprisonment, and awarded a fine of Rs. 25, which he ordered should, if realized, be paid over to the complainant, directing at the same time that the pony should be restored to a third party, by whom it had been purchased bonâ fide at a public sale, the Magistrate relying on s. 418, Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X. of 1872), and on the rule of English law protecting a bonâ-fide purchaser in market overt. The Sessions Judge considered that s. 418 of the Code of 1872 (or s. 517 of the Code of 1882) was not intended to supersede s. 108,* Act IX. of 1872, and that, as under the latter law the property in the pony did not pass to the third party (purchaser), the pony should have been restored to the prosecutor. Held that the fine of Rs 25 imposed upon the prisoner could not be paid over to the complainant, either under s. 418 of the Code of 1872 (i. e., s 517 of the Code of 1882), or under any supposed rule of law relating to sales in market overt, and that, if any such order could be made, it would be under s. 308 of the Code of 1872 (or s. 545 of the Code of 1882). The order, so far as it directed that the fine be paid to the complainant, was accordingly set aside.—NOBOKRISTO ACHARJEE v. LALL CHAND SHEIKH, 20 W. R. 38. [Markby and Birch, JJ. June 19, 1873.]

PROPERTY suspected of being stolen may be confiscated under s 418 of Act X. of 1872, although the person charged with stealing it is discharged.—PHULLA SINGH v RAM SINGH, Panj. Rec, No. 20 of 1873.

THE accused were found in possession of stolen property, the produce of several separate thefts Held that they could not be convicted of several separate acts of receiving unless there was evidence that they did not receive all the property at one and the same time.—CROWN v RAMPERSHAD, Panj. Rec., No. 5 of 1874

* For s. 108, Act IX. of 1872 (Contract Act), and annotations thereon, see supra, p. 498.

POSSESSION of property which has been stolen from the owner is generally at best only evidence of theft when the date of the theft is so recent as to make it reasonable to presume in the absence of explanation that the person in whose possession the property is found must have obtained the possession by stealing.—QUEEN v. POROMESHUR AHEER, 23 W. R. 16. [Phear and Morris, JJ. Jan. 8, 1875.]

MONEY obtained upon forged money-orders is not "stolen property" within the definition thereof given in the Penal Code, s. 410.—QUEEN v. MON MOHUN ROY, 24 W. R. 33. [Birch and Lawford, JJ. July 26, 1875.]

THE goods received must be the identical goods which were stolen, and not something for which they had been sold or exchanged. Where A stole six notes for £100 and changed them into notes for £20, some of which he gave to B, it was ruled that B could not be convicted of receiving, as he had not received the notes which were stolen.—R. v. WALKLEY, 4 C. & P. 132. Arch., 20th ed., p. 496.

NOT only must it be shown that the property was originally stolen property, but also that it continued in that state at the time of the receipt. In one case goods had been stolen, and, when the thief was detected, they were taken from him, and then restored by the owner's consent that he might sell them to a person who had been in the habit of buying his booty. When the latter was indicted as a receiver, it was held that he could not be convicted, inasmuch as at the time of the receipt the goods were not stolen goods.—REG. v. DOLAN, 24 L. J. M. C. 50; Dears. 436; See Reg. v. Schmidt, 1 L. R. C. C. 15.

WHERE stolen property is found with a person who admits having received it, it may be fairly presumed that the receipt was a dishonest one, unless the receiver's conduct is satisfactorily explained.—IN THE MATTER OF RAMJOY KURMOKAR, 25 W. R. 10. [Macpherson, Glover, and Mitter, JJ. Jan. 6, 1870.]

ALTHOUGH a person who is convicted of theft cannot, in respect of the same property, be convicted at the same time of receiving stolen property, yet a person who is acquitted of the theft of any property, or who is not charged with stealing it, may, in respect of the identical property, be charged with, and convicted of, receiving it, knowing it to stolen; so that the mere fact of a person's having once been acquitted of the charge of stealing any property does not of itself prevent his trial at any future time on the charge of receiving the same property knowing it to be stolen.—QUEEN v. NYAZ ALI, 25 W. R. 47. [Kemp and Glover, JJ. May 25, 1876.]

A MAGISTRATE has jurisdiction under s. 418, Act X. of 1872 to deal with property stolen in British territory, notwithstanding that it may be seized in foreign territory, and brought into British territory by the police.—MUSSAMMAT KISHEN KOUR v. CROWN, Panj. Rec., No. 20 of 1878.

IN a summary proceeding under s. 418 of the Criminal Procedure Code, where stolen property is in the possession of a bond-fide purchaser, the proper order for a Magistrate to pass is to leave the property in the purchaser's possession, leaving the complainant to take such steps as he may think proper to establish his title as owner, and recover possession from the purchaser.—CROWN v. SAWAN, Panj. Rec., No. 21 of 1878.

THE mere being in possession of stolen property dishonestly without a guilty knowledge is not a substantive offence. It is an offence under s. 411 to dishonestly receive stolen property knowing or having reason to know the same to be stolen property, or to dishonestly retain it with the like knowledge. To support a conviction of dishonestly retaining stolen property, it ought to be shown that the accused, being in innocent possession of the property, acquired the knowledge that it was stolen, and thereafter retained it dishonestly. When a person is shown to stand in such a relation to stolen property as falls short of possession by him of such property, his manner of dealing with the property may warrant a charge of assisting in concealing or disposing of or making away with the property with a guilty knowledge, that is, a charge of an offence under s. 414.—KHONA v. EMPRESS, Panj. Rec., No. 31 of 1879.

A HINDU, intending to separate himself from his family, emigrated to Demerara as a coolie. After an absence of thirty years he returned to his family, bringing with him money and other moveable property which he had acquired in Demerara by manual labour as a coolie. On his return to his family, he lived in commensality with it, but he did not treat such property as joint family-property, but as his own property. Held that such property was his sole property, and his brother was not a joint-owner of it, and could properly be convicted of theft in respect of it. It is irregular to convict and punish a person for abetment of theft, and at the same time to convict and punish him for receiving the stolen property.—EMPRESS v. SITA RAM RAI, I. L. R., 3 All. 181. [Straight, J. Aug. 16, 1880.]

THE word "believe" in s. 414 of the Penal Code is much stronger than the word "suspect," and involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind that the property with which he was dealing was stolen property. It is not sufficient in such a case to show that the accused person was careless, or that he had reason to suspect that the property was stolen, or that he did not make sufficient inquiry to ascertain whether it had been honestly acquired—EMPRESS v. RANGO TIMAJI, I. L. R., 6 Bom 402. [Melvill and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ Dec. 21, 1880.] A full report of this case is reproduced under s. 414, infra.

WHERE the accused, a foreigner, was found in foreign territory in possession of stolen property, but it is not shown that he was one of those who had committed the theft, or that he had possession of the property in British territory, held that a conviction under s. 411 was not sustainable. Mussammat Kishen Kour v. Crown (Panj. Rec., No 20 of 1870) cited and followed—HAZAR MIR v. EMPRESS, Panj. Rec., No 16 of 1880.

THE prisoner was tried at Bombay under s. 411 of the Penal Code, on a charge of having dishonestly received and retained stolen property, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen property. He was also charged under ss 108 (expl 3) and 109, with having abetted that offence. It appeared at the trial that the prisoner was a clerk in the employment of a mercantile firm at Port Louis, in the island of Mauritius. On the 29th October and the 1st November 1879, certain letters addressed by the firm to their commission-agent at Bombay were abstracted from the post-office at Port Louis. The letters contained six bills of exchange belonging to the firm for an aggregate amount of Rs 26,550. On the 1st November 1879, the prisoner sent all six bills of exchange in a letter to the manager of a bank at Bombay, requesting that the several amounts might be collected on the prisoner's own account and remitted to him by bills on Mauritius. The sums were accordingly realized by the bank and duly remitted to the prisoner. It was not denied that the prisoner obtained possession of the money, and used it as his own. His defence was that the bills had been given to him in payment of a debt. The prisoner was convicted on all the charges, but the jurisdiction of the Court having been challenged on his behalf, the question was reserved. Held per Sargent and Melvill JJ. (West, J., dissentiente), "that the bills of exchange, having been stolen at Mauritius, in which island the Penal Code is not in force, could not be regarded as 'stolen property' within the provisions of s. 410, so as to render the person receiving them at Bombay liable under s. 411; that the High Court of Bombay had, therefore, no jurisdiction, and that the conviction must be quashed." Previously to the trial at the Sessions the prisoner had applied to the Court for commissions to Pondicherry and Mauritius to take evidence on his behalf. The application was refused, on the ground that the High Court had no authority to issue a commission in such a case but the learned Judge (West, J.) reserved the question for the Full Court. Held that the High Court had no power to issue a commission out of the jurisdiction in a criminal case on an application by the accused.—EMPRESS v. S. MOORGA CHETTY, I. L. R., 5 Bom. 338. (Sargent, Melvill, and West, JJ. April 28 & May 3, 1881.)

A PRISONER cannot be tried at the same trial for receiving or retaining (s. 411, Penal Code), and habitually receiving or dealing in (s. 413) stolen property. The proper course is to try the accused first for the offences under s. 411, and, if he is convicted, to try him under s. 413, putting in evidence the previous convictions under s. 411, and proving the finding of the rest of the property in respect of which no separate charge under s. 411 could be made or tried by reason of the provisions of s. 453 of the Criminal Procedure Code Act X of 1872.—IN THE MATTER OF UTTOM KOONDOO. EMPRESS v. UTTOM KOONDOO, I. L. R. 8 Cal 634, 10 C. L. R. 466. (McDonell and Field, JJ. Mar. 31 1882.)

IN considering whether the possession of stolen goods raises a presumption of dishonest receipt of stolen property, the attention of the jury should be drawn to the necessity of satisfying themselves that the possession is clearly traced to the accused. The fact of stolen property being found concealed in a man's house would be sufficient to raise a presumption that he knew the property to be stolen property, but it would not be sufficient to show that it had been acquired by dacoity.—EMPRESS v. MATHARI, I. L. R., 7 Bom 731. (Melvill and Parsey, JJ. Oct. 11, 1882.)

THE fact that a child has been tried for theft and discharged under s. 215 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1872, on the ground of want of understanding within the meaning of s. 82 of the Penal Code, is no bar to the conviction of a person charged under s. 411 of the Penal Code with receiving the property alleged to have been stolen.—QUEEN v. KRISHNA, I. L. R., 6 Mad. 373. (Kernan and Muttusami Ayyar, JJ. April 24 1883.)

WHERE a person is accused of an offence under s. 411 of the Penal Code, he cannot, where the circumstances do not raise the presumption that he received the property knowing it to be stolen, be convicted of that offence merely because he is in possession of the property, and does not account for his possession. The prosecution must prove both that the property was stolen, and that the accused received it dishonestly. At the trial of a person for an offence under s. 411 of the Penal Code, the Court of Session, under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, 1872, used against the accused the evidence of the owner of the property in respect of which the accused was charged and of his wife taken by commission during the inquiry, and the evidence of the servant of those persons taken at the inquiry and also the evidence of the owner of the property taken during the trial under a commission issued by the Sessions Judge under s. 503 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The grounds upon which the Sessions Judge admitted the evidence taken during the inquiry were, that the attendance of the witnesses could not be procured without an expense of Rs. 500, an amount which he considered unreasonable, that the witnesses would be inconvenienced, and that their evidence did not concern the accused personally, having reference only to the identification of the property in respect of which the accused was charged. Held that the Sessions Judge had improperly admitted such evidence. Inconvenience to witnesses is no ground allowed under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, and the question of identification was a most material one and the evidence of the witnesses in question was of the utmost moment, the whole case resting on it, and, as regards the ground of expense, it was impossible to consider the amount unreasonable, considering that the entire case rested on the evidence of those witnesses, and that the accused had not cross-examined those whose evidence had been taken by commission, nor, looking at his position, could be arrange for their cross-examination. Held also that on similar grounds the Sessions Judge was not justified in issuing a commission under s. 503 of the Criminal Procedure Code.—EMPRESS v. BURKE (T), I. L. R., 6 All. 224. Oldfield J. Feb. 16, 1884.
